I'm sitting in my bedroom, I have just returned from Add/Drop and the class is mine! The spoils of war! Because that's what the collegiate life is. A war. You battle yourself, competition, rising tuition costs and long lines. You test your discipline, stamina and push your health to the brink on those coffee stuffed all-nighters. Sometimes you wonder if it's worth it. I think of my intersession and decide it is.

New Four Horsemen breaks no new ground

By A.C. FOSTER
Collegian Staff

What do you get when you mix one part Dangerous Jays with some Black Crowes and a dash of AC/DC? In case you were wondering, you get Four Horsemen.

A mix of these three (groups, that is), is exactly the kind of music that can be found on the Four Horseman's debut album entitled Nobody Said It Was Easy. Vocalist Frank C. Starr, drummer/vocalist Ken "Dimwit" Montgomery, guitarist/vocalist Dave Lizmi, bassist/vocalist Ben Pape, and guitarist/vocalist Haggis are one of the latest additions to the music scene and have produced a raw and savage traditional rock and roll style album.

The album's cover puts what the group is all about in a nut shell. It consists of the words "Heavy Gauge Guitar, 100 Proof, Made in the U.S.A." printed across it, and it has a striking resemblance to the kind of design that could be found on a liquor bottle.

The material on Nobody Said It Was Easy is almost equally one-third of each of the afore mentioned Black Crowes, Dangerous Jays, and AC/DC in style. In fact, the Four Horsemen are signed to Def American Records, the same label that The Black Crowes are coincidentally on.

The vocals and music on hard rockers such as "Rockin'is Ma' Business, " which has found substantial airplay on many radio stations, is a shadow of early AC/DC. The bluesy rock sound of The Black Crowes is present in the title cut "Nobody Said it Was Easy" and others, such as "I Need A Thrill/Something Good," while songs such as "Let It Rock," and "Can't Stop Rocking" feature a vocal style and sound that could easily be mistaken as something off a Dangerous Jays album.

The Four Horsemen aren't a group attempting to introduce some sort of new musical sound or style. Since they resemble so many other groups, one could say that they're not original sounding by any means. However, they're very successful at driving home the unmistakable sound of guitar drives and producing straight-forward music.

If you like a solid, classic rock and roll sound from start to finish with occasional heavier twists, without overdoing them, then this album is for you. The Four Horsemen are a down and dirty rock group that isn't worried about writing a love ballad that catapults to the top of the prom theme lists.

The Four Horsemen are going to come to be known as a group that bases their playing on the honest roots of the rock and roll sound.

Exhibit balances in NoHo

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian staff

I've just seen some terrific "Balancing Acts."

No, I haven't been to the circus. Actually, I've been to the Artisian Gallery in Thorne's Market in Northampton to see what remains of Phobe Stone's exhibit of surreal pictures.

The pictures, to say the least, are beautiful. Filled with rich, deep purples, blues and oranges, they seem, at first, to convey a certain joy, which is what Katie Knowles, who works at the gallery, says she thinks customers have been attracted to.

"I think most people think they're warm," she said, adding that the individual people who have purchased four of the pictures seemed to fall in love with them instantly upon entering the gallery.

Knowles' own sense, she said, was much darker, and more depressing, which is an opinion I share.

The almost cartoonish people depicted in the pictures are all placed in distant positions from each other, showing a lack of warmth between them. Their faces betray equally distant emotions. Some figures seem to be ignoring each other, and that ignorance is causing distress for other subjects.

In "Midnight Sky and Yellow Flowers," for example, an opaque man floats through the night sky over a woman holding a bouquet of yellow flowers. She seems to be thinking about him, but he has left her alone in the dark night.

"My View of the River" conveys an ironic statement. In it, a woman lies on her bed, with a book lying beside her and a globe in front of her. In the book is a picture of the river she could see if only she would turn around and look through the huge window behind her.

This picture says a great deal about people today. We take too little time appreciating nature—the real nature. Why spend time in nature getting our hair messed up, or our feet and clothes dirty when they can sit at home in bed and look at pictures of it in a book?

My personal favorite picture, though, was "Still Life With You and Me." In it, we see an enormous bowl of fruit, supposedly set up by an artist to draw or paint. Standing on top of the fruit are a man and a woman hugging each other.

This is, I believe, a biographical picture, taken from Stone's own mind. She sees herself with this man everywhere she looks— even standing on top of the bowl of fruit. So, if she and he are there, she has to include them in the picture.

Nearly all of the pictures seem romantic and depressing, which is confirmed by Stone's own statement about her work.

"I know about chaos."

But the chaos is indeed beautiful, and worth seeing.

Unfortunately though, "Balancing Acts" will be leaving the area after this weekend. And although the cost of the pictures are a little out of the student price range ($500-1800), if you happen to be in Northampton this weekend, keep the Artisan Gallery in mind.

Stone's JFK: theory, fact, and entertainment

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

What seems to be the problem with many reviewers regarding the film JFK is that they spend more time reviewing the conspiracy theory than the film itself. This can be validated by saying that the American public, in its naivete, will consider this theory and its particulars as established fact.

Would Kevin Costner, our very own Robin Hood, lie to us? Only when the movie is separated from its theory, and that from the facts, can one begin to make sense of it all.

The movie JFK is an absolute stunner, full of stark images, newsreel footage that too closely matches the original black and white scenes, ingenious editing , and intense, bold performances.

The supporting cast — Joe Pesci, Kevin Bacon, Gary Oldman, and Donald Sutherland stand out among such notables as Jack Lemmon, Walter Matthau, John Candy, Ed Asner, and Tommy Lee Jones.

The only dim bulb is Sissy Spacek in a blah role as Garrison's suffering wife. The whole family subplot is nagging, especially in a movie with such a magnitude of information being given.

Eventually, Garrison brings forth an arrest, that of Clay Shaw, a respected businessman with supposed ties to Lee Harvey Oswald and the CIA. Anybody looking at the evidence realizes that Shaw was rightfully acquitted.

However, this trial gives Costner's Jim Garrison a chance to openly and effectively question the Warren Report, the "magic bullet" theory, and, for the first time, the Zapruder amateur film of the assassination.

This also allows for a rousing and well-written closing speech by Costner, complete with raspy voice and teary eyes. If one looks closely at the close of his speech, the point of view is cleverly switched from the jury Garrison is addressing to the viewing audience.

As Costner delivers the final line regarding the attempt to find the truth the camera shifts and Costner looks directly into the lens—ostensibly to the audience and says "It's up to you."

Director Oliver Stone constructs scenes like this throughout the entire film, keeping the viewers interest for its entire three-hour plus running time.

JFK's earnestness is perhaps its chief flaw. It presents speculation as fact. Stones's use of composite characters and contradictory images prevents the theory from being taken completely seriously.

Garrison based his theories, as Nicholas Lemann states, on "links." Some links are stronger than others. The fact that Garrison could not prove some links, to the point of conspiracy, is never addressed in the movie.

Unfairly, the links of Clay Shaw and David Ferry are shown as fact. The participation of the Warren Commission in a cover up and of LBJ in the conspiracy is presented as fact.

Thus, the audience is not given the burden of proof, as Stone has eliminated it. Conjecture and rhetoric are disguised as storytelling. While this makes for a fascinating movie, JFK must be viewed as a theory, as a movie, and as entertainment.

JFK is an important movie, a fantastic visual journey through our own history.

JFK is a definite must-see, and more than once. I've seen it four times already and it loses none of its effect. Don't miss JFK, the best film of 1991 on the big screen, as it will no doubt lose some of its visual power on video.

Smooth nanny gone bad

By SUE FOTI
Collegian Correspondent

Although compared to the suspense thriller Fatal Attraction, The Hand that Rocks the Cradle offers an even more chilling twist of vengeance gone amuck.

Unlike most movies it has cast women in the hero and villain roles. The victim/hero Claire, played by Jungle Fever's Annabella Sciorra, finds herself hiring a nanny at her husband's suggestion.

Enter Peyton (Rebecca DeMornay), who seeks revenge on Claire, who had raised a sexual molestation charge against Peyton's husband. Those charges caused her husband's suicide and her subsequent miscarrige.

Peyton's goal is even more sadistic than any chainsaw massacre-movie can dish out—to dismember Claire's life. Through numerous ploys, Peyton not only wedges herself between Claire and her family, but also slithers her way into Claire's psyche.

The screenwriter, a woman, plays much of the suspense off of the stereotypical insecurities of women. The closer Claire gets to Peyton, the more Peyton uses her sexual appeal and cunning to bring Claire's insecurities to the forefront of her thoughts.

The audience is placed into an unusual position. They must let go of the idea of Peyton as the stereotypical beauty and see her for the psychotic person she is.

DeMornay proves to be a skilled actress — the audience in one scene applauds her actions and then must turn on her in the end. The ability to create a sympathetic, victimized Peyton is a credit to DeMornay's abilities.

Sciorra allows Claire to be viewed by the audience as unknowing, not wimpy. The audience could have very easily seen her as unsympathetic, which would have detracted from the movie. This movie is a must-see — unless your children are being watched by a nanny.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Research is the key to greater financial success. Keep good records for tax purposes. Look for new ways to expand your business. The love temperature rises tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A tranquil day should lie ahead. Seize an opportunity to go shopping or tend to personal matters. Spend time only with those people with whom you feel a deep and lasting rapport.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your personal magnetism has someone eating out of your hand! Go ahead and express your feelings for that special person. Put any job worries on hold while you socialize tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Everything should go according to plan today without the need for modifications or additional spending. Let higher-ups know that they can expect quick results.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Surround yourself with friends and call for help if you run up against a job that is simply too much for one person to handle. Laying your cards on the table brings applause.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Every day provides an opportunity for new discoveries. Intellectual pursuits may be more interesting than business ventures now. Use your will power to resolve a recurring problem.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Taking chances can be exciting but you must be prepared to pay the cost. If something is too strenuous or expensive for you, say so. A potential partner will appreciate your honesty.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A lofty achievement is within your grasp. Patience is the key to continued progress. Plan a vacation. High-tech elements may be what is needed to get a plan approved.

SAGITTARUIS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Getting your office or workplace running smoothly should be a top priority now. Say the word and an old friend will lend a helping hand. You learn how to handle a touchy relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Quit trying to be everything to everybody! Such a plan is doomed from the start. Turn your back on the past and start to assure your future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A case of mistaken identity could cause trouble. Introduce yourself to a new customer or executive. Play a positive, wholesome role in the lives of those you love. Offer moral support.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone takes your jokes seriously. Explain yourself before things get out of hand. A co-worker helps you out without your even knowing it. A new romance puts you back in the social swim.

Swimmers to end season

Minutemen to host Boston University

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian staff

The men's swimming team will close out its season this weekend with a meet at New Hampshire on Saturday and a home meet against arch rival Boston University on Sunday. Sunday's meet against the Terriers will be the last for senior co-captains Bill Chouinard and Chris Sullivan and for senior Steve Meyers, the team's top diver.

With the Minutemen having assured themselves of a second place finish in the New England standings, coach Russ Yarworth will be using this weekend's meet as an opportunity to get one more look at the five swimmers who will be competing for the 17th and final slot on the New England Championship team. The remaining six swimmers who will not be going to the Championships, which will be held Feb. 13-15, will be shaving down for their final competition of the season.

Yarworth credits the team's overall success this season to the dedication of both the freshmen and upperclassmen during the intersession.

"We have developed from a shaky team, to a team that can compete for the championship," he said.

Yarworth also said the fact that his team shaved much earlier in the season than normal has had a positive impact on the younger members of the team.

"Shaving has enabled the freshmen to swim with great confidence because they know that they are able to swim fast all of the time."

Although UMass will be facing top-notch swimmers such as Michael Dix of New Hampshire and Scott Ricwald of Boston University, Yarworth said his team should be the favorite to win both of the meets. He feels that his team will be especially fired up for Boston University, who beat the Minutemen handily last season.

"We have a tremendous rivalry with BU," Yarworth explained. "Last year they shaved before the meet and then they came out and shellacked us. Now it's time for us to pay them back for last year."

UMass bounces back against Rutgers

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

After his team lost to Temple on Tuesday night, 83-61, University of Massachusetts basketball coach John Calipari questioned his players' desire and aggressiveness. Last night, the Minutemen responded with a 77-66 win over Rutgers.

From the start, there was never a question as to how badly the Minutemen (17-4, 5-3 in the Atlantic 10) wanted this game. Players were diving for loose balls, the press was reeking havoc and poor Bob Wenzel just didn't have the personnel to play with UMass.

"I think people got a little down on us after the Temple showing," said UMass guard Jim McCoy, who was held to just 7 points. "Before the game, we had a little talk. We knew this was a game we had to have."

By halftime, the Minutemen had a 41-23 lead. It would get worse for the Scarlet Knights. Kennard Robinson, who came off the bench after making three straight starts, swatted a shot which led to a William Herndon jam, giving UMass a 52-29 lead with 16:19 remaining.

On Rutgers' next possession, Robinson stepped in front of Jamal Phillips, to draw an offensive foul. Robinson's box score was anything but impressive, he did not score and did not attempt a shot, but those two plays brought the fans to their feet and Rutgers to its knees.

"What I liked was that we beat them to loose balls, and we beat them to loose rebounds," Calipari said. "We were the aggressor. Today was a war. We went after every ball and when there was a ball on the floor, you saw UMass bodies on the floor.

"Every game is big. But when you lose a game like we lost [to Temple], you find out about your team. We found out that we have kids with character."

In the first half, the Minutemen pressed Rutgers to near-death. Less than three minutes into the game, William Herndon stole a pass in the backcourt and drove the baseline for 2 of his 11 points. That tied the game at 6 apiece. The Minutemen then decided to involve Harper Williams (17 points, 13 in the first half) in the offense.

The 6-7 center wasted little time. Leading 16-11, the Minutemen went to Williams four straight times down the court, and all four times he scored. A Williams free throw boosted UMass' lead to 7, 30-21.

Rutgers' Steve Worthy (12 points, 6 assists) hit a 16-foot jumper with 4:17 remaining in the first half to cut the Minuteman lead to 30-23. However, those would be the Scarlet Knights' last points before intermission, as they went cold from the floor.

The Minutemen scored the last 11 points of the half taking a convincing 18-point lead into the lockerroom.

In the second half, Worthy, who dished out some pretty passes, but also tried to do too much by himself, scored 7 points. Donnell Lumpkin (19 points) and Jamal Phillips (18 points) carried Rutgers late in the game. But the Minutemen had built a 26-point lead which was just too much to overcome.

Rutgers did manage to cut the lead in half, once Lumpkin started to hit some NBA 3-pointers. But time would run out before the Scarlet Knights could truly strike any fear into the hearts of the Minutemen.

University of Massachusetts forward Will Herndon goes up strong over a Rutgers defender in the Minutemen's 77-66 win last night at Curry Hicks Cage.

"You're talking about two teams that needed wins," Calipari said. "I think in our case we needed it a little more than they did."

Anton Brown, who is playing with a hand and groin injury chipped in with 14 points and Lou Roe (7 points, 6 rebounds) was impressive in the paint.

Game Notes: After the game, Calipari said he would recommend the Temple game (Feb. 16), which the Athletic Department is considering moving to Springfield, be played in the Cage.

Women's hoop outclassed

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The staunch defense the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team prides itself on went out the window yesterday as West Virginia put up 68 shots on its way to a 94-69 win over the Minutewomen at Curry Hicks Cage.

The loss dropped the Minutewomen to 4-13 (0-6 in the Atlantic 10) while the Mountaineers improved to 14-2 (6-0) with their 11th win in a row.

UMass' Maleeka Valentine (14) shoots over West Virginia's Debbie Blazek (20) as Jenny Moran (11) awaits the rebound in the Minutewomen's loss last night at Curry Hicks Cage.

The Mountaineer's Rosemary Kosiorek lived up to her hype as a potential All-American by tossing in 31 points (including 2 3-pointers), dishing off 11 assists, and adding six steals. Her backcourt mate, Jocelyn Branham, added 18 points (4 of 5 on 3 pointers) and Donna Abbot added 12.

Kim Kristofik led UMass with 19 points and eight rebounds against the much bigger and quicker Mountaineers.

"For the first five minutes," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien, "we weren't ready to play.

"You can tell a lot about a person by the look on their faces, and you looked at our kids' faces and they weren't ready to play. It took about five minutes to get ready, but once they did get ready to play they did fine."

After UMass evened the score early at 2-2, the Mountaineers' pressing defense rattled the Minutewomen, forcing turnovers and capitalizing on them to put them up 16-4.

But when freshman Cassie Anderson's inside bucket dropped with 7:40 left in the first half, the Minutewomen were only down by 2, 19-17.

After a West Virginia free throw, Kim Kristofik's basket had UMass down 20-19, but that was as close as it would get. When UMass coach Jack Leahman picked up a technical foul with six minutes left, Kosiorek nailed both free throws to open the lead to 5 points, and by halftime the lead had grown to 14.

For the half, the Minutewomen shot 52 percent from the floor, while West Virginia shot only 39 percent. The UMass defense, which came into the game allowing an average of only 61 points per game, allowed the Mountaineers 49 points by halftime.

"I think we came out kind of scared and timid," said UMass guard Trish Riley. "Instead of going after them we were just waiting for them to explode. At halftime, I think we realized we could play with them. But, then we just got blown out."

West Virginia picked up where it left off during the first 10 minutes of the second half, outscoring the Minutewomen 24-10. During that streak Kosiorek scored nine points, including a back-breaking 3-pointer, and Brahnam and Abbott chipped in with six points each. UMass was down 73-45 and could get the margin no closer than 24 the rest of the way.

"I have to give West Virginia a lot of credit," O'Brien said. "They're a good veteran team. What are you going to do with kids with four years experience against kids that don't have a whole lot of experience at all?"

West Virginia coach Kittie Blakemore, who in her 19th season on the Mountaineer's bench has her team in the Top 25 for the first time, said the Minutewomen are, "fundamentally sound and can shoot the ball. They gave us a hard time for a while until we pulled away."

Minutewomen gymnastics beat Cornell

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Correspondent

After dropping the season opener to the University of Florida, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics squad travelled to Cornell University last Saturday and won convincingly, 178.15-148.20.

Once again it was Tammy Marshall, the junior from Hicksville, NY, who took top honors for UMass, scoring a 9.5 on the floor exercise, a 9.4 on the vault and a 9.5 on the uneven bars. Marshall also placed first in the all-around with a score of 37.45, followed by teammates Margaret Furtado and Gina Demeo, who scored 35.75 and 35.45 respectively.

"Although we won this meet, we actually scored lower than we did at the Florida meet," said UMass head coach Alfie Mitchell, whose team scored 183.55 points in front of a packed crowd in Gainesville. "I'm very happy that we won, but I didn't feel that our intensity level was high enough.

"I think a lot of that has to do with the fact that there were only 20 people watching us. It can be difficult to get pumped up in a situation like that."

Mitchell said he was pleased with the performances of Marshall, Furtado and Demeo, but said he is worried team injuries could play a big role in the upcoming quad-meet at Pittsburgh with Rhode Island and Ball State.

"There are a lot of unknowns going into the meet on Saturday," said Mitchell. "One of our key performers, Kim Grady, is out for four weeks with an injury and there are others on the team who have injuries as well.

"Because of [the injuries], a number of freshmen will have to fill in, along with a few upperclassmen who aren't used to participating in certain events. I'm just glad that we have two weeks to practice after this meet."

Although Mitchell has his doubts, he said he is confident that if the team concentrates and has a high intensity level, it will be victorious.

"The competition we are going up against is very talented, but so are we," he said. "If we hit all our routines and we get big days from Tammy [Marshall], Margaret [Furtado] and Gina [Demeo], we should come out on top."

Election decides title of NoHo Pride March

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Several years of controversy within the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual community came to an end yesterday when 390 people convened at the Northampton Center for the Arts and voted on the official name of the 1992 Northampton Pride March.

By a vote of 283 to 107, participants voted in favor of the title the 1992 Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Pride March.

For the make-up of the Steering Committee, which will be responsible for planning and organizing the March, 304 voted to have it include Lesbians, Gay Men and Bisexuals, while 86 voted to limit it to Lesbians and Gay Men.

The majority, 219, voted to have four members from each group on the twelve-member Steering Committee, with the remainder voting for other combinations. Regarding the formation of the Steering Committee, 265 voted to have people volunteer while 83 voted to have an election.

The question of what to name the Northampton Pride March, and specifically whether or not to include the word "Bisexual," has been an issue of controversy and debate for the past several years.

The word "Bisexual" did appear in the 1989 March title but was removed in 1990. When the initiative to include it was struck down in 1991, creating more turmoil, it was decided that community meetings be held to insure a fair and democratic process and to work towards building for the future.

Following the announcement of the vote results, the group decided to break into three caucuses so that each group could decide who would represent them on the Steering Committee. Representing the Lesbian caucus will be Aileen Journey, Aliss Klein, Carol LaPlante and Trystan Skeigh. From the Gay Men's caucus will be Phil Gauthier, Ricki Jarmon, Dan Kelly and Michael Scully. Representing the Bisexual caucus will be Owen Broadhurst, Micki Seigel, John Seigel and Ali Woolwich.

Yesterday's vote came out of a series of open meetings, specifically two of which took place in November, drawing 250 to 300 participants. A committee was formed to coordinate the election and create a ballot. The committee used the minutes of the various meetings to create a ballot which would accurately reflect the group process.

Sign-up sheets were available to begin forming the committees and sub-committees, which will work to create the March, including a Long Range Planning Committee. This committee will evaluate the process up to this point and insure its continuation.

Participants expressed relief, excitement and a sense of moving forward.

A Lesbian who wished to remain anonymous said, "It's a relief. Now we can get working on the important issues."

The high turnout of voters came as a pleasant surprise to many. David P. Stevens, a gay man who described himself as "open and out", said that he was "overwhelmed by the turnout. I am very excited."

Michael, a gay man who wished to be identified by first name only, said, "I am very pleased the committee came together. This was very positive and upbeat." He also expressed his belief that a sense of trust, responsibility and fun resulted from this process.

Alumnus tries to sell plate idea

Vanity plates may raise money to help University

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

Peter A.W. Larratt is waging a one-man campaign to implement an idea that could raise tens of thousands of dollars in scholarship money for the University of Massachusetts as well as boost school spirit across the state.

A UMass alumnus now living in Templeton, Mass., Larratt is trying to help rescue his alma mater from the state's seemingly endless fiscal crisis with the University of Massachusetts vanity plate.

Larratt says he has tried to sell the idea to anyone who will listen. He's been talking, and he hopes people have been hearing him.

"This could be something really great with the right people to help it go," he said. "It can do nothing but good if it gets off the ground."

Larratt and his wife are partners in a small appraising firm in Templeton. It was on a trip to Florida last winter that he saw license plates decorated with Florida state college seals, and the idea struck him.

"What state school could need more help in the money department than the University of Massachusetts right now?" he asked. "I saw this as my chance to do something really good for the school and the students."

Special issue vanity plates for causes are not a new idea. Maryland issued a plate last summer to raise funds to save the Chesapeake Bay. Florida issued a Space Shuttle Challenger plate in 1987 whose proceeds are annually donated to Astronauts Memorial Foundation scholarships and research and development. Massachusetts has a specialty plate honoring Pearl Harbor that helps keep homes for disabled veterans open.

Collegiate plates are a newer idea, with Florida taking the initiative, and the lead in revenue. The state currently has 10 of its state colleges and universities represented on collegiate plates.

All the plates were first issued in 1987, and each earns on average almost a quarter of a million dollars annually for their respective school. The University of Florida alone earned almost $900,000 in revenues from its plate in 1990.

Pennsylvania also has a similar program with its state schools, and now Larratt wants Massachusetts to have the same opportunity.

The vanity plate would cost about $25 more than a regular issue plate. Proceeds from the plate would go directly into student scholarships, instead of into the school itself, thereby evading the problem of money being cut out of the school budget due to the extra income.

"If the plate generated $250,000 for the school, you can bet an equal amount would be cut from some part of the budget in turn. That wouldn't be doing anyone but Weld any good," said Larratt. "If it goes right into the scholarship fund, the students benefit directly."

He has spoken with Worcester area state representative Mary Jane McKenna, Senator Robert Wetmore, also from the Worcester area, and Geraldo Gnazzo of the Department of Motor Vehicles. To his credit, a bill has since been filed to pass a law for a plate.

"This cause needs a champion, someone with connections that can make it fly," he said. "Maybe some Poli-Sci student would like to run with this idea. It promises

Guard faces deep cuts in wake of Gulf

By FRED BAYLES
AP National Writer

During his months in the Persian Gulf, Chief Warrant Officer William Barthes heard plenty of gripes from his fellow Alabama National Guardsman.

Most never expected to serve in a war. Many vowed to leave the Guard when they got home.

"I'd say 50 percent expected to get out," Barthes recalled. "But when we got home, people went all out to welcome us. It helped erase a lot of the bad memories."

The threatened flood of resignations never came. Anger over long months in the desert and disrupted lives was tempered by public adulation for returning citizen soldiers. A year later, Guard enlistment is at new highs in many states.

"The focus of Operation Desert Storm and the high visibility and acknowledgement of the Guard's war effort attracted a lot of people," said Lt. John Wiltse, a spokesman for the Connecticut National Guard, which is enjoying record enlistment despite the death of two guardsmen in the gulf.

But not all them news is good for the National Guard and reserves.

Training and preparedness glitches still are being analyzed by the Pentagon and Congress. Budget cuts, elimination in thousands of positions, will limit Guard spaces, making it harder for those who want to serve.

"It's difficult to talk to the soldiers who spent six to eight months in the desert and tell them they're no longer needed," said Gen. Bob Ensslin, adjutant general of the Florida Guard and president of the

Faces possible 40-year sentence for sexual assault

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A former University of Southern Maine student, convicted of raping a woman at a fraternity party last spring, faces up to 40 years in prison.

A Cumberland County Superior Court jury deliberated for nine hours over two days before finding Jon Steen, 21, of Westborough, Mass., guilty of one count of gross sexual assault.

Steen was acquitted of a second count of gross sexual assault, alleging anal rape.

After the verdict was returned Saturday, Justice William S. Brodrick granted a prosecution request that Steen's $40,000 bail be revoked and that he be confined while awaiting sentencing sometime this spring.

The judge said Steen, who was expelled from USM last year after the charges were filed, posed a danger to the community.

"He is a rapist," Brodrick said. "It is an extremely serious rape but he sees nothing wrong in what he has done. . . It appears from what he said on the stand that he has a very loose grip on reality."

District Attorney Stephanie Anderson said testimony by members of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, where the rape occurred, helped corroborate the victim's account.

Anderson said the verdict sends a message to rape victims that they will be heard.

"The jury showed the community (that) this case has been taken seriously," the prosecutor said.

During the six-day trial, Steen testified that the woman consented to have sex with him during the April 12 party.

The woman, a 20-year-old from northern Maine, said she met Steen for the first time at the party and he kept making passes at her. She said he followed her when she went to a second-floor bathroom and raped her there.

Steen, who was not a member of the fraternity, was later arrested at his dormitory room in Portland.

Fifteen witnesses testified during the trial, including fraternity members who said the woman did not act seductively toward Steen.

Members testified that the woman was crying hysterically when she came out of the bathroom, had blood on her clothing and looked as though she had been beaten.

Defense lawyer Gene Libby could not be reached for comment after the trial on whether an appeal was planned.

Panel discusses antisemitic speech

Reacts to Leonard Jeffries' comments

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Last summer's speech by City College of New York professor Leonard Jeffries formed the basis of a panel discussion on responses to antisemitism held by the Jewish Community of Amherst last night.

The panel, titled "How to respond to antisemitic speech," consisted of J. Eliot Morgan, a senior editor of the Harvard Crimson, Professor David Schimmel of the UMass school of Education and Winston Burt, Assistant District Attorney in charge of the Civil Rights Division for Northwestern Massachusetts.

AP Photo
Leonard Jeffries

An edited version of Jeffries' speech at the Empire State Black Arts and Cultural Festival in Albany in July 1991 was used to point out allegedly racist remarks he made concerning Jews.

"Jeffries hates Jewish people and dissenting blacks," said Morgan. Morgan said he is a Jewish black man who doesn't agree with Jeffries' beliefs.

"He referred to me as a Jewish puppet, and an enemy of the African people," Morgan said.

Eliot said that he initially was going to take another angle concerning the topic of the discussion last night, but said he felt an urge to discuss the fact that Jewish people need to rise up and fight back to overcome antisemitic views.

"Some people simply don't like you because you are Jewish and you cannot change their minds," Eliot said.

"No other people will respect you unless you respect yourselves," he said.

He continued,"You cannot wait anymore — if you are going to be a pacifist then it is going to be too late."

"You cannot convince everyone by sticking out an olive branch, Morgan said.

To combat the flow of false information about how Jewish people obtained their money, Morgan said, "It is time for the Jewish parent to spend more time with their children to tell them where the money is coming from.

"Tell them about the hard work it took to get where you are today, because if you don't then it is going to come back to haunt you," Morgan said.

He said that he felt the need to speak on this issue because Jeffries will speaking at Harvard University on Wednesday night, and he found it disturbing that "it was not important that Jeffries is an antisemite, but because he is black and that there was a need to celebrate his blackness," he said.

Jeffries' speech centered on the theory that wealthy Jews were the driving force behind the slave trade as well as for keeping blacks out of the American movie industry.

Although Eliot disagreed with Jeffries' views, he did say that he thought Jeffries should be entitled to speak his views in a public forum. "I am a First Amendment absolutionist," he said.

"Antisemitic speech is the cruelest form of expression," Schimmel said.

But Schimmel did say "acknowledging freedom of speech is dangerous, but what is more dangerous are the well-intentioned ideas of restrainment."

Burt concluded the discussion by telling the audience about the Massachusetts Civil Rights Act, and how it pertains to antisemitic speeches.

Harvard Pres, former hoop star appointed to search committee

Trustees seek top candidates for UM presidency

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

With the appointment of basketball legend Julius (Dr. J) Erving and Harvard University president Neil L. Rudenstine to a University of Massachusetts search committee for a new president, University trustees hope they will be able to attract top candidates.

The 21-member high-profile committee will be looking for a replacement for interim President E.K. Fretwell, whose contract runs through June of 1993.

"We want to be sure that we find the best president," said Gordon Oakes, chair of the University Board of Trustees. "We'd be expecting the president to move the five-College system forward."

Erving, a UMass-Amherst student and a star member of the basketball team in 1970 and 1971, left UMass in the early seventies but received his degree in 1986.

Erving was a standout with the Philadelphia 76ers and was honored with the National Basketball Association's Most Valuable Player Award in 1981.

In these difficult fiscal times, the new University of Massachusetts five-college system is looking for a candidate to take the reins of a system reeling from four years of budget cuts.

The state's public higher education budget has been cut from $757 million to $586 million in the past three years. Last year, the state cut appropriations to this campus by 12.5 percent, resulting in higher tuition and fees and lower state scholarship funds.

This summer, the state Legislature accepted a reorganization plan which was endorsed by Gov. Weld to combine the five schools of UMass-Amherst, Lowell, Dartmouth, Worcester and Boston into a single, unified system.

UMass-Amherst professor Ronald Story, a member of the committee, said the new president needs to be skilled at delegating responsibility, wielding political influence and being a "powerful persuader."

Although his opinions don't necessarily reflect the views of the 21-member panel, he said, "Over the long term, we need somebody who is committed to public higher education, who believes it's important," Story said. "We're looking for someone with prominent stature."

A consulting firm will assist in the selection process, Story said.

National Guard Association.

The Gulf War saw the biggest use of reservista since the Berlin Wall crisis in 1960. Some 228,000 reservists and guardsmen were called up, compared to 35,000 during the Vietnam War.

More than 106,000 saw duty in the gulf in the first test of the military's growing reliance on reserve forces in time of war. Much of what they did was impressive.

A Marine Reserve tank unit saw heavy fighting at the Kuwait airport. A Tennessee engineering company was one of the first U.S. units to cross into Iraq. An Oklahoma artillery battalion fired rockets in support of British units within 48 hours of arriving in the gulf. Artillery units from Arkansas and Tennessee earned high praise from the British and American units they supported.

Guardsmen broadcast messages to convince Iraqis to surrender, others guarded prisoners. The Air National Guard flew 133,563 tons of cargo into the gulf and carried 66,915 troops. Postal units distributed 300 tons of mail in one three-day period.

"Once people saw what the Guard did, it gave us our credibility back," said Sgt. Howard Buch, commander of the 121st Transportation Unit of Pennsylvania, which carried supplies into Iraq for an armored division.

But not all of the Guard callup was a success.

One still unpublished Government Accounting Office study found the Guard lacked specialty units needed in the gulf, including graves registration, water purification and postal companies. Other units went to the desert unprepared.

yesterday's election, also spoke of how positive this process was and stressed that it came out of "a year and a half of community work."

Woolwich went on to say, "Bisexual people are hard-working contributors to this community. I am glad the vote confirmed that."

Tim Blake, a gay man, also spoke of the incredible turnout saying, "I am elated that as many participated as the numbers show.

"No matter what the result had been, it made voices known. Through this process hard feelings can be avoided in the future," Blake said.

A Bisexual Woman, who wished to remain anonymous, commented on the far-reaching impact of yesterday's vote, "The official inclusion of Bisexual in the Pride March title is going to set a national precedent. This makes Northampton cutting edge in sexual minority issues."

Town agrees to voting plan on trial basis

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Correspondent

The town of Amherst has agreed to try a student government plan to register voters through student deputies holding regular office hours in the Student Government Association offices in the Student Union.

20 student volunteers are allowed to participate in the program. So far, five students from SGA and MassPIRG have offered their services.

In addition to the voter registration being done in the SGA office, a table will be set up in the lobby of the Student Union to solicit students.

Voter registration office hours are to be held on four days between this Wednesday and next Tuesday, Feb. 11.

This program is being run on a trial basis and if it is successful, the student government and the town of Amherst will discuss the possibility of expanding the idea into semester-long endeavor.

This plan has several advantages, according to Matt Pavesi, chair of the student government's Public Policy Committee.

In the past, the student government solicited students for voter registration through large "voter drives" that took place once or twice during a semester, Pavesi said. The people working for these drives were paid deputy registrars and the organization sponsoring the registration drive, frequently SGA or MassPIRG, had to pay half of the registrars' salaries and foot the bill for heavy advertising.

According to Pavesi, this new program all but erases those costs and allows to students to register any time it's convenient for them during the semester.

Pavesi cited a need for more student involvement in voting and sees the new plan as a way of meeting that need.

Students that register will be eligible to vote in town, state and federal elections.

Office hours for voter registration will be held in the SGA office, 420 Student Union, from 1-3 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday and on Monday and Tuesday next week.

Any students interested in volunteering to work during the office hours should contact the SGA office at the number listed in the phone book.

A year later, reservist remembers Gulf War

By NANCY RABINOWITZ
Associated Press

BOSTON — Margaret Cassidy had been in the Massachusetts National Guard for about 10 years when her unit was called to the Persian Gulf.

"It was very strange coming from a very heavily populated area like Massachusetts," said Cassidy. The Saudi desert "seemed like a vast wasteland; it was like landing on the moon."

Cassidy, 28, a Lynnfield police officer, was a second lieutenant serving double duty in Iraq and Kuwait as part of the military police unit.

Once the ground war began in mid-January, Cassidy's routine involved rounding up prisoners of war and sending them to POW camps in Saudi Arabia.

"The prisoners were very unhealthy," said Cassidy. "Some of them believed what Hussein was telling them, they they had won a moral victory. Others just wanted to get out of Iraq," she said.

The Iraqi and Kuwaiti soldiers often asked to be taken as prisoners, Cassidy said, in a desperate attempt to relieve their hunger and suffering.

Often as many as 100 prisoners were roped off in an area, waiting to be transported.

"We'd just sit there and individually go through and feed them, give them water and put them on trucks and buses," Cassidy said.

Comrades and letters from home helped Cassidy and the others cope with loneliness and long tedious days. She corresponded with her parents in Swampscott and with school children who sent letters addressed to "Any Soldier."

"They would ask what we were doing. They were very concerned about people getting killed."

Cassidy said her stay in the Gulf also let her witness the living conditions of some of the poorer Iraqi and Kuwaiti people.

"They're living in almost a stone-age environment. People are living in shacks with absolutely no modern conveniences at all. You felt bad for those people," she said.

Returning to campus a good feeling after a long break

"In the sleepy west, of the wooded east..."

Welcome back.

Well, that'll about do it for the pleasantries, let's get on with the fun. This week I would like to begin my foray into the bizarre and opinionated by giving a big "kudos" to the brains behind that wonderful and informative "D.C. Rumors" pamphlet. Thanks guys, the campus needed a big laugh.

Okay, okay, no more D.C. jokes, I promise. Cross my heart and hope to die, stick a power drill in my eye.

Anyway...

Allow me to shock a lot of you out there by saying that it is indeed good to be back. Why? Well, I'm glad you asked. Basically, my main complaint about returning home for extended periods of time is that my parents have a nasty habit of being there. This wouldn't be a problem if they didn't think that I was still 12-years-old.

I knew something was up when, on my first day back, I walked into my room and found a pair of Superman "Underoos" on my bed. Remember those things? They had the "S" emblem on the front and the little red cape and made you actually want to run around and show your underwear off to company?

Or was it just me?

Jared Blaut

Well, anyway, I thought they belonged to my 10-year-old brother, and so I went and put them on his bed. But that night at dinner my mom asked me:

"Did you see your 'Underoos'?"

"Excuse me? (short, confused pause during which our hero stares at his mother, a wrinkly, gray-haired woman with long dark claws and fangs as sharp as... well, that's not true) Those were mine?"

"Of course their yours. I've been saving them since you were eight."

"And you think they're going to fit now?"

"Well, no, but aren't they cute?"

"Sure, mom. Whatever."

"Don't you take that attitude with me young man."

"What attitude?"

"That's it! You're grounded!"

Hey! Rationality at work. Anyway, I eventually got out of the grounding, but only after I promised to eat all my peas and carrots.

The part which confused me the most was they knew that over vacation I was going to be working at a law firm, which is not normally the type of place that employs toddlers (for anyone out there in the Happy Valley who has any intention of ever doing anything even closely related to lawyer-type-work, allow me to say: DOOOON'T! It is almost, but not quite, as much fun as appendicitis). But, for some reason, they never put two and two together.

It's probably because I am the oldest of three kids; the firstborn; the "experimental" child. If they screw up on me, they have two newer models on which to hone their parental skills. When my brother comes home from college for the first time in December of 2000, they'll probably give him a car, a six-pack, and a pack of Trojans.

On a somewhat unrelated note, our winter break is just way, way too long. All my friends from my graduating class went back to college two weeks before we did, and those who were still in high school were, well, in high school.

What this boiled down to was law-office hell by day and parental damnation by night. It was like being forced to watch continuous reruns of "Full House".

Okay, so the classes are huge, the people are strange, budgets are cut, and Amherst is not, let's face it, excitement central, but all in all I really can't complain about being back at UMass.

At least until next week.

Bisexuals don't exist just for the community's pleasure

Good day, readers. Permit me to please introduce myself. I'm a bisexual, and a good many who have also signed are bisexual, lesbian and gay. They have only one line to draw concerning the residents of our not-so-communal "community"; they find bigotry to be purely reprehensible, and a lot of us have lived with bigotry throughout our whole entire lives.

We never dreamed we might have to put up with it in a community we call home. Yet, we do. We tend to hate each other, really. We don't know how to discuss politics in any rational manner. We tend to get on each others nerves.

Not too many people will be signing my column. It is extreme even for bisexual allies, but extreme within a very curious sense that will immediately place seeds of doubt within any rational mind now hating me, simply for what I am. And, need I remind any reader, hate is excommunicational. Hate is exclusion from the sole and only body that you have ever been willing to die for, like I have.

What I'm discussing is obviously the Northampton Pride March, a march that I have never missed in spite of the physical damage that I have always received thanks only to verbal violence, an eloquent atrocity, the most beautiful fascism on earth.

I use my words carefully, with reason. All of my words will have impact. I mean, by fascism. Precisely what I mean when I describe it as a ruling paradigm in Amerikkka, part and parcel of the very fabric of our society.

We must preserve our lives, and I'm not above the use of violence to prevent my being shoved in a closet, any closet, by hideous forces that only want to see me when I'm in their bed. I'm upset and angry.

Pardon for "switching," but I could care less about how my sexual orientation scares and annoys the sexually possessive. I could care less if so many bisexuals were once lesbian or gay. We're not here for the community's pleasure. We're here to help all survive the hideous rise in assaults and murders. Drool over someone else.

We've been here since before Stonewall, and, yes, we took part in Stonewall. We have been movers and shakers in the community throughout its history, no matter what we called ourselves. So many bisexuals, even today, still identify themselves as lesbian or gay. Myself, I thought I was straight for 20 years.

Owen Broadhurst

That is precisely the matter, the problem. Post-modern thought annoys a great many who think that sexuality must be fixed, permanent, when it is nothing but a social construct, a concept in fact, that is always changing. That annoys, because so many feel it threatens the gay movement, a movement that has been much more willing to say, "Hey! We're born with a defect.," rather than say, "Hey! Heterosexuality's a myth, man!."

So, yes, a philosophical disagreement is being discussed here. Bisexuals are living radical proof that who you may sleep with is hardly definitive if what you happen to be. You can all be celibate, and still be bisexual, straight or gay.

Major differences in a philosophical standpoint is not an acceptable argument for the practice of excommunication, which automatically silences. Nor can it honestly be said that every bisexual subscribes to the post-modern notion that "sexual liberation" is the key to the revolution. Let's face it, Queer Nation, Bataille was off base, and sexual libertarianism is just another brand of sexual fascism. Too many bisexuals have libertarian, even anarchistic ideas regarding sexuality that have absolutely no place in feminism, which is by necessity materialist in its analyses of the subject.

Indeed, bisexuals are not a monolithic bloc. There does not exist any politically correct sexual orientation. A lot of us are pigs, including gay men and lesbians. So what? Who cares? If bisexuals are constantly being sexualized, even by lesbians and gay men, then it is clear that all of our sex models have a patriarchal framework, or still exists within a patriarchial context.

Who will march the next exclude, if it is excluding bisexuals on the basis of a philosophy several of us abhor, when so many gay men and lesbians believe in a similar thinking?

Leso-phobia has plagued the bisexual community. Several of us are lesbian and woman-hating. A lot of gay men, and even some lesbians, are the same. The point of a pride march is to formulate a means of struggle against the major problem, the social construction of gender that oppresses wimmin and every queer. Many bisexuals sleep with only wimmin, or men, in an exclusively lifelong lesbian or gay relationship. I but want to challenge heterosexuality, radicalise our demands and abolish gender. The bisexual movement must become informed by the most radical feminism. Lesbian space is for lesbians only, but community space is ours always.

Owen Broadhurst is a UMass student.

Collegian library cover all too true

The full-page cover of this semester's first Collegian, showing the Tower Library relegated to a trash barrel, may be closer to the mark than its very perceptive creator knows. While I'm not sure about the feasibility of the Collegian's assuming the role of information provider to the campus, I am certain of the extent to which the library's ability to meet its responsibilities to the University faculty and students has been trashed over several years of chronic underfunding and, recently, by the more dramatic budget cuts.

Some facts: this year, the library will buy fewer than 7,000 new books; in 1990, we bought over 29,000 and in 1988, a "windfall" year, we acquired over 46,000. Standard scholarly trade and university publications, the core of any college or university library and formerly purchased here on a more or less routine basis, are now beyond our means. Our subscriptions to journals, a vital source of current information and statistical data in many fields, have been reduced in past years and today face additional cuts.

Personnel budget reductions have threatened library opening hours and made staffing service points increasingly difficult. We cannot afford to buy enough computer terminals to allow adequate access to our existing electronic data sources, let alone buy the latest in computerized information sources.

As is true elsewhere on campus, our ceilings leak, jeopardizing our collections, our walls crumble, and our heating pipes burst, causing flooding.

Even if you seldom or never use the library, you need to worry about this wholesale disintegration. Libraries aren't called the "hearts" of universities for nothing. Accreditation of individual programs and of the university itself is based in no small part on adequate library resources. Success in attracting talented graduate students and teaching assistants, not to mention faculty, rests heavily on our ability to support their research needs with current materials in state-of-the-art formats.

At its most basic, education is about passing on knowledge and information to students. As a public institution, we must be particularly concerned that the sources of such knowledge and information be available to all, not just to those who can afford to buy them personally or who know someone with access to them. The library is, and has always been, the primary way in which materials can be purchased and widely shared in an economical way.

But reports and statistics seem to have made little impression on those in a position to improve the situation. Perhaps copies of the Collegian's eloquent and prophetic cover photo need to be sent, without accompanying comment, to the Governor, the Secretary of Higher Education, the Higher Education Coordinating Council, and maybe even the University Board of Trustees.

Columnist's timing a cheap shot

I could not have agreed more with Trystan Skeigh's statement in Thursday's Collegian about it being "counter-productive for bisexuals and lesbians to spend so much time and energy in a power struggle. . ." She seems to have taken a partisan view, however, which undermines the unity of the GBLA community. By disguising her own apparent intolerance as a political disagreement, Trystan is undercutting the ultimate goal of combatting prejudice against alternative sexual orientations. Exclusion of bisexuals from the march can only serve the political aims of those who would oppose non-traditional lifestyles.

Trystan assumes that bisexuals enjoy "heterosexual privilege." Using this term implies that when bisexuals date members of the opposite sex, they are temporarily heterosexual. Never is it assumed that dating a member of the same sex makes us homosexual. If it appears that I am more societally accepted as a bisexual woman, it is a result of being more societally objectified. Few would call it a privilege to be the subject of voyeuristic curiosity. Trystan also fails to note that bisexual men are not accorded this dubious privilege, rather, they are vilified for their suspected role in the spread of AIDS. If there is some higher status bestowed upon bisexuals, it is diminished by the ignorance we encounter in some members of our community.

It is easy for a staunch lesbian to forswear intimate contact with men. For me to do the same would be to deny my sexual orientation for the sake of somebody else's political agenda. Bisexuality has a unique and demanding position as a link between the heterosexual and homosexual communities. Cutting off this bridge will foster the misunderstandings which make "safe space" necessary. It is self-defeating to create "safe space" at the cost of alienating potentially powerful allies.

There are real and significant differences between bisexuality and homosexuality; each is a distinct and valid orientation. Unfortunately, for much of society at large, we all fall into the blanket category of "freaks." Bringing trivial squabbles about semantics into the press undermines the credibility of all parties involved.

The timing of Trystan's article precluded any chance for rebuttal before the vote which took place on Sunday. If this was intentional, it was a self-serving abuse of her position on the paper, which not only militates against an atmosphere of open dialogue, but is also journalistically irresponsible. If Trystan Skeigh has a personal axe to grind against bisexuality, the Op-Ed page of the Collegian is not the proper forum.

3D software, the latest in building technology

By SEAN GLENNON
The Daily News

MILFORD, Mass. (AP) — When the cities of the future are designed, they will be fashioned not of steel and glass but of the mind.

The day is fast approaching when the look of a building, the feel of its rooms and corridors, the subtle changes in appearance dictated by such minor details as the quality of sunlight, all will be available for viewing before a single girder is in place, even before ground has been broken.

In a time not far from now, three-dimensional computer modeling will allow prospective buyers and financiers to see details of yet unconstructed buildings that only architects and developers are able to glean from blueprints.

The technology that will allow these advances in building design will also have applications in teaching, medicine, movie making, gaming and an array of other fields.

And in a small workshop hidden in the basement of a Milford home, two local men are helping to pioneer the software that quite literally will shape tomorrow.

Gene Bodio and Phil LeMarbre, owners of Professional Construction Associates Inc., are working with a California firm to develop the most advanced computer modeling technology in the world. As a result of their desire to visualize a single building project, the two men have become partners in an endeavor that is poised to reshape the manner in which computers are applied to day-to-day living.

The Yost Group, an innovative West Coast computer programming firm, has created and is in the process of perfecting the "3D Studio," a software package for AutoDesk, a computer assisted design system. In his work on the program, company owner Gary Yost keeps daily contact with Bodio and LeMarbre, who are developing applications for the software.

PCA Inc. is a small Hopedale-based company, with a technology center on Ferguson Street in Milford. That lab is the chief "alpha" testing site for "3D Studio" and, as such, is on the cutting edge of CAD technology.

The firm has done computer imaging on two Milford school building proposals and a University of North Carolina construction project. PCA's work in those areas could not have been completed by any other company in the world.

Bodio and LeMarbre also have completed advanced computer design work on a kitchen for the PBS television program, "This Old House." And they are currently designing portions of a computer game under development by a Virgin Records-owned company.

In their efforts, the two men are applying software that will not be available commercially for at least six months. It is due to that advanced access to technology and their own innovations that they are contacted daily by companies from around the world.

The question that comes immediately to mind, of course, is, "Why such a remote testing ground for such important technology?"

The answer: Bodio and LeMarbre not only were willing to take a chance on "3D Studio," they recognized an application for the software that even its inventor had missed.

A great new novel puts you on Edge

By DONNA GILMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Women on the Edge of Time
Marge Piercy
Ballantine Books

Looking for a great book that takes you from the slums of New York in 1960 to a futuristic society in 2137? Then check out Marge Piercy's stunning novel, Women On The Edge of Time.

This story chronicles the life of a Chicano woman named Connie Ramos who is labeled insane and stuck in a mental institution. However, Connie Ramos is, in actuality, an extremely intelligent and sensitive woman who is thrust into situations beyond her control.

Book Review

While committed, Connie is contacted by a representative of the year 2137, who takes her on an enlightening tour of life in the communal and environmentally safe society of Mattapoisett. There, Connie finds acceptance, love, and a different view of mental illness.

In this novel, the reader encounters two worlds strikingly different—one is harsh, totalitarian, and lonely. The other is a masterpiece of humanity and nature.

Marge Piercy confronts the reader with the old struggle between good and evil with inventive and astonishing twists. As Connie fights her doctors for the right to be treated as a human being, the right to not have a brain control operation, her desperation is relieved at intervals by visits to her new friends in Mattapoisett.

Marge Piercy takes the reader along on Connie's frightening journey, conveying her grief, her courage, and ultimately, her strange triumph.

This novel is a shocking example of a society ruled by a few manipulative people and one individual's struggle to beat the system.

By stringing the heroine's past, present and future together, Marge Piercy leaves the reader feeling intimately involved with Connie's experiences and rooting for her success, namely to save the future with a personal sacrifice.

What's more, Marge Piercy allows the reader to freely interpret the existence of Mattapoisett. Fantasy or reality? Find out for yourself.

Marge Piercy has authored eight other novels and has published eleven collections of poetry, most recently, Available Light, which was published by Knopf in 1988. Her work has been translated into fourteen languages.

Some of her other novels are: Summer People; Gone to Soldiers; Going Down Fast; and Small Chances.

Marge Piercy lives on Cape Cod with her husband, Ira Wood, the novelist and screen writer.

Incidentally, I first read this novel in a literature class at UMass, which just goes to show that sometimes a reading assignment is worth the work.

Pousette-Dart making a 70s-style comeback

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Mood rings, teased hair-dos and flared pants are oozing back into mainstream style. The 70s are returning, and so the time is right for college students to open their ears to a band that dominated the 70s music scene for a spell: the Pousette-Dart Band.

You're probably as baffled as I was upon first hearing the name of this band with its unique blend of rock, reggae, country folk, and funk.

The Pousette-Dart Band's biggest album was Amnesia, released in 1977. From that classic release came the title track, "Fall on Me" and "County Line."

Only four albums were released by the band, yet they sold over 500,000 albums in the USA.

They toured with Yes, Bonnie Raitt, Little Feat and Robert Palmer, but they became disenchanted with the "business of the music business." They went their separate ways in late 1980.

Advice they give to up and coming groups: "Get a lawyer. It's good to protect yourself," says Parker, "And don't pay attention to what's on the charts."

John Troy, who I'd affectionately call the "belly bouncing bass player" after seeing the band perform at the Iron Horse in Northampton on Jan 25, toured with the John Hall Band, Joe Cocker, and Natalie Cole after the band's break up.

He then reunited with John Curtis to form the Pencils.

John Curtis, who not only sings but is an absolute wizard on the mandolin as well as the guitar, looks and acts like the guitar player in Cheap Trick with his white cap pulled low on his head.

His merry antics keep the crowd giggling while the rest of the band throws its spontaneous dialogue around. He has squeezed in that odd tour here and there

Alarming Breakthrough!
COLLEGE STUDENT TURNS FOUR YEARS OF BLUE BOOKS INTO GOLD!

A college student with a double major in physics and art history, shocked the academic community by announcing that four years of blue books and all the memories that go with them could be turned into gold.
"I don't know what people were doing trying to turn lead into gold, but obviously they didn't know about ArtCarved. I took one look at their big selection of men's and women's gold rings and picked one. It was easy. ArtCarved also gave me lots of custom options to remember my four years and a lifetime guarantee. I don't know any physicists who can do that," said the chalkface senior.
The big-brained senior plans to share this remarkable discovery at the next meeting of the Future Physicists of America.

with Linda Ronstadt, Livingston Taylor, and Jimmy Buffett, in addition to performing and contributing to the soundtracks for Dick Tracy and Matawan.

Jon Pousette-Dart who stands tall and lanky as the front man of the group (lead vocals and guitar), has a look of moody, poetic consternation on his face most of the time, but when he smiles it's worth about a million bucks. So even if the band is a bit older than most of the bands trying to break back onto the scene (their ages run from 39 to 42) it doesn't mean that they've lost that "pin up" appeal that is so vital for the younger listeners who'll be watching them on MTV.

When they're performing on stage, Pousette-Dart's moodiness is also nicely off set by the happy, kooky guitar duo, John Curtis and John Troy.

Jon Pousette-Dart relocated to New York City in the early 1980's. He wrote, produced, and performed commercial jingles for such national ad campaigns as Chevy Trucks, Old Milwaukee Beer, and Seagram's Wine Coolers. In their last performance in Northampton, the group surprised the audience with a highly entertaining performance of "Snap, Crackle, Pop Rice Krispies" jingle.

The Pousette-Dart Band achieved their fame in the late 70s but are quite serious about dominating a chunk of the 90s.

They've acquired a new drummer, Eric Parker, who has co-penned some of the new material with Jon Pousette-Dart. Parker has written, recorded and toured with Steve Winwood, Mick Taylor, Joe Cocker, and Kingfish. He also wrote the Top 40 hit, "Keep on Falling in Love" with John Hall of the John Hall Band.

The band reunited in May of 1991. They are hoping to have their "best of" album released around May or June of this year on Capitol records.

The band told the audience that this album is "For those of you who are old fans with records so old they may not exist anymore." They are also going to release an album of all new material.

The band tends to make a lot of these age jokes, but they are full of energy and vitality. Their music is mellow sometimes but uplifting and invigorating the rest of the time.

As John Troy says," It's a real challenge to bring life to something you could perform in your sleep."

"County Line" literally had the entire audience beaming and swaying. Of course the crowd was a bit older than most of the shows in the UMass area. The band is not old, they're experienced. Their stage presence is relaxed and highly entertaining.

When Pousette-Dart took a break from singing and John Troy took over he erupted with a very unexpected, "YAAAAAY, ME!" He had a show stealer of his own with a fantastic performance of "That Ain't the Real Thing."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Postpone contacting influential people and turn your attention to your family and friends. Do not take on additional financial responsibility without consulting your mate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New projects thrive. A current plan is approaching perfection. Employment and financial benefits can be wrapped up in a neat package. Romance holds some pleasant surprises this week.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful when reading and signing documents. Ignoring the fine print could prove costly. Social plans could change at a minute's notice. Keep your schedule flexible if you can.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If you are satisfied with your surroundings and financial opportunities, do not be hasty about making a change. Giving romance a second chance could be the smartest decision you ever made.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid making any comments that could antagonize others. Mark time until work conditions improve. An innovative idea will get a better reception if you wait until next week. Keep spending within limits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A happy meeting of minds makes it easier for you to approach higher-ups now. Be objective, instead of suspicious, about a colleague's efforts to improve work procedures.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Consolidate recent gains before making a new commitment. Now is the time to discuss a work vs. home conflict with those directly involved. Speak your mind and let loved ones do the same.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Relatives need your help in sorting out a problem. Be patient. A hobby could become a real moneymaker. Join a community group or social club if your time and energy permit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Meeting your financial obligations will be easier if you eliminate certain frills. Strike a better balance between work and play. A romantic relationship improves when you show greater consideration.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Strive to improve your relationships with your co-workers. A friend offers excellent financial advice. Follow it and you will win big! Career matters are stressed later in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Fall back on your financial reserves if necessary. Believe it or not, a no-frills journey can be just as satisfying as traveling first class. Important people begin to notice your efforts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Those who share your interests are particularly important to your financial success. Be realistic. Original ideas abound! Strike out on your own if your associates lack vision.

Christensen leads men's gymnastics

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics squad took a commanding 6.4-point lead after the second event, the pommel horse, and never looked back as it defeated Cortland State and the University of Vermont Saturday afternoon in front of a near-capacity Boyden Gymnastics Center crowd.

The Minutemen, who outdistanced their nearest competitor, Cortland State, by 5.1 points on the pommel horse, outscored the field in every event except the still rings, resulting in 265.65 total points, followed by Cortland's 258.10 and Vermont's 227.15.

UMass' Steve Christensen was the meet's top competitor, scoring a 54.45 in the all-around. Christensen scored a meet-high 9.2 on the pommel horse and his 9.25 on the parallel bars was second only to his teammate, Joseph Haran, who scored a 9.3.

Cal Booker, who broke a UMass school record in the all-around last Wednesday at Springfield, led the Minutemen in the still rings with a score of 9.25 and matched teammate Jason Braud's team-high score of 9.4 on the floor exercise. Booker, who was on pace to win the all-around until he received a mandatory reduction for falling off the high bar, registered a meet-total 53.95 points, placing him second.

"We're a talented team in the pommel horse," UMass head coach Roy Johnson said. "It takes the most conditioning and we're strong in that area.

"We're strong on all events. We just need a little more consistency on the high bar."

Haran's point total of 53.75 completed the Minutemen's sweep of the top three all-around positions. Cortland's Mark Forest's first place point total in the high bar led to a fourth place finish in the all-around, scoring a 53.65.

"I'm pleased with today's showing," Cortland coach Eric Malmberg said. "If you discount the second event [the pommel horse], we were within two points of UMass."

seats does the Cage sit, 4,100?

When the game ended my legs were tired (not to mention my voice) and I was ready to go home. Although I never really got to sit down, it didn't matter. There were so many incredible plays I would've been up and down the whole game anyway!

The fans were so supportive. Great fans are really what it's all about. One's that will wake up in the early morning hours to get tickets, so just a few days later they can come to "rage in the Cage" and scream their team on to victory.

Simple Math.

You don't need to be a math wiz to figure out that it takes a lot of money to go to college. The fine folks at Jeep and Eagle would like to help subtract some of that financial burden by reimbursing a lucky student for a semester's worth of tuition.

If you can picture yourself as that lucky student, get over to your participating school bookstore and pick up the new Jeep and Eagle college folder while supplies last. It's free, and inside there's a contest called "Where in the World?" that will award up to $10,000 in tuition reimbursement. The official program rules are detailed in the folder.

So if you think you're smart (and we know you are), enter the Jeep and Eagle college folder contest. You never know–filling out the entry form could save you from filling out financial aid forms next term.

including Reggie Rasata, a member of the 400 freestyle relay team that placed third, Tom Robertson, another member of that team, Rob Colletti, whose time of 1:21.80 in the 50 freestyle was the best time of any UMass swimmer this season, and Joe Langford who had a time of 5:03 in the 500 freestyle.

"We swam really well, especially for this time of the year," said assistant coach Jim Robertson. "It's usually hard to keep swimming fast when you get down to the 12th or 13th meet, but we're still swimming very fast."

Robertson attributed the Minutemen's success this season to the team's tremendous depth.

"We're strong in every event," he said. "Boston University is our number one rival, but they lost a lot of seniors and we beat them with our depth."

Saturday's meet at New Hampshire was an equally lopsided affair, as the Minutemen won 159-127, sweeping six of 16 events in the process. Notable performances were turned in by the team of Sean Clark, Jim Gregg, Adam Reich and Chris Barrett, who set the New Hampshire pool record with a time of 1:27.83 in the 200 freestyle relay.

With the regular season over, the Minutemen will turn their attention to the New England Championships to be held at Bowdoin College from Feb. 13-15. Both Robertson and head coach Russ Yarworth agree that the team has an excellent chance to repeat as New England Champions.

"Our top three people in each event all have the ability to score points in the New Englands, and I think we are going to continue to improve," Robertson said. "UConn is our toughest competitor, and they are generally considered to have the best chance to win, but I think we can swim fast enough to beat them."

Newcomer in awe of Cage rage

"You have to go, you have to go," people told me.

"I'll go when I can," I said. "A basketball game's a basketball game, right?"

Boy, was I wrong.

Noise, 3-pointers and more noise. That's what I found at my first UMass basketball game — what a thrill!

Peter Wolly

Earlier in the day (before the game), I asked around to see what time I should arrive at the "Cage." People were telling me at least a half hour before to get good seats. I figured that was reasonable, but unfortunately, by the time I got out the door and into the arena, it was 15 minutes before tipoff. This is when I realized why everyone had said arrive at least a half hour before the game.

I met up with one of my friends and we started searching through the hundreds of people for seats, but none were to be found. I couldn't believe how many people there were . . . it was packed. We finally found two seats together and believe it or not, they were in the fourth row at midcourt. I was stunned that nobody had gotten to them. They were incredible!

After the national anthem, I took a seat like always, but the funny thing was, nobody seemed to follow. I figured once the game started I'd be able to sit down, but I had no such luck and had to stand.

From the tipoff, UMass dominated, but it was the crowd that stuck in my mind. After every basket the "rage in the Cage" exploded. It was so incredible and so loud, it's hard to put it in words. From the cheerleaders and band to the guys who painted their chests red with "U-M-a-s-s." The place was going nuts. In my mind, only 55,000-seat R.F.K. stadium in Washington is louder. How many

Rutgers towers above Minutewomen

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

In the seventh time in as many Atlantic 10 games, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team fell to a more athletic and talented team, getting blown out by Rutgers, 77-52.

Rutgers (12-4, 7-0 in the A-10) started a frontline of players 6-4, 6-2 and 6-0, and had five additional six-footers on the bench. The Lady Knights started the second half with a 15-2 run that buried the Minutewomen.

"They're big," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "This is the biggest team I've ever been around in my playing days, as a player and as a coach. I've never seen a team as big as they are."

UMass (4-14, 0-7 in the A-10) was in the game at halftime, trailing 36-24, thanks to an outstanding performance by Jenny Moran, who had 9 points and five rebounds in the first half. Moran finished with 14 points and 9 rebounds, both team-highs.

The Lady Knights came out of the lockerroom on fire, scoring the first 8 points of the half. O'Brien tried to stop the bleeding by calling a time out after Caroline DeRoose (24 points, 6 assists) nailed a 3-pointer, but it did not help.

"They came out and they really swung the ball around fast, said UMass guard Gloria Nevarez. "They collapsed our zone, whipping the ball around, and we didn't adjust."

After Kim Kristofik (11 points) laid the ball in on a fast break, and cut the lead to 18, 44-26, Rutgers played more fast-paced, perfectly executed basketball, nailing UMass' coffin shut with 15 minutes left in the game.

LaTonya Johnson matched Kristofik's layup with one of her own, and then DeRoose nailed a jumper from just inside the 3-point line, to make it 48-26.

Tanya Hansen (21.3 points per game) scored three of her 21 points when she hit a layup and a foul shot which gave Rutgers a 25 point lead, 51-26, which was their final margin of victory.

"We have to put two halves together," Trish Riley lamented after Thursday's loss to West Virginia. "We play good ball for twenty minutes, and then we'll let down for ten minutes."

To be fair, this is a Lady Knights team that has never lost to the Minutewomen in 19 tries. Rutgers is also streaking towards their seventh consecutive NCAA berth, and is coached by Theresa Grentz, the coach of the United States women's basketball team in the Olympics this summer.

UMass, who has now lost four in a row, and 10 of 11, matched Rutgers point-for-point the rest of the game, but those five initial minutes in the first half simply buried the team underneath an uncatchable margin.

"I knew the first five minutes would be crucial, coming out, and we wanted to get a couple of buckets quick and not let them score," Riley said. "I don't think we had a big breakdown on defense. I think they came out and they really worked the ball, you know, picture-perfect — swing, swing-swing-swing — three."

One bright spot Saturday was the play of Laurie Dondarski, who came off the bench and scored 9 points, dished out 3 assists, and made two steals.

"They switched up their defense in the second half, and when somebody does that you have to take advantage. [Dondarski] definitely took advantage," O'Brien said.

UMass played great ball in the first half, leading early 11-9, but almost let the game slip away when Hansen scored on back-to-back possessions on a fallaway jumper and a baseline jumper, to give Rutgers a 24-13 lead with seven minutes left.

UMass countered, however, with a Moran jumper at the top of the key, a Riley layup, and a Cass Anderson basket to cut the lead to 24-19. DeRoose took it upon herself to hit a trey, but Moran countered on the next two possessions with a field goal and two free throws to cut the margin to four, 27-23.

"They came out flat and we really pounced on them," Nevarez said. "We really made them work in the first half."

The Lady Knights then finished the half on a 9-1 tear, during which the Minutewomen missed three foul shots.

Temple hoop game will remain in Cage

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts' men's basketball game against Temple University will be played at the originally scheduled site; Curry Hicks Cage, after officials reconsidered the possibility of moving it to the Springfield Civic Center based on student and staff response, inadequate staff and student safety.

Frank McInerney, UMass' Director of Athletics, made the decision late Friday morning.

"What it came down to," McInerney said, "was first, all the teams belong to the students, faculty and staff. The team is theirs and they should play here.

"Secondly, we don't have the staff that would even come close to the logistics to move the thousands of students. And third, there is a concern with the students' drinking alcoholic beverages and returning home on Route 91."

McInerney also said the school's conference, the Atlantic 10, expressed concern about the move and felt it was unfair to the schools that have to play in the Cage because of UMass' advantage there.

John Calipari, UMass' head coach, said after the Minutemen's home game against Rutgers on Thursday that he would recommend the game be played at the Cage.

The Athletic Department had planned on handing out questionnaires to the Cage's capacity crowd Thursday, but McInerney said the decision to not move the site was pretty much made before the game and was reinforced when the students began chanting, "Temple at the Cage."

The game's time, 4:30 p.m., and date, Feb. 16, will also remain the same.

Women's gymnastics finishes third at Pitt

BY JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Correspondent

Going into last Saturday's Pitt Invitational quad-meet at the University of Pittsburgh, University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics coach Alfie Mitchell thought that his team's chances of being 4-1 come Sunday morning were very good.

However, a stellar performance by the highly touted Pitt women's gymnastics squad coupled with a mediocre showing by the Minutewomen dimmed any hopes of this happening.

UMass finished a distant third with an overall score of 179.25 behind Pitt and the University of Rhode Island, which had scores of 181.35 and 179.25, respectively. Ball State finished fourth, scoring 178.70.

Pitt's Alisha Friend ran away with the all-around honors with a whopping score of 37.05 followed by teammate Kristin Brown, who finished second, scoring 36.75. Ball State's Cari Dubois took third place honors scoring 36.60.

The closest UMass competitor was freshman Gina Demeo who placed sixth with a 36.10. Tammy Marshall was seventh with a score of 36.00.

The vault exercise was UMass' best event despite the fact that URI's Erica Allocco and Shannon Erwin had the two best scores [9.60 and 9.65, respectively]. Sophomore Angela Jent had an impressive 9.55 for the Minutwomen; she was followed by Margaret Furtado and Marshall who scored 9.45 and 9.40, respectively.

Although Marshall had a 9.3 on the floor exercise, it was the Lady Panthers who stole the show again as they placed four people with scores above 9.5. Kristin Brown of Pitt had a high score of 9.65.

In the parallel bars, UMass' Demeo tied Pitt's Friend for the high individual score with a 9.3, but it was Ball State who took team honors in the event.

In the beam event, Pitt took team honors while UMass finished third.

Men's swim finishes strong

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team closed out its season with impressive victories over New Hampshire and Boston University this weekend, improving their final record to 12-2, second to Connecticut in the New England standings.

The Minutemen avenged last season's loss to Boston University by dismantling the Terriers by a score of 167.5-67.5. UMass swept six of 13 events, including the 1000-yard freestyle, 50 freestyle, 200 individual medley, 200 butterfly, 500 freestyle, and the 200 breastroke. The Minutemen also took first and second place in the 400 medley relay, the one meter dive and the three meter dive.

Each of the three seniors fared well swimming in their last meet for UMass. Chris Sullivan placed third in the 100 freestyle, Bill Chouinard finished first in the 200 breaststroke and Steve Myers took first in the one meter dive and second in the three meter dive.

Several other UMass swimmers set personal records,

Father Quigley awarded prize

Campus priest honored for outstanding leadership

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

One of the most beloved priests on the campus, Rev. J. Joseph Quigley, has been presented the most prestigious award given by the Catholic Campus Ministry Association.

"Joe Quigley is one of the most outstanding priests in the ministry of education," said Father Rick Tennet, director of CCMA at the University of New Hampshire at Durham.

Quigley received The Charles Forsyth Award during the closing ceremonies at the second annual national convention of the Catholic Campus Ministry Association in California on Jan. 7.

"He received a standing ovation from over 400 of his peers from all across the country at the convention," said Don McCrabb, executive director of the CCMA.

"It was very touching as he got up before the crowd and remembered the many people who helped him along the way," he said

When describing his position at UMass, Father Quigley said, "This is one of the most choice places to be as a priest."

"It is a real privilege to be in this job, especially if you like kids," he said.

Father Quigley was nominated for his outstanding leadership, for his directorship at Diocese of Springfield and his personnel contribution at the regional level of campus ministry.

"Joe Quigley has developed one of the most successful campus ministries programs in the nation, because he has provided an excellent physical plan, a good team of workers and a well-rounded menu," said McCrabb.

"It is well deserved and a long overdue honor for Father Quigley," said Audrey Anderson, the secretary of the Newman Center.

The CCMA established the Charles Forsyth Award in 1974 with Forsyth the first award recipient. Known for his many achievements in campus ministry, Forsyth began a special ministry to minority students and initiated counseling services for all students.

Father Quigley's home has been the Newman Center since it opened in April 1963. He has been a priest in the Amherst community for 31 years.

Born in Marblehead, the youngest of four children, he graduated from Ware High School in 1942. Father Quigley said he overcame great problems in self-esteem while growing up.

"As a kid I had a low opinion of myself," he said. "I used to wear coke bottle glasses, and I would have to wear them when I would go swimming," he said.

"People would laugh at me and point out to me that I was wearing them," Quigley said. "I felt I was a loser, I think that you call this type of feeling fatalism."

He was able to overcome his self-esteem problem while attending Fordham College.

Democrats spar with president

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democratic governors took over a White House ceremony yesterday and pummeled President Bush with criticism of his economic-revival plan. Bush demanded to know if Democrats wanted to raise taxes, close military bases and lay off workers.

The Democrats opened the surprise attack by accusing Bush of trying to stampede them into supporting his tax and spending plan, and the March 20 deadline he set for Congress to enact it.

They accused Bush of resorting to budget "gimmicks," warned that the nation was falling into "a sewer of debt," and called for higher taxes on the wealthy.

"There are some times and some places in an election year that we do have differences," said Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, incoming chairman of the National Governors' Association.

"More and more we're beginning to hear people say this sluggish economy is turning around," Bush said, citing drops in interest rates.

Under the White House format, television cameras and the press were to leave the room after Bush's remarks.

Romer raised his voice and said forcefully, "Could I ask the press not to leave yet?"

Bush relented. Romer said Bush's $1.52 trillion budget contained $40 billion in "gimmicks" and said, "We're concerned that some of those may end up on our backs." Romer also called for bigger military cuts beyond the $50 billion over five years announced by the president.

"Do you want it to be $100 billion, and if so, what bases do you want to close?" the president said heatedly. "What areas do you want to shut down? What weapon systems do want to knock off right now? Or do you want to lay ot the people?"

Romer replied that he was simply trying to make the point that there were alternative approaches.

Gov. George Sinner of North Dakota, another Democrat, told Bush, "I think you could tax the wealthy a lot more."

"If we continue into this sewer of debt, our children and the families that are suffering today, that's nothing compared to what these families of tomorrow will suffer,' Sinner said. "I for one will stand and say, 'Yes, I think we should raise [taxes].' "

Democratic Gov. Howard Dean of Vermont complained that Bush was cutting $500 million from a $1.5 billion program to help the needy buy home-heating oil. Dean said, "we would be devastated" if the cut were allowed to stand.

Budget Director Richard Darman indicated the administration might give in on the fuel program. "This is not one that we would, I think it's fair to say, fight and die over."

Bush rejected Sinner's proposal for a higher tax on the wealthy.

U.S. begins repatriation of Haitians

By MICHAEL NORTON
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The United States began its repatriation program for thousands of Haitian refugees Monday, turning over 381 people to Haitian authorities with $15 in their pockets and an uncertain future.

U.N. officials and human rights advocates warned that many of the 12,00 boat people in U.S. custody face death or intimidation at the hands of Haitian security forces if they return to their towns and villages.

Officials at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba said those who returned on two Coast Guard cutters did so voluntarily, while others did not want to go back.

Dozens in the first group said they had risked their lives fleeing in rickety boats to get away from Haiti's poverty and not political persecution.

The United States denied asylum to most intercepted Haitians, saying they were not political refugees as U.S. law requires. The Supreme Court opened the way Friday for their repatriation by overturning a federal judge's order that had blocked their return for months.

"Had we been in any other country, we would have had a chance," Florence Comeau of the Haitian Affairs Committee in New York said Monday. "The Cubans can come in any time. The Cubans are people, the Haitians are people, but one is light-skinned and the other is not."

In Washington, White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater said the repatriation was being monitored by U.S. Embassy officers as well as representatives of the Organization of American States and the Red Cross.

"We have received no credible reports of reprisals against any individual Haitians who attempted to reach the United States, including those who are repatriated after the coup that toppled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide on Sept. 30, Fitzwater said.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees issued a statement at its Geneva headquarters criticizing the repatriation, warning that many returnees could "be exposed to danger."

"Continuing reports of serious human rights abuses and violence by security forces since the overthrow of the democratically elected government of Haiti are cause for great concern," it said.

In London, the human rights group Amnesty International said the United States is responsible for safeguarding the Haitian boat people.

"We don't know that everyone is going to be arrested, tortured or killed, but it is certainly a risk," said spokeswoman Anita Tiessen. Amnesty reported last month more than 1,500 people had been killed in Haiti since the coup in a systematic campaign of political repression.

Lizzie Borden still questioned

Forensic expert looks into 100-year-old case

By TONY ROGERS
Associated Press

FALL RIVER — One-hundred years after Lizzie Borden was accused in the ax murders of her parents, a forensics expert scanned their graves with radar Monday for clues in one of America's most celebrated mysteries.

James E. Starrs searched the hill at Oak Grove Cemetery where Lizzie, her father, stepmother and sisters are buried. His first task was to find the parents' skulls, removed from the bodies and displayed by the prosecutor in the trial.

If the skulls are there, Starrs hopes to win permission from a court and Bordens' relatives to exhume them, hoping modern science might shed light on the case against Lizzie. She was acquitted in court but convicted in verse and in the minds of many of administering the famous "40 whacks."

Many theories have emerged about the crime that inspired 17 books, one movie and even a ballet. This year, a local author added an illegitimate brother to the suspects.

"I love a good mystery like everyone else," said Starrs, a professor of law and forensics science at George Washington University. "We're trying to give the Bordens a chance to say what really happened. It's like having a whole new jury in the case."

Andrew and Abby Gray Borden, his second wife, were killed on the sweltering morning of Aug. 4, 1892, Abby in an upstairs room and her husband on the sofa where he stretched out to take a nap.

Lizzie, a 32-year-old Sunday school teacher, was charged with the crime but was acquitted on June 30, 1893.

The radar machine found evidence of two burial sites where the skulls might lie, but Starrs said it will take at least a month to analyze the findings.

Starrs said he wants to see, among other things, if they match a shingling hatchet blade found at the Borden home and believed to be the murder weapon.

Starrs said he hopes to have concrete findings in time for an Aug. 4 conference marking the 100th anniversary of the crime. Starrs also has exhumed the body of Alfred Packer, the Colorado prospector suspected of resorting to cannibalism to keep alive during a snowstorm, and of Dr. Carl Austin Weiss, alleged assassin of Louisiana Sen. Huey Long.

"It was sort of like a carnival atmosphere," said Paul Fletcher, a planner of the August conference and a professor at Bristol Community College. "I was expecting to see someone selling popcorn."

"I just say let it rest," said Pat Richards, one of Fall River's park commissioners. "I wouldn't want someone digging up my body after 100 years."

Dahmer coherent, detective says

By LISA HOLEWA
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Jeffrey L. Dahmer was coherent when he detailed for police how he killed and dismembered 17 men and boys for his own self-gratification, a police detective testified yesterday.

Detective Dennis Murphy said during cross-examination at the serial killer's sanity trial that Dahmer was responsive and cooperative during the more than 60 hours of police interviews after his July 22 arrest.

"Was he ever out of touch with reality in any way you could detect?" prosecutor Carol White asked.

"No, he wasn't," Murphy replied.

Dahmer, 31, has pleaded guilty but insane to 15 murders. The jury will decide whether he will be sent to prison or a mental hospital.

Defense attorney Gerald Boyle said he would call experts to show Dahmer suffered from a disorder that compelled him to have sex with dead people.

But District Attorney E. Michael McCann said prosecution experts would testify Dahmer did not fit the legal definition of insanity.

Murphy began testimony yesterday by reading the final pages of Dahmer's confession. Later testimony was expected to focus on what mental disorder may have caused the killing spree.

The detective read portions of the confession that detailed how Dahmer met his first victim, a teen-age hitchhiker, in 1978 in his hometown of Bath, Ohio. Dahmer said he picked up Steven Hicks and took him back to the Dahmer family home, where he was living alone.

Dahmer remembered Hicks' name because "you don't forget your first one," Murphy quoted Dahmer as saying.

Dahmer told police he and Hicks went back to the house, had sex, drank and got into an argument. Dahmer hit Hicks with a barbell, then used the barbell to strangle Hicks, Murphy said.

During her cross-examination of Murphy, Ms. White passed around to the jury photos of each of Dahmer's victims.

Dahmer told police he killed the young males "for his own warped, selfish desire for self-gratification," Murphy quoted Dahmer as saying.

Dahmer told police he never tortured any of his victims before killing them. He had sex with 14 victims before death and five of the corpses, Murphy testified.

Candidates debate University issues

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

The six candidates for the vacant Amherst/Pelham state representative seat spoke yesterday at the Campus Center, discussing tuition retention, "campus voice" and other pressing issues related to the University of Massachusetts.

Democratic candidate Jon Hite said he is "an opponent of 100 percent tuition retention." He claimed he would fight for an amendment to any state budget which attempts to increase tuition retention, .

According to Gov. William Weld's plan, state appropriations to the University would be reduced by the amount of tuition which each of the University's five campusea would retain. At the present time, the campus retains about 30 percent of tuition raised.

"In these times full funding may sound good but it's not good enough," he said. "We don't have, in Massachusetts, the tradition and support to allow tuition retention to work."

Both Ellen Story and un-enrolled candidate Larry Kelley spoke in favor of tuition retention.

"My opponent's position is dead wrong and irresponsibly dangerous," said Story in response to Hite. "He advocates a position which is the 'Hite' of irresponsibility."

Story named other prestigious schools, including the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and the University of California at Berkeley, as running smoothly with some form of tuition retention.

"We are not in crisis today because of tuition retention," Story said. "Our appropriations have fallen, not because of tuition retention, but because we are in recession."

Kelley also spoke in favor of tuition retention, but for a different reason.

"To me the University should be looking more toward quality control," Kelley said, advocating an education which is high in quality as well as economical.

"I like tuition retention," said Kelley, who owns two local businesses. "To me it's a private sector kind of thing. And as a private sector guy, I like that."

"I do recognize the fact that the University of Massachusetts is the largest employer in Amherst, even in western Massachusetts," Kelley said, but, "I don't see myself as being a lap dog for the University."

"No matter who gets elected, we're not going to save the University. You're going to save the University," Kelley said later.

Co-moderator Tom Coish, a representative of the professional staff, asked the candidates about the lack of raises on campus for three years.

Democrat Norman Page, who works in the polymer science center at the University, said bluntly, "I think we have to fight the governor on this thing."

"Hold on. It's going to happen," said Republican candidate Mark Enoch, "Be grateful that you have jobs."

Kelley agreed with Enoch, arguing that a raise in salary could mean the loss of jobs considering the stagnant budget.

"Life is just a great big pie," said Kelley,"and everybody wants a piece."

Co-moderator Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Student Government Association, asked the candidates how to help the University become less "politically impotent" at the State House.

"It isn't up to the state legislators to do everything for everybody," said Democratic candidate Terry Franklin.

"You have to organize yourselves. We need more protests up in Boston," Franklin said.

UM grad embarks on Peace Corps journey

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

The scarcity of jobs in the employment market today makes most college students shudder when they think about graduation, but at least one University of Massachusetts graduate won't be jobless by March.

Dawn Cavallaro of Malden, who earned her bachelor of science degree in plant and soil science last February, said she joined the Peace Corps for many reasons.

"I see [joining the Peace Corps] as an opportunity to help improve a country's ways," said Cavallaro, 24.

The Peace Corps also offers the chance for a person to get to know themselves, she added. "This is because you have so much time on your hands and are so isolated from the rest of the world," Cavallaro said.

"[The Peace Corps] is a test to your self-adjustment skills and life becomes more of a survival thing," said Cavallaro, who will be working in South American country of Bolivia. Many people who served for the Peace Corps say that while it is the best thing they ever did, it is also the most frustrating, she said.

The toughest aspect of the job is trying to teach the older people of a village to change their ways, she said. "You must be a person who is patient, flexible and can represent the United States in a peaceful sense," she said.

The Peace Corps was founded in 1961 at the initiative of President John F. Kennedy.

Cavallaro said she would be making enough money per month to pay for food, shelter and other essentials. "I will be making much more money than the people I will be helping at the village," she added.

She will aid in the production of both fruit and forest tree use in Bolivia.

At the end of her two-year service Cavallaro will receive an additional $5,000 to help re-establish herself.

"I will be living in a mud hut that has no electricity or running water. I'll also be washing my clothes on rocks, " she said. By living with the people they serve the Peace Corps representative is more readily accepted, said Cavallaro.

She suggests joining the Peace Corps when you are still young, "It is an excellent experience and looks great on a resume."

Since the federal government funds the Peace Corps, "A person who has served in the Peace Corps and is applying for a government-affiliated job will be regarded more highly than a person who hasn't served in the Peace Corps," she said.

She said the Peace Corps is also more self-satisfying than a regular job.

"Instead of just giving donations to some organization and never personally seeing the results, the Peace Corps gives people a chance to do [the work] themselves," said Cavallaro.

Study used to diagnose dairy farm crisis in Mass.

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

A state of emergency has been declared for the Massachusetts dairy farm industry, and a University of Massachusetts study conducted last summer has proven instrumental in helping diagnose and treat the crisis.

The study was conducted last summer by Daniel Lass, an associate professor in the Department of Resource Economics, and several of his students. Lass and his students used large amounts of data to design a forecasting model on the computer, and the conclusion was not an encouraging one.

"I've been intrigued with the dairy industry's problems for some time now," said Lass, who grew up on a dairy farm in New York State. "It's a crisis and a challenge."

According to the study, approximately 21 to 26 percent of Massachusetts dairy farms are in danger of going out of business in 1992. If 1992 milk prices stay at or near 1991 levels, and farmers' costs go up an expected 2 to 2.5 percent, approximately 80 farms could go out of business. If costs go up as much as 5 percent, the study predicts as many as 100 farms could go out of business.

The Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture called several public hearings last fall to discuss the crisis around the time the results of the study came out. Lass testified at one of the hearings, citing his study. It was after the final hearing that an official state of emergency was declared for the situation.

James Butler, a senior economics major who assisted Lass, said, "Our findings from the study were certainly very timely, coming out around the time the hearings were being initiated. I'm really pleased it could do some good."

The study found that a hypothetical 8-cent-per-gallon tax imposed on milk vendors would generate $12.4 million in revenue. After a 15-percent deduction for administrative costs, the remaining $10.5 million would be distributed to farmers, representing more than $27,000 additional income for each farmer.

The Department of Food and Agriculture is currently in the process of investigating what actions it will take to alleviate the crisis. Assistant Department Commissioner Charles Cosda said the department has been in contact with handlers and retailers to discuss the possibility of an added fee levied on milk, but it will not necessarily be called a tax.

"A few cents may be added to the milk cost for the vendors, but it may not even affect the store price for the

"When I was in college I met a teacher who told me "if you do your work, then you do not have to worry about the results," Quigley said. "All God ask's of you is to try your best and this became the big change in my life right there."

Quigley has seen many changes in the student attitudes over the years he has spent on this campus. "There has been a definite change in religious customs over the years," he said.

"The grown up factor is there now because young adults are taking responsibility for their own actions," Quigley said.

"The Lord wants us to be grown up people, and if you want to sin then that is your freedom," he said. "I personally believe that sinning is wrong but at least young adults are taking responsibility for their actions," he said.

Lisa Brochu, a sophomore communications major said, "Father Quigley is the most wonderful priest as far as dealing with youths today." She was quick to add, "He will do anything for anyone who needs help."

"Father Quigley is a tremendous contribution to this campus because of his caring and his effective leadership." Chancellor Richard O'Brien said, "I know no one who is more widely loved and respected."

Redistricting fight winds up in fed court

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The fight between Democrats and Republicans over how to redraw Massachusetts' congressional districts has landed in federal court, and no major figure in either party is surprised.

Gov. William F. Weld and Rep. James Brett (D-Boston), House chairman of the Redistricting Committee, both had speculated the case would finally be decided in court.

House Speaker Charles Flaherty (D-Cambridge) on Monday left open the possibility of a compromise, but made no promises.

The Democratic-controlled Legislature passed a plan that provided maximum protection to the state's 11 Democratic congressmen. Their plan would require only one head-to-head matchup, Chester Atkins of Concord versus Joseph Early of Worcester.

Since the state is losing one congressional seat, there was no way to avoid at least one Democratic primary between incumbents.

A Republican State Committee-sanctioned plan would have eight of the incumbents running against each other in primaries.

A plan supported by GOP Gov. Weld would cut that number to five, and one, Brian Donnelly of Boston's Dorchester section, could move to an open district that includes many of the South Shore

Bilingual Colonial Program corrupt

On Nov. 4, 1991, a group of self-proclaimed "O'Brien Wanna-Be's" decided to close the Latin American Cultural Center, without the knowledge, support nor consent of the herein mentioned student community. By manipulating, using and playing with a few "little, ignorant toy soldiers," the Bilingual Colonial Program's leaders have once again proven their corruptive, inefficient, cowardly, ignorant and disgraceful prowess. The evidence can't be clearer, yet I ask of you to seek your own truth and come to your own conclusions, for this is my opinion.

In the first place, how are we supposed to believe that a group of leaders (BCP) who have worked for years within this labyrinth, and claim to have been at the forefront of all sorts of civil/social movements, are incapable of educating their "children" in the art of protest? Why weren't the media, telecommunications systems, and simple, cost-free mailing resources used to inform/educate our communities? Why couldn't anybody make any publicity days in advance, and inform the people of what was going on?

Secondly, a careful analyses of the demands will expose BCP's ludicrous attempt to perpetuate the Latin American community's oppression on campus. For example, of the immediate demands, number II is a blatant attempt, on behalf of the BCP, to steal the students' money. Was number VII an attempt to get their "Gold Cards" activated, in order to travel to Puerto Rico, Central America and around the U.S., with UMass money, our money?

As for the "Long Range" demands, for the first, I ask: Why not incorporate other socially stigmatized and oppressed groups into their union? The second demand should actually read: "Why not conduct a legal audit on the BCP's expenses, and how the use of our money is legitimized." The fourth demand implies the re-education of an oppressive society, it implies the rewriting of history by the losers: the oppressed, us.

In conclusion, the BCP institution is cowardly, using elitist, caudillo opportunistic kids to pillage the little economic resources available to the Latin American student body. They need to be reminded that it's not the arrow that makes the archer, but the archer's own skill. While this letter was written last semester, and many of the demands have already since been conceded, it must be clear that the Latin American community has been alienated from this political process. This movement has arbitrarily excluded and established an illusory conception of a Puerto Rican-Centrist conception of the Latin American realities.

Pro-life...Pro-Choice...just relax

OK, abortion. I'm tired of hearing about it, so I'm throwing my two cents in. I don't care what you think of my writing style; I'm not an English major. Just, everybody, shut up and think a minute.

Abortion is murder. Oh, shut up and listen! But can we prove it? No. Can we legislate to enforce something we can't prove? No. Can we frown on it in society, in a kind of "poor sap needs an abortion, oh well" sort of way? Sure.

Do I offend? Harsh. You can't turn your head on murder? Why not? It's been going on as long as the human race has lived. How about war? That gets justified in all sorts of twisted ways, but basically, it is mass murder by governments. Only one person dies in an abortion. And nowhere else in the world or even the U.S. of the past has abortion been such an issue.

But it's the emotional rhetoric that has made it such an issue. The problem is, it takes such courage to face the pro-lifers that women come away almost proud of having an abortion. Oh, not the ones I've known, but those pro-choicers seem damn proud. Or haven't they gone through the process?

Anyway, there seems to be this kind of pride, "I exercised my choice, so there!" That's sick. What were you doing in the first place? A good party? A bad date? A boyfriend you shouldn't have trusted? 'Cause, guys and gals, there are some very effective ways of preventing pregnancy that are a whole bunch more pleasant than getting the kid sucked or pushed out while it still looks like an amoeba. Nice imagery, huh?

So why be proud of your choice? The whole reason you exercised it was 'cause you [expletive] up. Or can't I say that? Oh well. Now, I'm not saying don't get an abortion. Hell, if I [expletive] up, my girlfriend and I have already agreed the kid doesn't stand a chance. But that doesn't mean either of us would be comfortable with our choice. And that's as it should be.

All the rhetoric works in the pro-choice favor. It just gets people all pissed off, so they just get ignored. Almost 75 percent of the American population is against abortion personally, but for a woman's right to choose. So there's our consensus. Don't make it illegal. Just don't do it. (Sorry, Nike.)

I left my heart in Hadley

I crossed the Atlantic Ocean in order to see America. The Great Land of Opportunity and Adventure, home of the hot dog, the A-Team, Dolly Parton, cowboys, Jack Kerouac, Hunter S. Thompson.

Imagine my dismay upon arriving in the Pioneer Valley, a place more anglicized than England could ever aspire to be. I took it well, all things considered I'd adjusted before I'd arrived.

I gave up my search for the America I'd learned to love and fear, and threw myself somewhat half-heartedly into valley life, vowing to be less susceptible to British television on my return home.

Olivia Stewart-Liberty

This semester brought with it an experience that I'd like to share. Yes, finally, after months of disillusionment and a trip to the laundromat, I discovered My America. The America to which I'd been party only in my wildest dreams.

My thanks go entirely to "The Boys from the East Coast" who, last week, gave me hope that the America for which I yearn does exist and can be found, even here.

I arrived in time to see Timmy sweating and thrusting on a platform, behind a veil of teased and coiffeured hair which throbbed in time to the disco beat. There he pulsated before my eyes, sporting nothing but a G-string of palest pink satin. One hundred and fifty women were frenzied in the front row, reaching onto the stage to touch the writhing beauty.

"No touching!" interjected the slick commentator, "Now, which of you loverrrly ladies would like to take Timmy home with you tonight?", he purred.

"Me, me, meeeee", we gasped in unison, as our prize smiled appealingly from his horizontal position above.

Reaching forward, Timmy languorously plucked a pair of spectacles from the front row. He rubbed the glasses rhythmically against his single item of clothing before handing them back to their ecstatic owner.

"I wanna here you sssssCREAM" crooned our host, "I wanna here you sssssCREAM." We screamed. Timmy leaped the front row and there he stood, resplendent in his fleshy glory: as hairless as a baby, as shiny as a seal, and all ours for one dollar.

Bills waved high above the heads, frantically and greedily.

"Only one dollar to touch Timmy!", hissed the commentator.

Soon Timmy was gloriously decked in a moist skirt of sweating bills as maidens panted to receive his favors. Timmy remained polite and courteous despite all the excitement, pausing at each table in turn, to twitch his pectorals, or perform some other joy-giving party trick, bestowing kisses wherever a dollar bill showed.

Best came last, and stole my heart.

Nicko, of Chippendale fame, was surely the handsomest heartthrob to hit Hadley for some time. Clad in leather, my hero ripped his trousers off (which to my astonishment seemed to be fastened with velcro at the side-seams). There he stood, as naked as the day he was born, but for a simulated leopard thong. A roar hit the ceiling as the leopard hit the floor. There pranced my prince in a tiny white item, liberally decorated with lipstick kisses.

My number was up, my sweating hand waving my wallet directly in Nicko's line of vision. To my dismay, a front row enthusiast had already neatly splayed a thick wad of bank notes in Nicko's frontispiece. Unable to better such generosity, I resigned myself to the standard one-dollar deal.

Unfortunately, my life is still dictated by the PVTA schedule. I was unable to stay for the raffle, to see who became the proud owner of Timmy's pale pink G-string. But I left Hadley that night filled with hopes for the future, and a warm glow deep within. I still have a picture of Nicko which I look at occasionally, to remind myself that that whole fabulous night was not just a dream.

Morrison talks politics

I recently visited the Pere Lachaise cemetery in Paris, and had a very nice conversation with Jim Morrison. We sat down with a couple of bottles of wine and basically caught up on things. He says, "Hell ain't that bad. In fact, it's kinda cool." He told me that for kicks, he and Bon Scott used to get drunk, sneak up to heaven, and send messages to Oral Roberts on the big transmitter. That is, until they were banished for a week to the ninth circle of hell, absolute sobriety, which Jim could only describe as razors crawling through your skin and ripping your insides to shreds.

Michael Shina

This is what he had to say about David Duke: "A man like David Duke cannot be ignored, or put aside as a fluke. Nor can he be blamed for creating the problem. David Duke is a symptom, a sign of the times. He appeals to an increasing number of disgruntled whites who feel that they are being left out of the American dream, that they have been abandoned by the treacherous worms in Washington and left to wallow alone with no hope of salvation. People are watching their backs, worried that their once safe and comfortable lives may come crashing down at any moment, transformed into a seething den of fear, uncertainty and stagnation. Some see the end of the prospect of upward mobility that has always been taken for granted, a better life than that of their parents. They are realizing the realities of a changing world order.

No one will admit it, but David Duke's policies appeal to a very large percentage in this country, and are represented by all types of individuals, regardless of class or level of education. He is a vile worm whose doctored face shines in a sort of insane purity, offering the right words, salvation, for those who want to hear.

The issues that he puts forth cannot be ignored in the upcoming election. They must be addressed, and compromises must be made. Washington, however, has continued to show itself as an insidious den of cowards, who will probably continue to bypass these issues and simply write off Duke as a loon. There is hope, though. When given the choice between a racist and a crook, the people of Louisiana opted for the crook. And there are plenty of crooks in politics. In a world of lesser evils, there really is no winner."

With that, Morrison informed me that my question was becoming tiresome. And besides, JFK was having a pool party that he really didn't want to miss. Hell, I could even hear the faint wails of Teddy Roosevelt whooping it up in a Bull-Moose frenzy.

. . .Just for laughs, I would love to see Pat Buchanan debate Bush. It would be worse than anything seen on "Saturday Night Live."

Buchanan is many things, and smart is definitely one of them. He's been around the block a few times, and has always come out unscathed. He'd chew Bush up and spit him out like a bad piece of cucumber. Anyone who has seen the MacLaughlin Group knows what a sharp, acrid tongue Buchanan can unleash at will. Just something to ponder, I guess.

Joseph Kennedy II also could move, most likely into a district where he would challenge Atkins, under the Weld plan.

Joseph Moakley would remain in the single Boston district under Weld's scenario.

Weld sent back the Democratic plan to the Legislature with his plan proposed as an amendment.

Flaherty said that would come up in the House only if an agreement has been reached between Democratic legislative leaders and the Republican governor.

"I think we all want to avoid it being decided by the courts," Flaherty said, adding he felt the Democratic plan was "fair and objective" and would withstand court scrutiny.

Cruisin' through the GameBoy galaxy

DAVID WEIZEL
Special to the Collegian

Altered Space* for Nintendo GameBoy.
Sony Imagesoft, $30

Humphrey, "a brave astronaut," is gallopin' the galaxy, just scopin' the scanners, when— SPLORF!— the guy gets etherized and whisked away by those lizard sneaks, the Zaks.

As a specimen? For kicks? Did they leave him his wristwatch?

Humphrey does wake up only to find himself prisoner in the Zakmobile's cargohold. The Zaks, evil scourges of the universe, have eight levels of stomping ground, and every deck is jam-packed with interstellar intensity. It's tough roamin' in here, so between you and your GameBoy, Humphrey could use a hand.

Your ultimate goal is the escape pod on the top level, and with no signs saying "This Way to the Elevators," believe you me, it's a real trick! Even worse, not only is this place strictly self serve, it's also lousy on atmosphere.

Since the Zaks don't breathe the same stuff as our fateful hero, ol' Humph's permanent wardrobe is a three-piece spacesuit with a matching bubble helmet. He must always be on the lookout for extra air tanks, tossed aside in the strangest and most precarious of places.

"Altered Space" is in dazzling 3-D perspective, and the screen is crammed with an eye-popping amount of detail (a game magnifier would be a welcome sight for sore eyes here).

You see only one room at a time— as you enter them— and small flashing arrows indicate any doorways outside the angle of your vision. And you've got company, too.

Most of the rooms have some type of droid or creature bopping around in them. There's maintenance, security, and repair droids, some cheerful, bouncing oddballs called Garffs, and even an occasional Zak or two.

Garffs like to land on your head and doze off with a cloud of 'ZZZZZ's. They may slow you down a bit, but otherwise, they're harmless. All droids, on the other hand, are much more dangerous to your health. Bump into any of 'em, and you can kiss your air goodbye— 10 units to be exact.

There are also lots of nasty gleaming spikes everywhere, which'll airbrush away 10 more units of air per pop. Maximum air is 99 units, so as knocking around goes, it's tanks, but no tanks.

You'll also get zonked by Zaks, which strategically shadow Humphrey's every move. Smack into a Zak and

WAMH & Pearl St. present a club for alternative music

By DAVID DEMERJIAN
Collegian Staff

Get ready, you alternative and industrial music fans. On Thursday, Feb. 6, The Pearl St. Nightclub and WAMH radio present "Club Sin", which is being billed as "a celebration of alternative music and industrial noise".

"Club Sin" will feature a huge variety of music: everything from techno and industrial, to punk and new wave.

The music will be spun by Juan Parada, program director at WAMH, and by disk jockey Matt Gold, who is an alumni of WAMH.

Epic Records will also be there, giving away Shamen CD's, cassettes and posters.

The Shamen, a hot industrial band who recently scored with the hit single "Move Any Mountain (Progen 91)", have just released their second single, "Make It Mine".

The idea for "Club Sin" came from Margaret Gates and others at WAMH.

The talent coordinator at Pearl St., Jon Peters says, "The people at WAMH felt that there was no outlet for industrial dancing in the area. There really aren't any other clubs providing this kind of music."

WAMH will be providing both the music and the sound system for "Club Sin."

"Club Sin" will be held downstairs at Pearl St. at 9 p.m., directly after The "Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians" show.

Coupons are available for one dollar off "Club Sin" admission at the following locations: For The Record, Amherst, Al-bums, Amherst, Main St. Records, Northampton, and Dynamite Records, Northampton.

If "Club Sin" is successful, there are plans to offer it on a more regular basis.

Says Margaret Gates, who is the promotions director at WAMH and one of the organizers of the event: "We really would like to offer "Club Sin" on a regular basis.'

"If it is successful, we are going to start a committee of people from the valley to help us put together the next one."

Anyone interested in getting involved with "Club Sin" should contact Margaret Gates or Eric Keenagen at WAMH. The number at WAMH is 542-2224.

Admission to "Club Sin" will be free to those with Robin Hitchcock ticket stubs. For those without stubs, admission is $5.00 for ages 18-21 and $3.00 for those 21 plus. The event will run until a.m.

Morning Breakthrough!
COLLEGE STUDENT TURNS FOUR YEARS OF BLUE BOOKS INTO GOLD!
Stop by ArtCarved's display to relive your college memories and receive a special discount.
A college student with a double major in physics and alchemy shocked the academic community by announcing that four years of blue books and all the memories that go with them could be turned into gold.
"I didn't know what people were doing trying to turn lead into gold, but obviously they didn't know about ArtCarved. I took one look at their big selection of men's and women's gold rings and picked one. It was easy. ArtCarved also gave me lots of custom options to remember my four years and a lifetime guarantee. I don't know any physicist who can do that," said the ebullient senior.
The big-hearted senior plans to share this remarkable discovery at the next meeting of the Future Physicists of America.

Fast Track MEET

Seize the Day

You want to be among the top-earning college graduates in 1992? Then you better move fast.

Taco Bell Corporation is ready to pick the winners from this year's cream of the crop...right now, for General Business Management opportunities.

Just set your sights on: ❑ Autonomy and responsibility from the word "go". ❑ "Ownership" of a million dollar business. ❑ Comprehensive benefits, including PepsiCo stock options. ❑ A competitive compensation package which includes an incentive program for top performers. Not bad for beginners.

We're a major player in Fortune 50 PepsiCo Inc.'s portfolio. By 1995 we'll have over 7,000 points of distribution. And system sales in excess of $6 billion.

This dynamic growth means that the real career opportunities are to be found in running the business. Our business.

So seize the day when we hold our Fast Track Meet. And get ready for accelerated growth.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day for meditating on the future. Get to the heart of a matter, even if you may not like what you find out. A young person teaches you new tricks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Artistic pursuits should prove very rewarding. Do your best to support someone in need of encouragement. Tomorrow brings several important choices. Be a decision maker.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be aware of possible errors in a business report or billing statement. It is essential you correct any mistakes as soon as possible. Avoid repeating gossip or others could point an accusing finger your way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A health matter may require immediate attention. Do whatever is necessary to protect yourself. Conferences held during afternoon hours will result in new cooperation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Curb your impatience with your work associates today. Don't annoy older, wiser brother. Travel is best postponed. Review your options if you feel that you are spinning your wheels.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cancellations could work in your favor in the long run. An out-of-court settlement is possible. Your keen attention to detail pays off. Protect your health. Keep a dental or medical appointment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Let other people take the lead in both business and romance today. This is not a good time to negotiate agreements or sign contracts. Sit back quietly and watch your associates' maneuvers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Career progress comes when you act more self-reliant. Show those in power what you can accomplish. Constructive changes are in the wind. Family and friends are your biggest boosters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Forward motion is essential at this time. You can no longer postpone acting on recently made decisions. A child enters your life with a bang. Spruce up your living quarters.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Fate places you in the driver's seat at work. Adult offspring cannot be pushed into being successful. Be as patient as possible with them. Take a break and visit friends tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid dwelling on your emotional state today. Plunge into work and creativity! Getting the job done will boost your spirits. Have a heart-to-heart talk with your mate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your career regains its momentum. An influential person is in your corner. Think twice about attempting to hide the truth from your family. You will suffer if rumors spread.

lead the league in scoring with 225 goals [4.4 per game].

Roadkill: The Quebec Nordiques are 0-20-5 away from Le Collisee. Only the San Jose Sharks can compare, having a 2-23-2 mark on the road. Maybe these are extreme arguments for home-ice advantage, but they illustrate the problem very well.

Ice conditions, the way the puck bounces off the boards in different arenas, hostile crowds — these factors contribute to the difficulty of winning away matches consistently for hockey teams in the NHL.

Only six of 22 NHL teams have winning records away from home ice. The supposedly invincible Canadiens are only 12-11-3 away from the Forum.

Conventional wisdom accounts for this difficulty, however. The tried 'n' true argument says if you win half your games on the road and two-thirds of your home games, you're on your way to the Stanley Cup.

Fish out of water: Yes, I know Sharks don't really count as fish, but oh well. In case anyone cares anymore outside the Bay Area, the Sharks are a dismal 11-37-4 — a whopping .211 winning percentage. They have scored fewer goals [a scant 129] and let up more scores [228] than anyone else. Just like everyone thought they would. They might not be fish, but they sure smell that way.

When will San Jose be competitive? When two more expansion clubs — Ottawa and Tampa Bay — enter the league in 1993.

Okay, I'll stop busting on the Sharks because, as a colleague said yesterday, "They'll win the Cup. In 20 years."

you'll lose even more life-giving gasps!

Quick! Remember that room with the spare air? It was back, uh, somewhere around here. Yep, map-making is definitely essential to "Altered Space." So much so that Sony Imagesoft even offers to send you a free strategy guide, with floorplans and item locations, when you mail in a postcard from the game box.

Handy help for Humphrey is scattered about the ship; circuit breakers to stop droid, stun guns to freeze Zaks, and particle disruptors to blow up airborne mines. Maybe even a couple of keys, too (hint-hint).

In many rooms there are also floating blocks, some of which move, and others that are stationary. They make a good stepping stone over them sharp, sharp spikes, but they're kinda hard to hopscotch.

"Altered Space" gives you that early childhood rush you might remember from sneaking down to watch Saturday morning cartoons while Mom and Dad are still snoring safely in bed.

Take an A+ animation experience, add a soundtrack that sounds like a mix between Tom and Jerry and Dr. Who, and you've got some gaming that's out of this world!

The only complaint I have to register is that no matter where you gasp your last breath, once you perish, it's back to square one, the cargohold. But as annoying as scratch-start can be, they don't ruin the game.

The only thing this game will deprive you of is sleep. Once you're plugged in, it's tough to tear free while the stars are still out.

So get lost in "Altered Space," a game that'll leave you breathless. And have a great escape!

Welcome to American Express

You've Just Been Cleared For Take Off.

You can get a lot more out of life when you set your sights a little higher. Which is what applying for the American Express® Card is all about. When you get the Card, it's easier to do the things you want to do. And with the student savings that come along with it, you can do even more.

Fly roundtrip on Continental for less than $100 each way.

Student Cardmembers receive four travel certificates. They can be used to fly anywhere Continental Airlines flies in the 48 contiguous United States. Two for the school year, and two for the summer.*

Depending on where you fly, each school year travel certificate is good for $129 or $189 roundtrip—and each summer travel certificate is good for $149 or $199 roundtrip.

Savings that upgrade your lifestyle.

As a student Cardmember you get more than great travel savings. You also save money on everything from clothing to long distance phone calls. All for a $55 annual fee.

Obviously, savings like these say a lot about the value of the Card. And having the Card will say a lot about you. For one thing it says you have a handle on what you spend, so you don't have to carry over a balance. It also says you're smart enough not to pay interest charges that can really add up.

So take a few minutes now to call (have your bank address and account number ready), and apply for the American Express Card.

With all that the Card offers you, not even the sky is the limit.

THE CARD.

O'Brien. "We'll try to slow them down and keep them in a half-court game."

The Minutewomen hope to have point guard Trish Riley back at full strength to battle Rhode Island. Riley had a sore back and played limited time in last Saturday's game against Rutgers.

O'Brien said the game will come down to how well the Minutewomen can rebound. But rebounding did not help UMass last Saturday, when they led the larger Rutgers team in rebounding, but still fell by 25 points.

Bruins need home ice for playoff race

If the Boston Bruins hope to overtake the Montreal Canadiens in the Adams Division standings, they had better do it soon.

In the National Hockey League, where 16 of 22 teams make the playoffs, you don't play the regular season in hopes of qualifying — unless you're really awful. You play for home-ice advantage in the playoffs. When you're going up against a tough opponent, having the home ice can mean the difference between a conference championship and a first-round exit.

Boston's hopes of getting close to winning a Stanley Cup hinges on beating Montreal in the playoffs, pure and simple. Consider the Habs are 20-7-1 at the Montreal Forum, and home ice becomes imperative for the Bruins. That means finishing the season in first place.

Greg Sukiennik

Boston has 59 points. Montreal has 68. There's half a season left. The B's need to make a move now, before the Canadiens are out of reach.

Secondly, the Bruins would much rather face the Hartford Whalers than the Buffalo Sabres in the first round. Not only is Hartford playing like a beached whale [15-25-8, 38 points], the Civic Center might as well be a home arena for the Bruins, whose fans fill half the place when they play there.

Elsewhere in the NHL: Mediocrity reigns in the Smythe Division, where the season's biggest surprise, the Vancouver Canucks, are running away with the title while the rest struggle along at the .500 mark.

Who would have thought the Los Angeles Kings would only be as good as the Winnipeg Jets? Or that Calgary and Edmonton would have self-destructed the way they did? Still, it means nothing until the playoffs start. Vancouver's playoff experience is minimal, even with home ice. While the Canucks are definitely for real, an upset isn't out of the question.

The Kings seemed poised for a great season, with Jari Kurri joining Wayne Gretzky, Luc Robataille and Tony Granato. But the Kings still can't play defense. Among teams in playoff contention, only the Pittsburgh Penguins have let up more goals than L.A. The Pens have let up 196 scores, while the Kings have watched the wrong goal light go off 193 times.

In contrast, Adams division leader Montreal has only let up 128 goals. Vancouver has only allowed 146. Defense will usually prevail come playoff time, unless you're the Penguins and you

Minutemen face Bonnies

UMass goes for 6th conference win of the season

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

It's games like tonight in Olean, N.Y. against teams like St. Bonaventure (7:35 p.m.) that can drive a coach to drink.

The University of Massachusetts basketball team (17-4, 5-3 in the Atlantic 10) is heading towards its first NCAA tournament berth since 1962. In contrast, St. Bonaventure (7-11, 1-6) is dead last in the A-10 and destined to play opening night of the A-10 tournament, a night the top seven teams take off.

"The games against St. Bonaventure are big games," said UMass coach John Calipari. "They are just as big as the Temple game. Because if we can't beat Temple, we have got to beat everyone else."

Including tonight's game, the Minutemen have eight games left, four on the road (one at West Virginia) and four at home, the most notable on Feb. 16 against Temple.

How many wins will it take for the Minutemen to make the NCAA tournament?

"There is no magic number," Calipari said. "I think we have to have a winning record in the league and win a game in the [A-10] tournament."

With 17 wins and eight games remaining, the general consensus is UMass will have between 22 and 24 wins. And while that may seem like a lock to make the tournament, in the past, teams have been bumped by the selection committee, that based upon their record should have been in the "Big Show."

Last season, Fordham, which plays in the Patriot League, won 24 games and was passed to the NIT, along with Ball State, a 21-game winner.

In his three-plus seasons with the Minutemen, Calipari's teams have a 5-1 record against the Bonnies.

"I haven't seen them [St. Bonaventure] play much," Calipari said. "I'm more worried about the way my team plays. If we play the way we can, we should be all right."

The Bonnies lone win in the A-10 came against St. Joseph's, 84-75.

Game Notes: The game can be heard on WMUA (91.1 FM) with Kevin Herlihy and Jeremy Reichman or on WHMP (99.3 FM) with George Miller and Howard Davis.

Minutewomen keep searching for elusive first Atlantic 10 win

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team looks for their first victory in its eighth Atlantic 10 Conference game against Rhode Island tonight at 7 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Rhode Island (6-12, 2-5 in the A-10) is in a somewhat similar position as UMass, as both teams have struggled in their A-10 endeavours.

The Minutewomen (4-14, 0-7 in the A-10) have not performed well in Conference play, losing by margins of 11 or more. In their first contest, the WRams soundly defeated the Minutewomen in Kingston, 71-54. Point guard Anne Kelsen led the WRams to victory with 17 points, and the junior will be the key to URI's chances tonight, according to WRam assistant coach Kelly Greenberg.

"I think this year [Anne] has been our most steady player," Greenberg said. "She will be the key to us winning."

Kelsen, who was named the A-10 Co-Player-of-the-Week earlier this year, leads the WRams in points, assists, steals and 3-pointers. Kelsen is averaging 16.6 points and 4.8 assists per game, has 86 assists and has 12 treys on the season.

The WRams also have a strong supporting cast. Freshman Rebecca Bright has been a pleasant surprise for Rhode Island, as she is averaging 13.2 points and 7.7 rebounds per game.

"Being only a freshman, Rebecca [Bright] has performed well for us this year," Greenberg said of Bright, who has won three A-10 Freshman-of-the-Week honors.

Rhode Island will try to fast-break, according to Greenberg, using its speed against the Minutewomen. O'Brien said UMass will look to slow the game down and play a ball-controlled offense.

"I think we'd like to play an up-tempo game, but it depends on which team is able to dictate the pace," said Greenberg.

"If they want to run, it will probably hurt us," said

Track teams sprint to successful weekend

• Simao keys UMass' victory at UNH

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Heading to Durham, N.H. on Friday night, the University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team put its perfect 6-0 record on the line in what promised to be the Minutemen's toughest meet of the young season.

The Minutemen left the University of New Hampshire with their perfect record still intact, as they edged the host Wildcats 75-69, in a meet Coach Ken O'Brien called, "Highly emotional, probably the best meet we've had in years."

The Minutemen fell behind early to the Wildcats, losing four of the first five events before sophomore shot putter Nelson Simao won a hotly contested event that seemed to kick the Minutemen into high gear. UMass scored 57 of their 75 total points in the final 11 events to overtake UNH and Holy Cross.

"I think Nelson's win probably started turning things around for us," O'Brien said. "He won a tightly contested event, and then Brian King got his nose out in front of the UNH kid in the 500, and stayed there."

After King and Simao had won their respective events, UMass responded, as Craig Cormier and Joe Kourafas won their respective events to close the New Hampshire lead to one.

"Our kids responded to the two sophomores' performances and we started piling up the points," O'Brien said. "After that, it came down to who won the two relays and we pulled it out."

Kourafas' win left him undefeated on the season in the high jump, as well as leaving him in the team lead for points with 21.

Other first place finishers for the Minutemen included Mike Blakeslee and Jeffrey White

"New Hampshire was probably the second strongest team we'll face before our championship season starts," O'Brien said. "We put together a solid team effort."

"Individually, I don't think we'd outclass a lot of teams in New England, but we're hard-nosed and we come out in the second and third races and beat you."

• Women beat Dartmouth and Vermont

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

When University of Massachusetts women's track coach Julie LaFreniere looked at the schedule and saw a Feb. 1 meet with Dartmouth, Holy Cross and Vermont she could've all but banked on three wins.

However, at the last minute, Holy Cross backed out and was replaced by the five time defending New England champion University of Connecticut Huskies, who had already beaten the Minutewomen by 52 points earlier in the year at a meet in South Kingston, R.I.

This time, UConn matched it's previous output, defeating the Minutewomen in a meet LaFreniere called, "Almost impossible to win." UConn also rolled over Dartmouth and Vermont.

"I don't like going to a meet I know we really can't win," LaFreniere said. "It's not good for the women. UConn is virtually unbeatable, they only have one or two weaknesses." The Minutewomen found those few weaknesses, garnering four first place finishes en route to a second place finish, upping their record to 11-5 on the season.

First place finishes went to Lee Ann Ambrose, Kelly Liljeblad, Janey Meeks, and the 2-mile relay team of Becky Johnson, Maureen Meldrim, and the Liljeblad twins, Kim and Kelly.

"I'd have to say that Kelly and Janey were the stars of this one," LaFreniere said. "Kelly's running fantastic, and Janey still hasn't lost in the triple jump."

Earlier in the season, over winter break, the Minutewomen saw perhaps their finest performance of the season, when they captured the Bates Invitational with wins over Bates, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Fitchburg State, Southern Maine, UMaine-Orono and UMass-Lowell.

The meet saw the Minutewomen score a season high 168 points, while qualifying nine women in 18 different events for the New England Championships.

"We had a super team effort, with most women competing in at least three events," LaFreniere said. "The women are working really hard, and I'm seeing results."

Disturbance closes Malcolm X Center

By MARTIN F. JONES
Collegian Correspondent

The Malcolm X Cultural Center has been ordered by University administrators to suspend social events this weekend after an incident Saturday night at a party at the African-American cultural center.

The incident apparently involved a dispute between a group of University students and members of the UMass men's basketball team, in which an alleged assault took place. Rumors circulated through the crowd that a student not at the party, but outside the center, was carrying a gun.

According to witnesses, the disruption began when a UMass student was allegedly struck by one of the basketball players following an argument. The student has not been identified by University officials.

The students and the players were initially ejected from the cultural center, but were readmitted after tensions had cooled, according to witnesses.

The dispute apparently re-ignited, ending the party at 1:30 a.m. Police were twice called to the scene. No arrests were made and no one has filed charges.

Ricardo Townes of Academic Support Services ordered the Malcolm X Cultural Center to halt its activities until the issue of the violence has been addressed.

Townes said there has been an increase in violence among students at the University.

"In the past, these incidents have usually involved people from outside the University clashing with students from on campus. Now we are seeing students within the campus community fighting amongst each other," Townes said.

Last semester, another violent incident occurred at the Hampden Student Center involving members of the football team and a student fraternity. This incident is still under investigation.

The Department of Public Safety is planning to meet with Townes and staff members of the Malcolm X Cultural Center to discuss ways of preventing future incidents from occurring.

Arthur Jemison, general manager of the Black Mass Communications Project, has coordinated security at other social events. These events, which include the annual Funkathon, utilize a combination of student and campus security, he said. He added metal detectors are also used as an added safety measure.

"In the past, security has not been a problem at the Malcolm X Center because people have usually had enough respect for each other to leave their disputes at the door," Jemison said. "People should have more respect for the center and what it stands for."

Keith Cambell, a disc jockey for the BMCP, said he was concerned that halting the social events at the center will restrict some Black student organizations from raising money.

Two Black fraternal organizations, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Inc. and Phi Beta Sigma Inc., were planning to cosponsor a fundraising event Saturday night. The event is postponed until further notice.

Election funds debated

Finances are discussed at forum

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

While most Americans seem to agree that this country's political process has become increasingly flawed, the six candidates for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat offered some of their ideas for changing the political process last night.

In debate sponsored by the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign, Democrats Jon Hite, Ellen Story, Terry Franklin and Norman Page, Republican Mark Enoch and Independent Larry Kelley discussed campaign finance and election reform at the Bangs Community Center.

All of the candidates generally agreed that too much money is spent on elections at the local, state and national levels, that special interest groups which donate large amounts of money to political candidates have too much influence on the political process, and that there is a need to increase the accessibility of politics to a wider group of citizens.

Kelley, an Amherst businessman, said he was in favor of giving all legislative candidates a "level playing field" by mandating the amount which can be spent for a campaign.

"You're going to put somebody in charge of a billion dollar budget [if elected] — what's wrong with saying you can only spend $10,000 to get there," Kelley said.

Page said there needs to be a process where someone can run for state representative in this district for $1,000 or $2,000.

Page, who has said he expects to spend between $5,000 and $7,000 for this campaign, notes that candidates in Amherst and Pelham have access to the same newspapers and cable and the opportunity to debate each other provides "a unique opportunity" for the district to establish uniform electoral guidelines which provide candidates with equal access to the media and voters.

Story, who said she could spend as much as $30,000, noted the idea of shortening the periods during which seats remain vacant to one or two months to expedite the political process.

Hite, who has raised close to $11,000 and expects to spend $12-14,000, expressed his belief in the need to shut the so-called "revolving door," and increase the time period under which ex-legislators can become lobbyists. Hite also pledged to debate anyone who wanted to run against him if he was elected and became an incumbent.

Enoch, who has said he will only serve as long as Gov. Weld is in office because he believes he can work with him as a Republican, blamed many of the problems in politics on "deep-rooted incumbents."

"It's hard to beat an incumbent — and that's where a lot of corruption comes from," Enoch said.

While Story has been criticized for her spending, which she said was based on inflation-adjusted figures from State Senator Stanley Rosenberg's 1986 campaign and average figures for an open state representative's seat, she said she believes her campaign has opened up to

Official lashes out at UM policy

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

While the University's academic advisor for Native American students says UMass policies toward Native American students are unfair and are guilty of subtle racism, the administration maintains that they are being completely evenhanded.

"They [the administration] do not consider the needs of Native American students," said Buddy Gwin.

According to official figures, last fall there were 42 Native American students on this campus: 29 undergraduates, 13 graduates and one faculty member. This makes up 0.2 percent of the total student community.

Gwin said the administration is justifying itself with this number for not paying attention to their needs.

Gwin says he is the only person in charge of advising and recruiting Native American students. He also helps run the Josephine White Eagle Center, which a group of Native American students claim to have shut down three months ago.

Ann Quinley, director of Academic Support Services, says the ratio of one to 29, referring to counselors for undergraduate students, is a very good one compared to the one for Asians which is one to almost 900, or for African Americans, which she says is one to 129. She also explained the duties of Gwin's job are to advise and recruit Native Americans only and that he is capable of doing his job.

Right now the University offers two Native American studies classes and the University does not have a Native American studies major or minor. UMass does not observe Native American religious holidays which vary from tribe to tribe, according to Gwin.

"Does this mean we are savages? Why does this University, who boasts of being multicultural, not observe them? This is part of the subtle racism they [Native American students] have been suffering from," Gwin said.

Grant Ingle of Office of Human Relations said although Native American holidays are not listed on the list of major religious observance days, under Massachusetts law everyone who cannot attend class for religious observance is protected.

"They do not have to be on the list to be protected," he said.

Native American students have also been harassed in the dorms, according to students.

Chris Pegram, a Native American student, said someone posted the derogatory word "savage" on his door. Jeffrey Pegram, Chris' brother, says he has never

Project is awarded national funding

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The School of Education at the University of Massachusetts was awarded a $161,000 five-year grant last year from the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis in support of a nationwide project titled the National Coalition for Equality in Learning. The program is aimed to improve the education of marginal students from grades K-12.

"Its major purpose is to help young people who are failing in school to return to productive learning," said Robert Sinclair, professor of curriculum studies in the School of Education and director of the project.

The project, in its second year, works with schools in ten regions of the country in nine states, including California, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Missouri and Alabama. "There is a different focus of study within each region," said Sinclair.

Students' backgrounds range from living in homes without electricity or running water to being a teenage parent from both rural and suburban locations.

Most of the students involved come from poor families, but not all, said Sinclair. "The way the schools operate does not seem to bring them [the students] into productive learning," he said.

"We are not looking for quick fixes, but to understand the problems more carefully," said Sinclair.

The program focuses on identifying the problems of individual students, and creating an atmosphere of "community" that encourages success in learning for all students he added.

A local university is involved at each site. "At each location, we are working with schools so that homes and schools support each other to help the young people," said Sinclair.

A small staff of graduate students at the University are involved in the project. These students are from Tibet, South Africa, Indonesia and the United States, said Sinclair, providing cultural diversity to the program.

"We believe solutions come with a greater understanding of the problem," said Susan Schuman, a graduate student at the University and director of the coalition's 12-school learning community in western Massachusetts.

Nawang Phuntsog, a graduate student, said, "It would be wonderful if we can look more carefully at the marginal students to meet their needs."

"We travel all the time to the different sites," said Sinclair. He added there are east and west coast coordinators who run national study teams on important issues.

On January 25, there was a meeting in Houston, Texas, which covered the issue of teen-age pregnancy said Sinclair. The next meetings will be on March 26 and 27, in which Sinclair, Phuntsog and Bill Kirkpatrick, a graduate student and a teacher at Longmeadow High School, will travel to Minnesota to address the issue of multicultural education.

The program has attracted some of the nation's most influential educational leaders. Its advisory board includes Ralph Tyler, founder and director emeritus of the Center for Advanced Study of Behavioral Sciences at Stanford, and an internationally recognized leader in curriculum and educational reform.

Faculty panel looks back on Persian Gulf War

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

One year after the Gulf War, close to a hundred people packed the New York Room at Mount Holyoke College last night to hear four Five College faculty members discuss U.S. foreign policy and the lessons learned from the Persian Gulf conflict.

The talks were followed by an hour of discussion. The event was part of a program of lectures, films and panels organized by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

Vinnie Ferraro from Mount Holyoke College said that the world needs to learn how to deal with acts of aggression. "We need an alternative to war or to economic sanctions," Ferraro said. However, he did not have any solutions to offer.

Ferraro was followed by Gordon Levin from Amherst College. "If I were to vote in Congress a year ago, I would have voted in favor of authorizing Bush to use force — one year later, I have no second thoughts," Levin said.

Levin said he based his opinion on the repressive nature of the Iraqi regime, its intention of acquiring weapons of mass destruction, and its attack against a United Nations member state, Kuwait.

"There was also the danger of Iraq's control of Gulf oil resources having an adverse effect on the Western and U.S. economies," Levin added. He also said that it was "egregious and stupid" for Saddam Hussein to allow himself to be clobbered.

Hormoz Shahdadi from Mount Holyoke College said that he disagreed with Levin very strongly. "Many of the arguments against Iraq can also be made against Israel — such as its invasion of Lebanon, its role in the Sabra and Shatila massacres, and the inhuman things it is doing to the civilians in the Occupied Territories," he said.

"Furthermore, Saddam is not crazy, nor is he a megalomaniac," Shahdadi said. He explained that Saddam and his Ba'athist party represent a long-standing trend in the Arab world of redistribution of wealth.

Addressing the Gulf War, Shahdadi said that public opinion in the United States is desensitized to Iraqi casualties in the war. "I still do not understand the sadistic manner in which the U.S. and its allies are destroying Iraq," he said.

Shahdadi also said that the war showed a paradox. "On the one hand, the U.S. is in economic decline, and on the other its foreign policy is becoming increasingly militaristic," he said.

There is also a paradox of talking peace on the one hand, and selling billions of dollars of weapons on the other, Shahdadi said.

"The next three decades will be the decade of oil," Shahdadi said. "By controlling the oil fields of the Gulf, the U.S. controls the economies of Japan and Europe."

Shahdadi said that U.S. cultural and ideological might had been reduced to brute force and pure coercion. "The function of U.S. foreign policy is now regime maintenance to preserve stability," he said.

Shahdadi added that this will not lead to stability, because history has shown that gunboat diplomacy never worked in the Middle East for a long period of time.

Addressing the future, Sahdadi said that the major challenge to Western influence in the Middle East will come from Islam.

The last speaker was Anwar Syed from the University of Massachusetts. "Iraq was dealt with to clear the way for U.S. military hegemony in the Middle East," said Syed.

He said that the the U.S. destruction of Iraq was similar to the pillage and destruction inflicted by Genghis Khan and Tamerlane. "The U.S. did not give a damn about the Iraqi people," Syed said.

Addressing the term "New World Order," Syed said that one possible interpretation of it was respect for the United Nations, the way it was enforced on Iraq.

"However, this will not be enforced on Israel," he said. "In reality, the "New World Order" is a code name for U.S. hegemony," Syed said.

As for U.S. foreign policy, Syed said that in the Arab world, particularly among Muslims, there is a feeling that U.S. policy is becoming more and more anti-Muslim.

Amnesty group to hold petition drives

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

An Amnesty International group formed recently on campus is organizing petition drives in support of prisoners' human rights, the group's secretary said yesterday.

Timur Freidman, secretary of the 10 member group, said the chapter, which was formed by graduate students, will send the petitions on behalf of prisoners whom Amnesty International is concerned about.

Freidman said Amnesty International is a passive and non-political organization. "Our work focuses on individual cases and doesn't make judgements on different forms of government," he said.

Freidman said different Amnesty International groups have received letters from political prisoners. The prisoners have said after the countries holding them hostage received the petitions, they stopped beating them.

"Some countries are influenced by public opinion and it is Amnesty International's hope that the release of prisoners is sometimes due to our efforts," said Freidman, who has been involved in the group for nine years.

Amnesty International seeks the release of men and women detained in any country because of their beliefs, color, sex, ethnic origin, language, sexual orientation or religious creed, provided violence was not involved, according to Friedman.

He said there are three petitions that will be available for signing today. "These petitions are concerned with the mistreatment of a prisoner in Northern Ireland, the death penalty sentence for six prisoners in Sudan and a prisoner of conscience in Laos," he said.

"The UMass Amnesty International group is looking for many new members," said Friedman, a 26-year old COINS student. He says the group needs graduates as well as undergraduates to carry the petitions into their departments and dormatories.

Friedman said there is an undergraduate Amnesty International group but it has been dormant for a while. "I hope this new chapter will reactivate them," he said.

"Because we will be registered as a campus group and not a local group there will be no membership fee," Friedman said.

include large numbers of local citizens.

All the candidates except Page said "None of the Above" should be printed on Massachusetts ballots to allow voters to express their disapproval with all candidates in an elections. Page said he already looks at blank ballots in elections and believes they carry the same sentiment as "None of the Above."

Story, Kelley and Page agreed on the so-called "motor-voter" legislation, which would automatically register everyone in the Commonwealth with a driver's license to vote. Hite said he favors a negative check-off system, while Enoch opposes the idea. Franklin said he was undecided.

been harassed in a dorm but would like the school to have stronger programs to support the Indian community, specifically faculty, recruitment and financial assistance.

Gwin said there had been times in which Native American students have had to stop their religious ceremonies because the smell of the herbs they burned were disturbing their neighbors. Gwin questioned why this would occur in a country based on religious freedom.

Gwin said the University needs professors, staff and the administration to support Native American students and the Admissions Department to enforce Native Americans' recruitment, which is now delegated only to himself.

Timm Rinehart, University admissions director, said they have a commitment to the recruitment of Native Americans.

According to Rinehart, Buddy Gwin is the second person employed specifically to recruit Native Americans. This is the second year the Department has participated on the Student Search Service of the College Board to enforce the recruitment of Native American students.

"We have special activities for recruiting students of color: programs, scholarships, presentations. Also there is a special Open House for students of color," he said. Rinehart also explained there are budgets specially designated for the recruitment of minority students.

Rinehart also explained that in Massachusetts there are not many Native Americans and that 80 percent of the students in UMass are in-state students.

Last year 21 out of the 22 Native American students who applied were accepted in the University and only six enrolled.

"A small number, but we hope it grows," Rinehart said.

Love, food and money

When we were young we often replied to the question of what we wanted in life with the simple answer: "to be happy." Either rich or poor, that was all we really wanted or needed. Then we would give the nice lunch lady a quarter for milk -- the only financial business we really had to worry about.

Some people still have not left their childhood fantasies of living in a society where money really does not matter, and where being poor would in no way threaten one's happiness. This is all very nice if it were possible. In this day and age I feel a person's total happiness hinges too much on their financial security. For without food and heat to be warm how can someone who is at all sane be happy.

And yes, if your time comes you could find yourself at the golden arches, the ultimate job of jobs. Due to the fact that Amherst and its surrounding towns are far from a haven for employment, a job like this is a dream come true for a student who has become a slave to the provider of his/her food and shelter.

So as the winter break begins and you patiently await the millions of hours promised to you, as well as the 50 percent off on all the delicious food. But as the weeks go by and your first eventful day at the greaseless hamburger heaven never comes, and your bank account dwindles down to a few dollars, it is hard not to wonder if this dream for money, food and fun was all a big hoax. And as you start to panic while thinking of how you will pay rent, eat and be warm, you realize how important money is and how you would be nothing without it. You feel bad for ever insulting this job for at this point you would do anything for a few lousy hours.

. I would probably look like a good person if I said that I don't care if I have little money in the future. I would look even better if I said that I'd rather marry poor than rich. But unfortunately, if I did say either of these things, I would be lying.

I will be the first to admit that I am, like millions of others, a victim of a materialistic society. The mere idea of money brings me an incredible amount of pleasure. This is not to say that things such as good health and love don't also bring me happiness, but I find that, in the long run, they end up weighing in the same.

Why does everything rotate around money? This possible reason being that our society, like many others, is very dependent on it to survive. It is just that now that our economy is in trouble, people realize how important money has always been to them. It is the way we have been brought up to think and it is the image that our country portrays.

For me, I wish I wasn't so dependent on money. I wish that while growing up, money wasn't the deciding factor as to whether my family would move or not, whether my parents would fight or not, and whether I would be educated enough for a reliable and adequate job.

I envy people who can live with little money and be happy. I wish that my need and obsessiveness was not there. Unfortunately it is, and each day when I arrive at the Berkshire Dining Commons ready to clean dishes, I don't think about the second hand food I'm touching but rather the paycheck that would make it all worth it.

THE STATE OF THE UNION IS UNSETTLED.
WHEN I THINK OF PEOPLE OUT OF WORK I GET UPSET.
AND SEEING PEOPLE LOSE FAITH IN THE FUTURE POSITIVELY MAKES ME SICK.
NOW HERE'S WHAT I'VE COME UP WITH

University Textbook Annex leaves out most crucial work

Welcome back to another semester of UMass' Textbook Annex. Yes ladies and gentlemen, the time has come to buy books on credit, books that may force us to ignore spring in Amherst.

Strolling through the Annex, something hit me. No, it was not a ton of falling Shakespeare 222 books. It was knowing that, though UMass students are paying for knowledge, we are being cheated. In one corner there is Whitmore, in another [Gov. William] Weld.

However, most tragic of all is that the society that we are a part of for ten months a year has, for the most part, seen fit to remove any and all emphasis from the greatest book that has ever been. It is not found within the horror of Annex World and, as a rule, is not seriously and truthfully studied within the university.

What is this awesome book, you ask? The masterpiece being referred to is the Christian Bible. Stop reading, right? Wrong! You guys may be smart, but if you want to dismiss the Bible you are definitely cheating yourself.

Famous Christian author Josh McDowell has said that the Bible can be summed up as "unique" in every way. Josh is absolutely correct. The Bible is unique. These are some of the things that Josh discovered.

The Bible is a book that has been written over a 1,500 year span by over 40 authors from every walk of life. Written in different places, different times and in different moods. Written on three continents and in three languages Yet, even with all the varied conditions and circumstances in which the different books were written and the many controversial topics that the Bible covers, every author — from beginning to end — speaks in unity.

Diana D'Avanzo

F.F. Bruce put it best: ". . .The Bible is not simply an anthology: there is a unity which binds the whole together. An anthology is compiled by an anthologist, but no anthologist compiled the Bible."

The Bible is also unique in the way in which it has been preserved. Bernard Ramm describes the Bible's accuracy as follows: "Jews preserved it as no other manuscript has ever been preserved . . .They kept tabs on every letter, syllable, word and paragraph. They had special classes of men within their culture whose sole duty was to preserve and transmit these documents ."

The Bible, above all else, is notably unique in its teaching, especially when it comes to prophecy. Unlike the prophetic writing of Nostradamus, the Bible's prophesies concern specific nations, cities and peoples. The Old Testament points to the promised Messiah. The New Testament point to Jesus Christ as the Messiah — who, incidentally, fulfilled over 250 prophesies concerning himself, including where he was born and how he died.

Also impressive is that the Bible tells it like it is. Nowhere in the Bible are individual sins covered up. Each person is described honestly. Likewise, God does not cover up his plan or his will. Rather, everything is plainly, and quite reassuringly, set forth.

If you want to read a book that is in a class by itself, read the Bible. If you want to know the loving forgiveness of Jesus Christ, read the Bible — in context and with an open heart. I personally guarantee that it will not disappoint you. Well, good reading and remember: JESUS LOVES YOU!!

All beings have the right to live

I am writing in response to Stefan Gross' Op/Ed article "Animal rights activists should support humans, too" (Collegian, 1/30). The piece contains so many sweeping generalizations, oversimplifications and complete lies about the animal rights movement that even its title is incorrect.

Mr. Gross seeks to discredit the entire movement by making a critique of only one aspect of animal exploitation that we target, animal experimentation, and assumes that our sole purpose is to drag humankind back to the dark ages. He couldn't be more wrong.

We stand by the belief that all sentient beings have the right to live their own lives in peace, whether they are human or not, a belief advocated by Abraham Lincoln, Mahatma Ghandi, Albert Schweitzer, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley and other great, progressive intellectuals. We seek to end all forms of animal exploitation and abuse, be they experimentation, factory farming, the fur industry, sport hunting or "entertainment" (and yes, we even fight on behalf of lab rats). We are not only concerned with non-human lives, we are also peace activists, feminists, gay activists, homeless advocates and more.

The attitude that animals exist solely for how they can benefit humanity is essentially identical to the one that created and condoned slavery and other forms of human oppression. Mr. Gross justifies the act of depriving another being of his/her freedom and submitting them to barbaric acts of torture for the benefit of humanity as "logical." What he fails to account for in his "logic," however, is that there have been major disasters in medical history as well as advances thanks to animal research. Because the physiology of lab animals differs from that of human beings, dangerous substances such as asbestos remained available to an unknowing public because they were wrongly found to be safe, thanks to animal testing (by the end of this century, a million people will have died from the effects of asbestos inhalation). He also fails to note that the Foundation for Biomedical Research has vested financial interests in seeing to it that the public supports animal research, as does U.S. Surgical which has recently resorted to using the same sort of "emotionalistic" propaganda that he accuses us of with their multimillion dollar television ads featuring woebegone actors depicting terminally ill children. That would be hilarious, except that the "logic" is actually brought by people such as Mr. Gross.

Persons such as he, I would argue, are far more likely to stand in the way of progress with their failure to question prevailing standards and methods than animal rights activists, the majority of whom are not the violent, brutish terrorists as he would have readers believe. Clinging to outdated and downright barbaric ideals and practices will more effectively hold back the progress of a culture than any fanciful notion ever will.

Viktoria Bohne
Hampshire College For the Animals

Why should rats have rights?

Thank you, Stefan Gross, for asserting human rights over those of rats. As a staunch supporter of animal testing for biomedical research, I cannot condone those who sacrifice the progress and health of mankind in the name of political correctness. Animal research is vital to medical breakthroughs. Medical clinicians adhere to a strict moral code in animal testing. They seek to treat animals as humanely as possible, inflicting minimal to no physical pain. Given a choice between finding a cure for AIDS or protecting the rights of rats, I would have to choose the former. One must question a person's priorities when he or she values animal life over his or her own.

Riding avenues of erotic pleasure

Erotology is learning to ride the avenues of erotic pleasure; it is not sexology and its dry ilk. Heteroerotics 101 is coursework woefully censored from even the modern curriculum.

In 1959 at Amherst College, I could've elected "Holes 'N' Poles," or "Marriage and the Family," under a Psych. Dept. rubric. Instead, my ultimate ex-wife and I tried out [expletive]-ing in my dorm room during spring break for which the now-dead dean expelled me.

Here in 1992, I invite those of you, comforting a penchant for erotology, to experiment by co-designing with me a non-credit seminar to fill this curricular gap.

HETEROEROTICS 101. Seminar, two hours weekly. Instructor: Eric Walgren, sexual revolutionary, author: book of erotic poetry, unpublished. BFA Amherst College '65, Rutgers L.S. '68, farmer. Nutshell: vehicles for couplings to enjoy swelling their own and each other's organs, orgasm unmandatory.

Description: Purpose, to blossom the eropersona, "the elegant, sexual, loving beast." First, we would surmount obstacles like the privacy doctrine and other durable taboo residues, weak erotic ego, and unsafe sex. Then we would get to the meat, such as the less obvious erotic anatomy, like the bulbous cavernosa, female as well as male, and cultivating pheromones.

Such a project, to make the liberal arts progressive, would be free-lance, no charge, and intended to jostle the sex-ed establishment's ass.

Big stomach blow ups on HSCN this week

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to this semester's first installment of the Campus Cable Connection.

This week, there are some classics that you won't want to miss as well as some new flicks that have just recently graced the big screen.

Here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, February 5:

Soapdish — Whoopi Goldberg, Sally Field, Kevin Kline. A wacky comedy about the trials and tribulations of life on the set of a soap opera. A little off-the-wall at times, but watching Whoopi perform will be enough to leave you in stitches. ***

Stepfather II — Terry O'Quinn, Meg Foster, Jonathan Brandis. Not even close to its predecessor, The Stepfather, this movie follows along the same lines of a deranged psycho (O'Quinn) whose idea of "home sweet home" is taken to a sick extreme. A couple of scenes will make you jump, but if you have a choice to either watch this movie or finish up calculus, which do you think I'd recommend? *

The Way We Were — Barbara Streisand, Robert Redford, Bradford Dillman. Oscar-winning score and a pretty good love story to boot. Set in the 1930s to 50s, the movie stars Streisand as a political activist who falls in love with "Joe College" Redford. ***

Agnes of God — Jane Fonda, Meg Tilly, Anne Bancroft. A haunting story of a young nun (Tilly) who apparently murdered her baby within the confines of her covent. Court-appointed psychiatrist Fonda must investigate, but is baffled by what appears to have been an immaculate conception. Tilly is excellent as the sweet-faced and terribly naive nun. ***

Alien — Sigourney Weaver, John Hurt. Oscar-winning special effects make this 50ish horror/scifi flick so special and memorable. Is there anyone out there who hasn't seen the stomach blow-up scene? If not, you have to catch it this week. I mean, it's a must! ***

Avalon — Armin Meuller-Stahl, Aiden Quinn, Elizabeth Perkins. Autobiography of director Barry Levinson. A young Jewish boy recounts his life with his parents and grandparents. A very touching story — try not to wince at the bee scene. A top choice movie! ****

Betsy's Wedding — Alan Alda, Joey Bishop, Madeline Kahn, Molly Ringwald. I was hesitant about seeing this movie because the previews did it NO justice. I was pleasantly surprised, finding it very light and amusing. Written and directed by Alda, Betsy's Wedding is able to evoke many sympathetic laughs from those who have gone through wedding preparations. 1/2

Body Double — Craig Wass, Gregg Henry, Melanie Griffith. Wasson is a man obsessed with the woman he has been spying on with a telescope and he becomes involved in a murder. It's not one of director Brian DePalma's best works, and I was somewhat disappointed. **

Cocktail — Tom Cruise, Elisabeth Shue, Bryan Brown. Speaking of disappointments, that brings us to Cocktail. Gee, I wonder who the target audience was for this movie. . . could it possibly coincide with the New Kids on the Block fans?

Cruise is charming as ever as a kid who comes to New York to find fortune and glory, but ends up as a bartender under the auspices of Brown. Not much is redeeming in this film, and the acting made me want to vomit.*

The Diary of Anne Frank — Millie Perkins, Joseph Schildkraut, Shelley Winters. Brilliant adaptation of the Broadway play as well as the famed book about a Jewish girl and her family who must hide in Amsterdam from the

ResArts is everywhere

By DONNA GILMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Does the word "educational" strike fear into your heart? Is "cultural" a synonym for "stuffy" or "boring" in your vocabulary? Do you consider "art" a dirty word? Well, think again!

There is a little-known offshoot of the Fine Arts Center called Residential Arts whose office is conveniently located in the biggest residential area on campus, Southwest. The primary mission of Residential Arts is to make visual and performing arts directly available to University students in the residential areas, to try to lessen racial, sexual and ethnic discrimination by presenting hip, FUNKY, alternative and enlightening performances which the student body would otherwise not experience, and to entertain!

Residential Arts, "ResArts," for those in the know, is a program of the Fine Arts Center. Like the Fine Arts Center, Residential Arts is committed to making the arts accessible to students. But unlike the Fine Arts Center, Residential Arts opts for a more unconventional approach to the arts. They do this by presenting diverse and unusual artists with radical views and different artistic perspectives.

The staff at Residential Arts consists of work study students under the direction of a professional staff member.

Associate Director, Shawn Farley, explains, "Students do all the publicity, graphic designing, fundraising and programming. Our goal is to complement students' academic work with direct and accessible experiences in visual and performing arts."

ResArts is the one who brought us comedy clubs in Hampden Snack Bar, Jazz Brunches in Worcester D.C. and Ethnic Food Nights at the Dining Commons, like Mexican night.

Farley says, "Residential Arts bridges the gap between the community and the campus by providing professional artists a chance to interact with students through workshops and residencies. ResArts also provides the students with the facilities, equipment, production support and training necessary to exhibit their work or to perform in the Theater."

Farley adds, "It is a misconception that ResArts IS Southwest, only. ResArts has locations around the campus, and is always open to ideas from students." Discount tickets are available to 5-College Area students. That means for the price of two beers, you can take in a really cool show.

COLLEGIAN GRAPHIC BY MIKE CARVALHO DESIGN BY SONDRA SUTTON PHOTOS BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

How well do you know your Black History?

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

In 1991, a game called Collidascope was created by Maura Cullen and Dawn Thompson. The game consist of various historical questions, from many different topics.

Listed here are a few of the questions taken from the game. In celebration of African-American History Month, try answering them.

The answers are located under the last question, but no peeking! Enjoy!

1) The first Black woman to win the Wimbledon tennis championship.
A) Althea Gibson B) Wilma Rudolph or C) Ora Washington

2) True or False: Lincoln freed all slaves with his Emancipation Proclamation.

3) These colors are in the flag created during the Garvey movement by the United Negro Improvement Association. The flag is still a symbol of Black Pride.
A) red, white, blue B) red, black, green or C) orange, black, yellow

4) Director of the United Negro Improvement Association, he believed in racial pride and purity, and demanded that Blacks become independent. He started the largest mass movement in modern history.
A) Marcus Garvey B) Booker T. Washington or C) Dred C. Scott

5) The Black magazine that has the highest paid monthly circulation of any Black publication in history.
A) Jet B) Pride or C) Ebony

6) The famous bus boycott of 1955 began in this city.
A) Montgomery, AL B) Memphis, TN or C) Atlanta, GA

7) In 1966, as the civil rights movement was beginning to fall apart, this group was founded by young Blacks in Oakland, CA. Some of its leaders included Bobby Seale, Eldridge Cleaver, Angela Davis and Stokely Charmichael.

Dear Kristen:

Nassau four days behind us, Semester at Sea is the best. Still can't believe this incredible ship is my campus for 100 days. Magnificent sunsets from deck. I miss you.. Signed up for Global Ecology, Intro to International Trade, World Music and Comparative International Studies. Just read "The Art of Crossing Cultures". That book sold 400 copies at the bookstore yesterday - most of them on my work-study shift I'm sure. Venezuela here we come!!!
Love, Brian

P.S. Promise me you'll call Semester at Sea at 800-845-0195 today and get an application for Fall '92.

Nazis during WWII. Eloquently done; both moving and powerful. ****

The Grapes of Wrath — Henry Fonda, Jane Darwell, John Carridine. It would be a darn shame to miss this one, that's all I can say. Steinbeck's classic tale of Oklahoma farmers moving to California during the Depression. Fonda and Darwell received Oscars, and the film acquired a couple as well. ****

House Party — Christopher Reid, Robin Harris, Christopher Martin. Featuring real life rapper Reid, who plays Kid, the movie is a humorous tale of teenagers and the events of one night before, during and after a house party. ***

Moscow on the Hudson — Robin Williams, Maria Conchita Alonso, Cleavant Derricks. Witty and innovative, this movie is about a Russian musician (Williams) who defects to the U.S. and tries to cope with his new life in America. ****

Nadine — Jeff Bridges, Kim Basinger, Rip Torn. Set in 1954 Austin, Basinger is innocently involved in a murder, which she accidentally witnesses while attempting to retrieve some nude portraits of herself. I was favorably surprised. 1/2

Movies that are on HSCN this week but are not reviewed are: Rock and Roll High School, Karate Kid II, Vincent and Theo, and The Gods Must Be Crazy.

Alarming Breakthrough!
COLLEGE STUDENT TURNS FOUR YEARS OF BLUE BOOKS INTO GOLD!

Stop by ArtCarved's display to relive your college memories and receive a special discount.

A college student with a double major in physics and alchemy shocked the academic community by announcing that four years of blue books and all the memories that go with them could be turned into gold.
"I didn't know what people were doing trying to turn lead into gold, but obviously they didn't know about ArtCarved. I took one look at their big selection of men's and women's gold rings and picked one. It was easy. ArtCarved also gave me lots of custom options to remember my four years and a lifetime guarantee. I don't know any physicist who can do that," said the ebullient senior.
The big-hearted senior plans to share this remarkable discovery at the next meeting of the Future Physicists of America.

YOU'RE RIGHT, CLIZ! IT'S BUCHANAN WE'VE GOT TO KEEP AN EYE ON, NOT THAT GOOF-BALL IN THE ROSE GARDEN!
BUCHANAN'S EVEN MOVING IN ON YOUR IMMIGRATION ISSUE! HE'S NOW ADVOCATING THE "BUCHANAN FENCE," A 1500-MILE TRENCH TO KEEP OUT THE WETBACKS!
OH, RIGHT! AND WHO'S SUPPOSED TO PAY FOR IT? AND WHO'S GOING TO MAN IT? WILL THEY SHOOT TO KILL? WILL THERE BE DOGS? AND WHO'S GOING TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR RE-TRIEVING THE BODIES?
HE HASN'T SAID..
EXACTLY! MEANON SPECIFICS!
THAT'S WHAT I'VE BEEN SAYING. A SLICK, PROPOSAL, BUT WHERE'S THE BEEF?

CALVIN AND HOBBES By BILL WATTERSON

I TRY TO MAKE TELEVISION-WATCHING A COMPLETE FORFEITURE OF EXPERIENCE.
NOTICE HOW I KEEP MY JAW SLACK, SO MY MOUTH HANGS OPEN. I TRY NOT TO SWALLOW EITHER, SO I DROOL, AND I KEEP MY EYES HALF-FOCUSED, SO I DON'T USE ANY MUSCLES AT ALL.
I TAKE A PASSIVE ENTERTAINMENT AND EXTEND THE PASSIVITY TO MY ENTIRE BEING. I WALLOW IN MY LACK OF PARTICIPATION AND RESPONSE. I'M UTTERLY INERT.
I'M GOING TO LEAVE BEFORE YOU START ATTRACTING FLIES.
I CAN ALMOST FEEL MY NEURAL TRANSMITTERS SHUTTING DOWN.

I CAN'T BELIEVE YOU, FLESH! ALL YOU'VE DONE ALL WEEK IS PLAY NINTENDO!
So?
SO?! HOW CAN YOU SIT INSIDE ON SUCH A BEAUTIFUL DAY? YOU COULD BE DOING SO MANY OTHER FUN THINGS!
WHY, YOU COULD GO DOWN TO THE CAMPUS POND AND FEED THE DUCKS! YOU COULD GO FOR A JOG! OR YOU COULD JUST SIT AND WATCH THE SUN SET! OR...
OR I COULD GIVE MY ROOMMATE A HOME LOBOTOMY!
HMM... THINK I'LL GO FOR A JOG!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Not everything you are told now is the truth. Demand proof if someone makes ugly allegations. Open your eyes to the value of cooperating with your associates. Cultivate a bit more humility.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An increase in funds could give you unexpected qualms. Relax and enjoy yourself; having money can be fun! A family member shares some good news. A romantic relationship takes a new turn.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be cautious about placing your problems in another person's hands. Someone may try to take advantage of you. Turn your back on analysis and trust a hunch. Listening to music relaxes you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Recognize that certain changes must be made and make them as quickly as possible. You have a tendency to be too hard on yourself. Concentrate on having a good time this evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Working with other people may be unavoidable today. Use caution when choosing new allies. Burdening yourself with other people's problems would be a mistake.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take a chance today. A new venture should prove quite profitable if you let yourself "wing it." Bypass trivial pursuits on the road to major accomplishments. Watch out for cracks in the sidewalk.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A golden financial opportunity suddenly presents itself. A thin line separates triumph from defeat. Plot your moves carefully. Confiding in trusted colleagues brings several offers of assistance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Although the outlook for a new relationship is not too promising, you must have faith. Set aside a stubborn attitude and try to see things from a loved one's point of view.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Slow down the decision-making process. Otherwise, you will make mistakes that others pay for. A good day to set long term goals. Be specific; leave as little as possible to chance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If you find yourself at a loss for words, let your actions reflect what is in your heart. Devote real effort to making a house a home. Otherwise, loved ones could look elsewhere.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You get a taste of the good life today. Do not let materialism overcome your usually shrewd judgement. Friends are loyal and supportive. A younger person sheds new light on an old problem.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day to experiment during daylight hours and study at night. Do not let a golden educational opportunity pass you by. Focus on both your physical health and psychological well-being.

female skier in the giant slalom, winning in a time of 130.34. Tanguay was tops again for the women, finishing seventh overall.

The weekend competition marked the halfway point of the regular season. The women's team is in second place, out of 11 schools, and the men's team is in fifth out of 10, with two meets remaining.

"If I live to be 100 years of age I'll never have a better race result," said UMass coach Bill Maconnel. "The men's team built on their season this weekend and is improving.

• The Red Sox might have quite a catch with Herm Winningham, just hope he's prepared for the questions about "clubhouse relations." Supposedly he's got some speed but the Red Sox organization hasn't had a sign for steal since Tommy Harper played.

• Coach Cal's team has been playing the role of Jekyll and Hyde for last month and a half and it's hard to know which team will show up on a given night. The big problem down the road (to the Final Four?) could very well be foul shooting. Tight games hinge on good foul shooting. See also: Syracuse University.

• Welcome back to our friend from Down Under and remember that juggling's only funny until someone loses an eye.

THE MOST IMPORTANT CAREER STEP YOU EVER TAKE MAY START IN SENEGAL

Or in any of over 70 developing countries in Asia, Africa, Latin America, or Central Europe. Your first job after graduation should offer more than just a paycheck. In the Peace Corps, you'll broaden your world view and your horizons for the future. You'll learn a new language...live in a different culture...develop professional skills...and meet challenges far greater than those you might be offered in a starting position in the U.S.

Peace Corps is looking for people from many disciplines— education, health, the environment, agriculture, community development, engineering, the sciences, and more. With a degree or experience in these fields, you may find that Peace Corps will be able to use your skills like no other employer you're considering. And equip you with the type of experience valued by international firms, government agencies, and private industry and graduate school programs.

Minutemen pick up 18th win, 76-58

By PHIL SWEENEY
Special to the Collegian

OLEAN, NY — The Minutemen of the University of Massachusetts picked up their 18th victory of the season in convincing fashion last night with a 76-58 victory at St. Bonaventure.

The win pushed the Minutemen's conference record to 6-3, tying them with Temple for third place in the Atlantic 10.

"St. Bonaventure came to play," UMass coach John Calipari said after the game. "One of the things we've always talked about is being ready. We've come out complacent at times and expected wins, but we came out ready tonight."

The Bonnies got into early foul trouble, as three starters each picked up two fouls within the first five minutes (three would later foul out). St. Bonaventure also had trouble getting on the board and allowed the Minutemen to race to a 20-5 lead midway through the first half.

UMass hit 16 of its 30 shots (53 percent) in the first half. Leading the way was senior Jim McCoy, who nailed 6 of 7 to finish the first frame with a dozen points.

Tony Barbee knocked down a 3-pointer to jump the Minutemen's lead to 38-20 at the intermission.

Less than one minute into the second half, UMass had widened its lead to 46-25 on Will Herndon's alley-oop dunk.

The Minutemen then lapsed. St. Bonaventure went on a 9-0 run, sparked by sophomore Harry Moore's jumper at 14:54. Freshman Nii Nelson-Richards hit a 3-pointer to bring the Bonnies back into striking distance (46-34), forcing Calipari to call a timeout to quiet the unruly Reilly Center crowd.

Herndon's layup brought the UMass lead to 53-38.

David Vanterpool's layup at 5:52 narrowed the margin to 11, 57-46.

McCoy put in two free throws at 3:11 to finally put the game out of reach. Herndon capped things off with a monstrous one-handed alley-oop.

McCoy led all scorers with 21, hitting 8 of 10 from the field. Herndon finished with 16 points and seven rebounds and Barbee added 14 points and grabbed seven boards. Anton Brown had 10 points and six rebounds.

"If a team keys on McCoy," Calipari said, "Herndon gets 25. If they key on both of them then it opens it up for Barbee and Brown."

Moore led the Bonnies with 17 points and seven boards. Nelson-Richards hit for 14 and Vanterpool chipped in 13.

St. Bonaventure shot a miserable 33 percent as a team, while UMass converted 55 percent of its attempts.

"I'm happy with our play," Calipari said. "If you said before the season that at this point we'd be 18-4, I'd have said, 'wake me up.'"

Women's hoop falls to URI in closing seconds, 54-50

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

People often wonder, when a team loses, which hurts more, the blowouts or the close games.

This one hurt a lot.

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team rebounded from a 9-point second half deficit, but lost to the University of Rhode Island, 54-50, when the offense missed a potential game-tying bucket with 16 seconds left last night at Curry Hicks Cage.

Laurie Dondarski's 3-point attempt hit off the back rim with the Minutewomen down 53-50, and Rhode Island (7-12, 3-5 in the Atlantic 10) was able to tie the rebound up and seal the game when freshman Rebecca Bright hit one of two free throws with 7 seconds left.

The Minutewomen battled back from a 9-point deficit, 49-40, with less than eight minutes left in the game due to the stellar performance of senior point guard Trish Riley, who keyed a 6-0 run that brought UMass to the edge of victory.

Riley hit a jumper to cut the lead to seven at 7:37. Then on the next posession, she took an overhead pass from Dondarski and drove in for a layup, shaving the WRam lead to 49-44.

Riley (6 points, 5 rebounds) then drew a charge from WRam Monica Garnes, and the sparse Cage crowd went wild. After a URI time out, Riley did it herself again, hitting a jumper that brought UMass back to within 3, 49-46 with 6:28 remaining.

Jenny Moran hit a jumper after a Garnes free throw, to bring UMass within two, 50-48, with just over 3 minutes remaining. Moran (14, team-high 13) also had two clutch rebounds down the stretch off URI misses, but the Minutewomen couldn't capitalize on the offensive end.

Neither team was able to put the ball in the hoop for the next two minutes, until Riley fouled out of the game, putting Tammy Webster at the line. Webster's two successful free throws built a 52-48 URI lead at 1:09, but UMass' Kim Kristofik grabbed an offensive board and put it back up off the glass with 49 seconds left. The 52-50 score was as close as UMass would get.

Sue Morrone hit one of two from the line to increase the WRam lead with 0:40 remaining.

Dondarski broke free on UMass' next possesion, but her open 3-point attempt hit off the far end of the rim.

UMass drew up the potential game-tying play with two options, said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien.

"We initially set it for Jenny [Moran], but Jenny knew if she wasn't open, she'd look for the next open player, and Laurie [Dondarski] was able to sneak herself into the corner," she said.

The Minutewomen led through most of the first half by as much as 4, thanks to the play of Kristofik, who shot 7 of 9 in the first half and wound up with 18 points. Nevertheless, an Anne Kelsen jumper at the end of the first half gave URI a 30-28 lead.

"[Kim Kristofik] worked very hard on the block," O'Brien said. "We were pretty much able to run the offense the way we wanted in the first half. They double-teamed her on the strong side in the second half, and we weren't able to get the ball to her."

Foul trouble hurt the Minutewomen down the stretch, as two starters, Gloria Nevarez and Riley, fouled out. Kristofik had four.

"I think Trish [Riley] fouling out was a big thing because she really had us up," Dondarski said. "She pumped us all up."

UMass skiers blazing hot trail

Men finish fifth, women fourth at Dartmouth Skiway

The University of Massachusetts ski team passed a big test this past weekend at the Dartmouth Skiway as they remained a contender in the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference.

Under inclement weather, the men's team skied to a fifth place finish in the slalom and a fourth in the giant slalom, while the women's team finished with two third place results.

Both squads were handicapped by the absence of two top skiers and a temporary scoring system which favored teams with less depth.

On a sunny but frigid Saturday, Steve Crowley from Amherst College won the slalom in a time of 91.75. Mike Hannigan crossed the finish line first for UMass, in 17th place, followed by Rob Umstead, 18th, and Matt Griffing, 19th.

Kim Soloski, of Plymouth State, won the women's slalom with a time of 103.18. Jennifer Tanguay was UMass' top performer as she finished sixth despite taking a fall. Jen Egan, the team's co-captain, and Debby Adams rounded out the scoring for UMass in 10th and 13th place respectively.

UConn's Steve Dunlop was the top finisher in Sunday's giant slalom with a time of 125.25 in a steady 30-mile per hour wind. Hannigan, Umstaed and Mark Budreski swept places 11-13 for UMass.

Report: library on brink of disaster

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst Library System is failing to provide critical public services to both students and faculty due to inadequate funding for acquisitions of new books, cutbacks in staffing and the use of antiquated equipment, according to a scathing report obtained by the Collegian this week.

Written by the Future of the Library Committee, which was established last May by the Faculty Senate, the report says the library needs an additional $1.1 million in emergency relief in Fiscal Year 1993 to "stave off disaster for another year."

The report also requests a $7.8 million budgetary increase which could be spread over the next three years to rebuild and recover from the continuing damage inflicted on the holdings and overall quality of the University Library System.

Even if Gov. Weld's latest proposal to neither cut nor increase funding to state public higher education passes, this level-funding plan "would impose extreme limitations on the library's ability to function as an academic research library," the report states.

As the national ranking of the UMass Library plummets yearly, deficient library holdings are hindering students and faculty from engaging in research using the latest books and periodicals and the most current electronic access tools.

"In Fiscal Year 92 almost no new books are being purchased, the number of serial titles held is far too few, and the staff are stretched to the breaking point," the report states.

"When books commonly regarded as standard acquisitions for college and university libraries no longer make their way onto library shelves, we have ceased to fulfill even our most basic responsibilities to our students and faculty."

While state coffers for the University Library acquisition funds have run dry, the purchasing power to buy new materials for the library has sunk about $9 million in the last two decades.

"A library that can't buy books is a library incapable of nourishing a University's intellectual enterprise," said David Paroissien, the chair of the Future of the Library Committee and a professor in the English department. "If we let the library erode, it's going to effect everything on campus."

Because of staff shortages and the fiscal crisis, library service hours have again been reduced this semester.

Few new books or journals

The University Library System, which holds more than two million books, periodicals and government documents, is buying hardly any new books this year as annual budget cuts wreak havoc on library acquisition accounts.

In 1988, the library purchased over 46,000 books. This year, it has bought less than 7,000 new books, according to Emily

Students upset by library cuts

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

The University library's prestige is falling as its number of available up-to-date resources are on the wane, and students feel cheated and outraged.

"I am astounded by what's happening," says Samuel Densmore, a junior communications major. "If the library stops being up-to-date, the school stops being state-of-the-art. What does this say about the degree that you get from this university?"

Students are frustrated by the dwindling resources, and feel their studies are suffering.

"I picked a subject for a report, but I've had to change topics several times because the information I need is simply not here," said Maureen McGuire, a sophomore theater major. "I end up just browsing, looking for a topic that the library has a fair amount of books on."

Junior theater major Edmond McCarthy complains, "If the information you need isn't here, you have to go to Amherst or Smith. But then what is our library good for? If we're paying for our education here, we should be able to get adequate information from our resources here.

Details about assault report unconfirmed

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts official said today that allegations of members of the men's basketball team's involvement in an assault at a dance Saturday night may not be true, as details are "sketchy."

W. Ricardo Townes, associate dean of Academic Support Services, said in a meeting today with Malcolm X Cultural Center staff members and University police that the exact details of what took place on Saturday night have not been confirmed.

Coach John Calipari, the men's basketball coach, said he talked to the team about the incident before leaving Tuesday for their game at St. Bonaventure.

"I was concerned at the time," Calipari said. "But they told me there was some yelling, but no physical contact."

Calipari said the temporary closing of the center was unfortunate.

"On this campus, that [the center] is an important part of the social life," he said.

Townes said the center will only remain closed for the weekend, but this alleged fight — nor the rumors of a person carrying a gun at the dance — was not the reason.

"There has been a problem with violence at events," he said, "too much of this incident is 'alleged.'".

Townes said the people at the dance, although they tried to get the disputing parties to go outside, did not give the police any information.

"When the police arrived [at the Malcolm X center] no one would tell the police any names," Townes said.

Townes said the police first came to the scene to break up a fight — which was reported yesterday to have involved a basketball team member.

Townes said there are many stories coming out as a result of the incident.

"I talked to five different people and got five different stories," he said.

The Department of Public Safety is requesting that anyone with information should call 545-0893.

Senate hears Reid, candidates

By JASON GEORGE
and GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

There were two battles fought on the floor of the student senate last night. One was emotional; the other, political.

While senators considered for the first time to endorse a candidate for the state representative's race, they heard a story of frustration with the present state of the University from a nonpolitical source — the football coach.

Jim Reid, who verbally resigned as head football coach on Jan. 22, stressed to the senate the importance of organizing and recruiting for the future of the University.

Reid said he loved UMass, and his resignation was because of principle.

"I went into homes and told them [football recruits] how wonderful UMass was. I told them how diverse it was and about the commitment to education. I offered scholarships. And now it could be said I lied," he said.

Reid said he left after the scholarships he offered incoming freshmen were not approved by the athletic department because of budget cuts. He also said some administrators knew as early as Dec. 4 about the cuts, but left him uninformed.

"We're under siege," Reid said. "Our first priority should be to organize and work for the best damn school in America."

Reid also said he was optimistic about the upcoming state representative's race.

"This is the best race in 19 years," he said.

Student senators dissatisfied with Vanin

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Members of the student senate have voiced disatisfaction with interim Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jo-Anne T. Vanin, and do not want her to apply for or accept the position permanently, however Vanin says she is "disappointed" with their decision.

"Jo-Anne Vanin is not responsive to the desires of students and actually acts against students by misleading them," said Bob Monaghan, senate speaker.

Vanin has talked of abolishing student government, was involved in firing Legal Services Center lawyer Jennifer Daniels and refused to recognize Jen Wood as student trustee after agreeing she would, said Matt Pazesi, chair of public policy committee.

"She has proved she can't deal with students well," said Pazesi.

When student government was close to shutting down last spring, student leaders spent 70 hours trying to form agreements with the administration, said Monaghan.

"After the time and effort we spent, Vanin told us the agreements could not be done and would not occur," said Monaghan.

Monaghan said after Daniels was fired, the senate had to fight for two months to get Daniels rehired.

"There is a lack of trust in Vanin and the senate does not like the job she has done," Monaghan said.

Jen Wood, president of Commuter Area Government, said she printed up 4,000 posters and went door-to-door campaigning for student trustee last spring.

"Two days before the election [Vanin] managed to squeeze me in for 15 minutes to say the election was not happening," said Wood.

"[Vanin] does not deal with students in good faith and is devoid of any compassion for them," said Wood.

Vanin said, "I am clearly disappointed in the resolution, but I am not surprised."

Vanin said the student senate has not tried to correspond directly with her about the issue.

"Since the student government has not felt completely comfortable with the administration there hasn't been the openness of communication," Vanin said.

Vanin said she declined further comment on the issue.

AFL-CIO comes out to support Hite

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Jon Hite, a democratic contender for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat, received a unanimous endorsement yesterday morning by the AFl-CIO in his bid for office.

"It is obviously a major endorsement, and it increases likelihood of victory," said Ted Chambers, a UMass student and campaign manager for Jon Hite.

"It is more likely we will win the seat with labor behind us," said Chambers.

Braving the cold temperatures, Hite was joined by members of the Northampton Central Labor Council, Pioneer Valley Building and Construction Trades Council, and a handful of supporters outside the Physical Plant.

"I am very proud and honored by this endorsement," said Hite. He added, "I will work very hard to merit your trust."

"It is a privilege this morning to endorse Jon Hite for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat," said Jonathan Tuttle, president for the Northampton Central Labor Council.

"It was not a difficult choice, and there was no question in our mind that Hite was the correct choice," said Tuttle.

Tuttle was also a past president of Local 1776, an AFL-CIO affiliated union that contains approximately 1,200 UMass blue-collar workers. Local 1776 has yet to make a decision on endorsing a candidate.

Hite was given the endorsement after responding both in writing and in person to issues of concern for working people, stated the Northampton Central Labor Council press release.

The press release continued to say, "Jon Hite expressed unequivocal support for working people on issues such as prevailing wage in public construction, tax fairness, retention of unemployment benefits and efforts to prevent wide scale privatization as a tool to escape collective bargaining agreements and lay off public employees."

"Jon Hite was head, shoulders and torso over the other candidates," said Tuttle. "We are pleased to endorse somebody for whom we have solid support in the house," Tuttle said.

The centerpiece of Hite's campaign has been the issue of 100 percent tuition retention for state universities and colleges.

At the current time UMass keeps 30 percent of the tuition. The belief among many student leaders is that if tuition retention is implemented, the cost of UMass will go up. Thus, many deserving students would be unable to attend.

"The endorsement of the AFL-CIO shows that Jon Hite has a broad base of support among various groups which now includes students and unions," said Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Student Senate.

Kimmel, head of information processing.

"[Books] that we should be getting on a routine basis, we're just choosing titles here and there," Kimmel said. "Clearly, our acquisitions budget is laughable."

In addition, the report says the library is not reordering many subscriptions to standard academic publications and journals — the foundation of any large research institution.

"Very few books are coming in," said Paroissien. "Normally, all work of serious fiction writers would go on the shelves. It's impossible to do that at present."

In fact, the library budget for new acquisitions was cut by almost a million dollars between 1988 and 1989, according to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning.

Jeane Kocsis, head of collection development, said no new books are now being ordered. "There are a lot of important books that we're not ordering," she said. She added it is also inconvenient and often impossible to replace materials which were never initially ordered.

She said the budget cuts mean that only books for the Reserves department are being ordered.

Although the library is still ordering a greatly reduced amount of serial journals and publications essential for current research, she said all standing orders for the normally routine purchase of books by other University presses have been cancelled.

Sacrifices being made

Betty Brace, head of circulation and reserve, said the current crisis is forcing the budget for regular books to be sacrificed in order to purchase periodicals, which she calls the "lifeblood of a research University."

Lost or missing books are not being replaced — standard routine just a few years ago.

The report states that the probability of acquiring periodicals or serial volumes missed because of cancelled orders is "almost nil." And while ordering reprints is very expensive, reinstating subscriptions is also costly and wastes time, the report says.

Empty shelves could be a sign of reduced acquisitions, less research facilities and a smaller staff to reshelve books.

Also, the report states it is becoming more difficult to locate and purchase books which were never ordered initially due to the "erratic and chronically underfunded book budget."

"Even a cursory glance at the new titles in the major book review media, most of which our library is unable to acquire, reveals the magnitude of the crisis we face," the report states.

"We haven't been able to purchase books," said Linda Seidman, the acting head of special collections and archives.

Only "one or two" were ordered last semester, Seidman said, and no books for the library's special collection will be ordered at all this semester.

According to Ute Bargmann, a special collections assistant, the library would normally order between 3 to 15 books a semester on the Pioneer Valley area through used and rare book dealers.

Even routine preservation activities for old and rare books, such as the de-acidification of crackled pages, "has stopped, period," Bargmann said.

A shortage of personnel

The total library staff has been reduced by 15 in the last two years, the report states, resulting in an "acute" shortage of staff workers.

Key positions remain unfilled due to lack of money which prevents the initiation of any national searches for permanent replacements.

Paroissien said there are not enough trained workers in the Reference Department, one of the most important departments in the library.

Library staffers and student workers have not been rehired, while the number of hours on employee paychecks are cut.

Edla Holm, head of the inter-library loan program, said layoffs have made staffing this department a difficult task.

"We are extremely short-handed," Holm said.

Sinking national ranking

By looking at the University Library's national ranking based on data compiled by the current 107 members of the Association of Research Libraries, the library's ranking based on specified criteria has dropped from 43 in 1976 — which was just above the average ranking of the then 94 members.

In the following ten years, the ARL rankings continued to fall except in 1987 when it briefly recovered because of an emergency infusion of funds. But the "downward spiral" continues, the report says.

This ranking plunged to 72 in 1990, 80 in 1991 and may even fall below 100 when a full analysis of the latest data is completed.

Such declines in national rankings could cause the ARL to pass a "probationary sentence" on the library, the report warns, which could bring "disastrous" problems to faculty trying to receive grants and awards through national competitions.

In addition, the accreditation of the University is partly based on the resources of the library on campus. Paroissien said the University will be "less attractive" in the eyes of prospective students and faculty.

According to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning, enrollment is at the lowest point in two decades.

"It will be harder to attract good people," Paroissien said, if the state fails to support a library which must provide up-to-date materials via the latest electronic equipment.

Outdated technologies

Antiquated computers and inadequate microform machines illustrate the critical state the University Library is mired in. The report calls for the replacement of the dated LS/2000 on-line library catalog since its parent company will not support the system beyond 1995.

If this decision is not made in the next few years, the highly-touted computerized access to the Five-College System will become unavailable. "It's really crucial that the library make a new decision about a new system," Paroissien said.

In addition, the report says, broken microfilm and microfiche readers have inhibited the use of these resources even though the University Library houses over one and a half million microforms, according to the Five College Library Guide.

Brace said the billing system for overdue books, for example, is not only "inadequate" but also "labor intensive."

A hurting building

Although the report doesn't detail the structural damages to the various buildings in the University Library System, staff say such problems persist.

Kimmel said an entire wall in the interlibrary loan office is deteriorating, while broken heating pipes make for "poor" working conditions.

"As is true elsewhere on campus, our ceilings leak, jeopardizing our collections, our walls crumble and our heating pipes burst, causing flooding," Kimmel wrote in a letter to the editor published in the Collegian this week.

What must be done

The report calls for the immediate increase in "minimum expenses" for Fiscal Year 1993 to offset "disastrous consequences for all library users."

The report asks for $300,000 to keep the already greatly reduced amount of serials the library receives, an additional $500,000 to purchase 12,500 more books next year and $300,000 to hire at least 10 more staff.

To reach the median ARL ranking by Fiscal Year 1995, the report says the University Library would need a $15,000,000 budget increase which could be spread over the next three years.

Additional Goals:

- An increase in the level of library expenditures per student to bring the libraries to at least the national average.
- Additional funds to remedy past inadequacies in the purchase of books and journals.
- Capital outlays to preserve and protect the University's investment in its print and electronic collections.

The report will be presented to the Faculty Senate on February 13. "For so long, the library has been treated like a poor relative," said Paroissien.

"If only we could get through to the [State] Legislature," he said, "the problem could be turned around."

"You waste valuable time and sleep going to Amherst to do research when all we need should be right here in this huge library," he continues.

"You have to worry about the reputation of the school if the reputation of the library is bad. It's the intellectual center of the campus," said sophomore environmental science major Michael Kerble.

"What's happening with the library just reflects the overall downward trend of the University in general," said David Yos, a senior in the school of management. "The library is just one frightening example."

Megan Scott, a sophomore exercise science major, works in the circulation department of the library and experiences first-hand the frustration of working in an understaffed library.

"This place is a shambles," she said. "The books get so disorganized, and there's so few staff to get things back in shape. It's ridiculous."

"I worry if maybe I should transfer," she added. "This used to be a good school."

Top ten similarities between grandparents and students

Sequels aren't always as good as the originals. One can never quite capture that same magic which was so evident in a first piece. For example, Karate Kid II and III. Enough said?

Over break I went down for my annual visit to see Nana B and "the girls" (remember them?). But I discovered something new on this trip I never quite noticed before. Among laughs and Rummy Q games, I witnessed some striking similarities between their lives and ours, as college students. Living away from our families, both of us are on our own. Their families having left them, we having left ours.

Rummaging through a flea market with "the girls" one day, I came up with a list of all these similarities.

Narrowing it down to the ten best, I came up with: The TOP TEN SIMILARITIES BETWEEN GRANDPARENTS AND COLLEGE STUDENTS.

10. Grandparents, for the most part, live in separate retirement complex buildings. We live on a campus in residence halls.

9. They have a clubhouse, we have a Student Union.

8. We play our radios loud because we "get into the music." They play theirs loud because they can't hear too well. (Ever wonder why they can't hear?)

7. We both get discounts at the movies.

6. They have monthly complex meetings to discuss upcoming events like repainting the walkway. We have House Council meetings to plan "Pizza-Vators."

5. They need their ID's to get into the pool. We need them to get into the Dining Commons.

4. We both live on fixed incomes, cut coupons and buy store brands. And while they watch their social security checks decrease in size, we watch our tuition fees increase and rise.

3. We both complain of a lack of sleep. Their reason being aches and pains. Ours? Papers, tests, hangovers...

Felice Cohen

2. We are both careful about our health. They practice safe eating habits because of ulcers and high blood pressure. We practice safe sex because of AIDS.

1. And the number one similarity between grandparents and college students is MAIL. Running and sprinting, we attack those tiny little boxes each day. Peering inside, we both hope that some processed piece of bark will be staring back at us, waiting to be torn open and ready to come to life.

Though I did discover one major difference: how we look at life. For us, we are about to go out and start a life. For our grandparents, that chapter has ended. Eager to tell their stories and offer suggestions, their aim is not to bore, but to educate.

Learning from your mistakes doesn't erase them, it only keeps you from making them again. But learning from other's mistakes may save you from making them in the first place.

Lounging by the pool, the hot sun reflected off the water and onto their cherubic faces. Rattling on, they began to list the numerous activities in which they were involved. Before I left "the girls," I asked if they had any advice to share with college students up in Amherst. Here is what they had to say.

"Practice safe sex." — Florence M.

"Be neater." — Sylvia G.

"Never mind what others do. Be what you are comfortable with in yourself." — Molly R.

"Save for the future." — Nana B.

I was overcome by one in particular. Summing up her reasons for staying so active, Nettie, who owns twenty-two Rod Stewart albums and works summers at Yosemite National Park said, "I'd rather wear away than waste away."

Now if that doesn't motivate you, nothing will.

Secured with their advice and warnings, I was ready to face reality again. Landing in Boston, their voices still echoed in my ears. Strangely enough, I didn't feel as if I had returned from a trip to Florida, but instead from the future, having been given a second chance at life.

Cuts for wealthy a bad idea

George Bush and classism go way back.

In a 1988 presidential debate, Bush scolded former Gov. Michael Dukakis for promoting class warfare by suggesting the wealthy bear more of this nation's fiscal responsibility. In short, Bush saw taxing the five percent of our nation most able to pay taxes as some sort of marxist-socialist-democrat idea.

Three years later, Bush is demanding Congress to pass a capital gains tax cut on the premise of boosting economy.

Greg Sukiennik

While Democrats are crying "foul," Bush is taking a page out of Ronald Reagan's book (clones tend to act alike) by dismissing serious criticism with anecdotes.

He joked in his State of the Union Address, "And I'll tell you, those of you who say, 'oh, no, someone who's comfortable may benefit from that,' you kind of remind me of the old definition of the Puritan who couldn't sleep at night, worrying that somehow, someone somewhere was having a good time."

True, some people in this nation can't sleep at night. Because they lost their jobs. Because they're sleeping in a shelter. Because they can't pay their bills.

Capital gains tax cuts are not the cure-all that Bush or his orange-haired twin in Boston, William Weld, think they are. If you really need proof, look around at the results of the last capital gains tax cut — the current recession.

The concept of cutting capital gains is that if businesses and private investors have more money, they will invest that money, creating new jobs. On paper, this works well. But as the tax incentives of the Reagan era proved, the wealthy are more likely to heed Steve Miller's advice: "Go on, take the money and run."

If I gave you 100 bucks to do with what you willed, would you give it to a homeless person or donate it to charity? Or would you buy as many Bee Gees compact discs as you could carry back to campus?

Well, maybe you would donate the money, because the Bee Gees are so passe. No complaint there. But if you were a wealthy individual and the Federal government offered to give you a huge tax break, would you reinvest the money in manufacturing jobs in the hope of making some of it back, or would you rake in major profits through insider trading?

The very nature of the profit motive in particular, and free-market capitalism in general, suggests tax incentives and capital gains cuts will only make the rich richer. This isn't a boost for the economy. It's a late holiday present for the Fortune 500. If government cannot force the private sector to reinvest— which it cannot — tax breaks might as well be a giveaway.

The middle class are taking a beating in the current economy. The poor, of course, have been taking a beating the whole time, but you'll never see tax cuts for them. They can't contribute political action money they don't have, after all.

The wealthy, of course, have all sorts of political influence and the capital to back it up. Wouldn't you know, it's an election year. Bush would be foolish to alienate his base of support, that wealthiest 5 percent, by making them actually pay taxes. But by putting more money in his friends' pockets, Bush increases his already excellent chances of re-election.

The rich get richer while the poor get poorer. Sounds like grounds for class warfare to me.

Thank you and farewell, Jim Reid

Dear Jim Reid,

On behalf of the UMass Women's Soccer — thank you for:

- Insisting on meeting and taking time to talk to our top recruits (five of six who met Jim Reid, signed).
- The 6 a.m. inspirational speech before our Florida trip.
- Coming to our games and practices.
- Your example of dedication, work ethic, honesty and integrity.
- The weekly "You Wild Man" hi-fives.
- Being available at anytime just to talk.
- For being the epitome of a UMass "Team Player" and for your loyalty to UMass athletics.
- Dragging me (with no prior notice, in a dirty track suit!) to talk to the football boosters.
- For featuring our April Kater and myself at your luncheon.
- For being my friend.

Our & my best regards,

Jim Rudy

Head Coach Women's Soccer

On behalf of myself, I want to thank you for:

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Hello, my name is Brooke and for the next couple of minutes I'll be your [interim] Notes commentator. I will try to keep the spirit of the usual Notes by using a relaxed tone of utter nonsense and stupidity. Please sit back and observe the no-smoking sign, which will be lit for the duration . . . blah, blah.

Let's jump right in with Quote of the Week — this is from a guy named Sam: "I've never had a class in that big brick building — what is that?" (Sam is referring to the library. Hmmm . . . poor Sam.)

Yeah. I'm from New Jersey. So what. Oh, that's real funny! No, I haven't heard that one yet. I don't live off an exit. Yeah, I've heard the armpit one . . .

Hey, have you ever had a dream that you're wearing purple bellbottoms with a mushroom patch on the knee, and David Letterman rises up out of the ground and asks you to be in "Stupid Human Tricks," while Paul Schaffer, wearing only a shiny blue G-string, holds you in a headlock and gives you a noogie? What? Oh, uh . . . neither have I.

Quote #2 of the Week — discovered on the back of a large, steel exit door in a dark spooky stairwell in the Campus Center: "If the wages of sin are death, then after taxes it's more of just a tired feeling." I don't know, I thought it was kind of amusing.

Did you hear about that guy who ate an entire plane (a small one) piece by piece over several years? My god, can you imagine what that would do to a body? Burp. "Oh, excuse me. These newfangled hydraulic brakes keep repeating on me." "Hey buddy, ya got some wingbolts stuck in yer teeth there. Whaddaya, savin' em fer later?"

Why do guys wear cologne to brunch?

Brooke C. Wheeler

Wouldn't it be great if they had a doll called "Mom" that was made especially for homesick college freshmen? "It walks! It talks! It reads your mail!" You could put it in the corner of your room, and a special sensor would detect when a piece of clothing hits the floor. They could have a Jewish Mom version and an Italian Mom, and maybe even a Divorced Single Mom and a Menopausal Mom ...

I saw "Fried Green Tomatoes" last weekend. I laughed, I cried, it became a part of me.

On a more somber note, I would like to take a moment to bid a fond farewell to Sam, that guy who's responsible for Quote #1 of the Week. Sam left this school yesterday for good. He couldn't take UMass kicking him in the pants anymore. I know I've sure had the same feeling in the past, but for some reason I'm still here. Maybe I'm just a glutton for punishment, but anyway, I'm going to miss Sam.

What color is "puse"?

Fer cryin' out loud, why didn't the Skipper and Gilligan just build a boat? And, if they were just going on a three-hour tour, how come Ginger and Mrs. Howell brought so many different outfits?

Quote #3 of the Week: "Oh, my nose! Oh, my nose! Oh, my nose!" — Marcia Brady.

And so this installment of Notes from the Bottom of My Shoe comes to an end. Incidentally, you can send me mail & things even though I'm not a phallic burrito. Address it: Brooke the Supreme Paper Clip, 113 Campus Center. You can tell me I smell more like fresh-roasted peanuts. You can also channel my past lives through Madame Elvin. She hangs out by the cash machines.

Clinton victim of the press

Bill Clinton, or "Wild Bill" as he has come to be known, has made big news recently. He is attracting so much attention these days not due to his primary campaigning in New Hampshire but rather because of his alleged affair with a former Miss America, Gennifer Flowers. The allegations made by Star magazine have been tirelessly repeated by every so-called reputable news source in the country.

Peter LaConfora

These news sources claim that once Clinton acknowledged the accusations, they could not be ignored as they had become a significant factor in his campaign. What these reporters omit however, is that it is the press themselves who made it a significant issue by responding to the Star's lead. Had it been the Star alone that had reported on these allegations, the issue would most likely not have taken on such unwarranted significance.

I am not suggesting that the press should necessarily have ignored the entire issue. The story should have been considered in its place, along with the other issues of his campaign. This, however, was not the case and Nightline, as well as several other news sources, blew the issue completely out of proportion.

The media's response to these allegations was an attempt to attract viewer attention to themselves by dishing out just what the American public is hungry for: sensationalism. One need look no further than the success of daytime shows, such as A Current Affair, Geraldo and Sally Jessy Raphael, to realize that the public is absolutely fascinated with sensationalized issues of sex and violence. Add a famous personality to this mixture and ratings go through the roof.

Perhaps it is human instinct to be attracted to the failings of others so as to be able to judge them while ignoring our own faults. By condemning others who seem worse off than ourselves, we invariably absolve our own guilt and thus feel better about ourselves. Perhaps this is why we are so entertained by the exploitation of other people's failures. The real problem arises when this superficial attraction to the sensational replaces our ability to think logically about issues of real meaning and substance. For example, how many of us are as familiar with Clinton's stance on health care and economic reform as we are with his sex life?

There is nothing new about this media manipulation. Only this past year we have witnessed the media circus of the Smith trial and the embarrassing spectacle of the Thomas hearings. These events were a pathetic commentary on our nations priorities and in Clinton's case, it is even more dangerous.

THE MAN WAS ATTRACTED TO POLITICS.
THE PUBLIC WAS ATTRACTED TO THE CANDIDATE.
THE POLITICIAN WAS ATTRACTED TO THE WOMAN.
THE WOMAN WAS ATTRACTED TO MONEY.
THE PRESS WAS ATTRACTED TO THE STORY.
FATAL ATTRACTION.
IT'S DISGUSTING. NOW WHAT'S THE LATEST DEVELOPMENT?

When considering something as important as choosing a presidential candidate, we must differentiate between the important issues and those whose importance is sensationalized. Otherwise we put ourselves in danger of making choices of the utmost importance with clouded judgement.

Peter LaConfora is a UMass student.

If you want to achieve the ultimate orgasm, hold the male

In parts of Europe and the United States, antiquated patriarchal laws hold sexual relations between women to be impossible because "sexual intercourse" is defined as penetration of the vagina by the penis. If there's no penis, male medieval lawmakers reasoned, there can be no intercourse. Because English Common Law doesn't consider lesbian sex possible, in England and Ireland lesbians aren't prosecuted under the sodomy laws that target gay men. (The patriarchy condemns these nonconforming men as traitors for failing to use their phalluses to perpetuate the sexual domination of women.)

Sometimes when I read some sizzling lesbian erotica, or reflect upon my own experiences with women, I laugh at this irony. If only those long-dead, ball-brained patriarchs could know how easily female sexuality can blossom and thrive without the presence of a penis!

Frankly, as a lesbian I concede a bias on the issue, I think lesbian sex has a number of significant advantages over the traditional heterosexual model.

First of all, between two women there exists no mentality of conquest and there are no perverted notions of "deflowering a virgin" or, as expressed in the cruder, more modern term, "popping a cherry." Painfully drawing blood from a torn hymen is both unnecessary and unwanted between two women lovers. There is no need to "prove our virility" at the expense of our partner.

There's something very natural about a woman touching another woman. We know how to please each other. I have heard from few lesbians who did not thoroughly enjoy their first encounters. But I have heard more than a few stories from straight women who had painful sexual initiations at the hands of insensitive men.

Trystan Skeigh

Secondly, between two women sex is a process of mutually giving and sharing pleasure. There can be no self-oriented [expletive]-ing between women. One makes love to the other with the other's satisfaction in mind. Women never ejaculate early, roll over and fall asleep.

The risk of woman-to-woman transmission of sexual disease is much less than in heterosexual sex, because there is less exchange of bodily fluids and there are gentler methods. Two women can have a fabulous time while practicing "safer sex."

Perhaps the most obvious advantage to lesbian sex is the absence of semen. This means no birth control pills with their unhealthy side effects, no diaphragms or condoms with nonoxyl-9, zero risk of ever needing an abortion, and above all, total control of reproduction. No lesbian will ever have an unwanted child. The only possible pregnancies are planned.

For lesbians, the world is not phallocentric, with power operating within a set pattern of conquests, invasions and physical force. Our world view, as so beautifully explained by Black lesbian feminist Audre Lorde, flows from the eros at the center of our being, and allows us to envision a world based on sharing, openness and trust. If you still don't get my drift, compare a Georgia O'Keefe painting to the image of a nuclear missile.

More women need to re-examine sexism in our world. It is easy for lesbians to reconnect with our own inner strength because our lives place us in direct opposition to the male paradigm that shapes heterosexual society.

Men fail to see the reality of lesbians because they are unable to conceive of relationships independent from themselves. They need to develop a more holistic understanding of the awesome breadth of human experience. It is up to women to communicate our differences. Frankly, I think Lysistrata had the right idea!

US policy in Haiti is racist

Since the military coup in Haiti, there have been more than 3500 innocent civilians killed. About 1000 people are missing. Every day, countless bodies are being discovered in mass graves.

Since Sep. 30, there has not been a day without at least fifteen killings. The Haitian army, which consists of men trained by the U.S., has been running a terror campaign, killing babies and pregnant women.

Moise Tirado

On Dec. 20, my cousin was arrested, tortured, then shot six times. He was only 23. That same month, a university student was arrested and died from head injuries as a result of the beating he received. University students are being arrested, tortured, raped and killed. Every day, countless headless bodies of young men and women are found throughout the country, a new method used by the army to prevent people from identifying their loved ones.

Throughout these horrors, Haitians have looked to the U.S. for help. They have risked their lives on unsafe boats for refuge until the return of their democratically elected president. The U.S. government has been responding by giving more weapons and allowing their ambassador, Mr. Adams, to coach the military on how to retain power. Mr. Bush's decision to send Haitians looking for asylum back to their country, knowing that most of them will be tortured and killed, puts him on the same pedestal as those who are killing and torturing children and women.

The U.S. has always maintained a racist policy against Haiti, the second country to fight and free itself from colonization. A country which has fought for the U.S. for their independence from the British, and gave the U.S. protection for their ships in the late 1700s, when the U.S. was not yet a superpower.

Now that Haitians are asking the U.S. for help, Mr. Bush prefers to turn his back and send thousands more of them to their death. Despite the report published in Amnesty International acknowledging that thousands of Haitians are being killed, Mr. Bush said that the only trouble the Haitians are in is economic, and that there are no records to prove that their lives will be in danger in Haiti.

Mr. Bush went all the way to the middle east to "restore democracy," yet he refuses to do the same for a country thirty minutes off his coast. Why? Does he believe in freedom and democracy only for some? If Mr. Bush truly believes in a gentler, kinder world, why is he so determined to let the massacre of so many people go on? Is the life of a Kuwaiti more important than that of a Haitian?

I pray every day that no more of my family will be killed. I understand that Mr. Bush's intent is to limit the amount of Blacks in this country. But all we are asking is the restoration of democracy in our country so we can go home.

We share the same aspiration for freedom as the average American citizen does, and have always fought for the freedom of others. We have helped Columbia, San Salvador, Venezuela, the U.S. and many other countries fight for freedom and justice. When the U.S. was losing to the British in 1777 in the fight of Savannah, we were quick to come to their rescue, and helped them win. Where are they now that we need them?

I call to all of you freedom-loving people to write to your senators and congressmen urging them to pressure Mr. Bush into doing something. You are the only hope we have to stop the massacre.

"Pirate" runs with wrong crowd

Once again, Charles Venator "The Pirate," is masking his name and history from the UMass community by making accusations and assumptions about the closing of the Latin American Cultural Center (LACC). A pirate is described by the American Heritage Dictionary as "one who robs at sea or plunders the land from the sea without commission from a sovereign nation." That is exactly what the "pirate" is doing. With a handful of friends that were born with silver spoons in their mouths, he is criticizing the closing of the LACC. What does the "pirate" know about struggles of the people? How can he seriously consider himself a member of the "oppressed?"

What a joke . . .the LACC closing had nothing to do with BCP. It had nothing to do with wanting to misinform the Latin American community on campus. On the contrary, it had to do with the lack of respect that the "pirate" and the administrators responsible for the LACC had for the mission and goals of the center.

We all know that in the history of the University, there were never as many cultural activities planned for Latinos as there were in the past three years. Yet, the space of the LACC was a mere 10 x 12 box next to a student lounge.

It is unfortunate that the "pirate" and some administrators only showed up when there was food. It is not a coincidence that the "pirate" never attended one of the LACC's public meetings that took place every Thursday. He and the administrators had an opportunity to make a difference, but chose not to.

The LACC closed its doors in protest of the numerous injustices committed against students of color on campus. It is an attempt to make a statement to the administration and students like the "pirate" that we were not going to have business as usual while other people of color were shamefully treated.

Cultural centers serve as pillars for the "university's hypocritical claim of multiculturalism."

There are a lot of things that the "pirate" does not know about Latinos here on campus because he has chosen to mingle with a very select group of people. The "pirate" does not know what is happening because he abandoned ship and when the sea gets calmed, he comes out shooting from the hip.

I urge the "pirate" to join Latinos in this struggle or face the consequences with his conscience when the sea gets rough (very soon) again. The "pirate" should stop ripping people off with lies and fantasy. There is still time to join the movement.

Thank you, boys, for all your help

To the boys who surrounded my car outside Lambda Chi last Sunday night, thank you for making Superbowl Sunday memorable for me. Nothing warms the heart of a lone woman stalled outside of a frat more than the sight of a group of all-American, football-loving, beer-drinking guys coming to the rescue. As a blond, I, of course, know nothing about cars, but you hunks knew that banging on the sides, trying the locked door handles and yelling "baby" would restart my engine quickly.

Sorry that I almost ran one of you over. Oops. You know, female drivers!

this weekend

A time to Dead, a night to dance.

By DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Staff

Live rock n' roll is never at a low in the happy valley, and this weekend is no exception. Friday night at Katina's, excuse me, Vertex Nightclub starts a rollercoaster ride you won't soon forget.

You'll start the ride with ol' faithful Max Creek. Their 60's influenced jams stretch imagination with guitar wizardry and full precision as a unit. They're tight. Playing for over twenty years together, they know each other's ins and outs as they run through their own original tunes, as well as covers of the Dead, the Talking Heads and the Spencer Davis Group.

Max Creek has often played this small venue in South Hadley and may easily be dismissed. You know, "fit Vertex, Max Creek plays again."

"Well what about..." end of discussion.

Well what about Max Creek? Have you seen them? Get down there Friday and give 'em a go.

Doors open at 8:00p.m. and Creek takes the stage at 9:30 for everyone 18 and over.

The rollercoaster ride continues for live rock on Sunday, and this part of the E ticket you'll not want to miss. Hang on as headliner Scatterbrain and the "Nirvana-esque" Ugly Kid Joe hit hard, as will most of the moshing crowd, hopefully. Both have hit the college charts and their high energy will give you a well needed shock/break from the everyday humdrum. You're going up before the first dip, your sweaty hands clutching the rail; this is where local bands Impakt and Hard Silence will begin the romp on your senses.

Doors open at 7:30p.m. the show starts at 8:30, and the energy at 8:31 for this all ages show. All I can say is, wear old clothes!

Max Creek will play the Vertex Niteclub this Friday in an 18 plus show. Scatterbrain, with Ugly Kid Joe, Impakt and Hard Silence, play this Sunday in an all ages show. Advance tickets are on sale at the Vertex, Platterpus, Strawberries, Music Outlet, Whole Notes and STCC.

Mission Improvable mixes acting and comedy

BY SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

To some performers, it is a nightmare — the curtain rises, and they are pushed on stage before an expectant audience with no script, no costume, no scenery and no idea what they are about to do. To the people of Mission Improvable, UMass' resident improv troupe, it is simply the beginning of another night.

The group, a 13-strong band of actors and comics, specializes in producing what one release calls "witty, spontaneous combustion."

The Mission Improvable team are practitioners in the art of the unexpected — mixing comedy, acting, daring and sometimes sheer luck into an act of inspired creation. Their show comes with the assurance of being blissfully freewheeling, refreshing and, just perhaps, hysterically funny as well.

While creating good improv can be a difficult exercise, the Mission Improvable players have more than proven themselves as masters of their craft, wowing audiences since their formation last spring.

A typical Mission Improvable show consists of what troupe leader Samantha Smith somewhat ambiguously calls "an assemblage of theater games." The ambiguity, however, is part of the excitement — even the cast doesn't know what they're getting into when they step out on stage.

Scenes and sketches stop and start without warning, genres appear and disappear, and the performers trade on and off all night in a wild battle of comic one-upmanship, spiraling happily out of control.

From the onset anyone who harbors doubts that the performers truly work without nets will be promptly quieted. Scripting the show is quickly proven to be impossible, since it is the audience who provide all the situations and ideas on which the improvs are based.

Having received much acclaim for their early performances in the SVP Talent Orgy and the Earthfoods Talent Show, Mission Improvable is now moving its act to the stage of the Northampton Center For The Arts, where they can be seen this Friday night at 7:00. Ticket information is available at 586-7282.

COLLEGE STUDENT TURNS FOUR YEARS OF BLUE BOOKS INTO GOLD!
Stop by ArtCarved's display to relive your college memories and receive a special discount
A college student with a double major in physics and alchemy shocked the academic community by announcing that four years of blue books and all the memories that go with them could be turned into gold.
"I didn't know what people were doing trying to turn lead into gold, but obviously they didn't know about ArtCarved. I took one look at their big selection of men's and women's gold rings and picked one. It was easy. ArtCarved also gave me lots of custom options to remember my four years and a lifetime guarantee. I don't know any physicist who can do that," said the ebullient senior.
The big-hearted senior plans to share this remarkable discovery at the next meeting of the Future Physicists of America.

Therapy at Thornes'

By LISA LAMADELEINE
Collegian Correspondent

Andrea Olsen and Friends dominate week five of the Seven Week Movement Arts Series at Thornes' Market in Northampton.

Andrea Olsen and Caryn McHose's work spans the entire week, because their developments cover dance, art and therapy.

If you're interested in athletic training, art, if you're body conscious or just stressed out, the pair may be able to fix you up.

An art exhibit, a workshop and a dance performance are planned.

Olsen, a faculty member at Middlebury College, began her studies in collaboration with McHose, a professional in bodywork in Vermont and Maine.

The result was "Bodystories, A Guide to Experimental Anatomy." The work offers a one month long training method for the dancer, athlete or interested individual.

The book is a conglomeration of anatomical information, exercises for each part of the body and personal stories about physical problems or inhibitions.

Recognizing physical afflictions caused by emotional experiences seems to be the starting point of the Olsen-McHose training method.

After surmounting the emotional roadblock, the reader is able to work effectively with the daily exercises. At the month's close, the reader will at long last "know about their body."

The authors will be offering a workshop on Saturday, noon - 4:30 p.m. The class will focus on the fundamentals of the method and exercises for the top part of the body.

An exhibit of Olsen/McHose-inspired art works by Seneca Murley and other Vermont and New Hamphire artists fill the galleries of Thornes until Feb. 15.

The art works support the idea of memories and societal forces on body perception. Covered faces top naked bodies and material objects are juxtaposed with emotional stares. Each work represents the connection between mind and body.

This concept will take the shape of dance and creative writing as well on Friday. Olsen, who uses movement to teach creative writing, is collaborating with area writers and dancers in this performance. Authors will read their text as the dancers "let it run through them."

For info: call Thornes' Box Office at 586-5553.

Jabberwocky speaks on the Hadley Pub

BY BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

If Pearl Street and the Iron Horse are the Boardwalk and Park Place of the music club scene, then the Hadley Pub is somewhere around Baltic Avenue.

It may lack the frills and the big names the other rooms feature, but the beer is cheap, the music always live and local.

The Hadley Pub, located on Route 9 in the Campus Pizza/Acme Barbeque complex, has become somewhat of the place for new local bands to cut their teeth and established groups to loosen up and add a night to their gig schedule.

The room is not large, but it does feature two billiard tables and they offer a munchie menu along with pitchers of beer. Why this place hasn't completely caught on with student crowd escapes me.

This weekend is a good time to check the place out and catch some good local music. Tonight finds UMass favorite Minibus rolling into the Hadley Pub for some good time rock, reggae and blues music.

Minibus performs mostly originals along with covers of classic rock groups such as the Grateful Dead, Traffic, Jimi Hendrix, Santana and Bob Marley.

Their promo material says, "the music provides for a damn good time." I believe it.

Friday night at the Hadley Pub features Curtis T. and the Atomic Blues. These guys are longtime local favorites who are about the closest thing to George T. and the Destroyers that you'll ever find.

Curtis is a guitar maniac who is known for getting up on the bar, standing on tables, and even walking out the door while wailing away on his sax.

These guys focus mainly on N.Y.C. so their area shows are few and far between.

On Saturday you get more bang for the buck with a double bill of tie-dye ska rockers Baba Yaga and newcomers Nag Nag Nag.

Baba Yaga are a funky jam band with a definite lean towards getting people dancing and involved in having a good time. They are really a lot of fun, as their growing popularity can attest.

Nag Nag Nag is an alternative rock outfit that lies somewhere between the Velvet Underground and the Pixies.

All shows at the Hadley Pub normally have a small cover charge of a couple bucks that goes directly to the musicians. Go and have a good time this weekend.

"Fried Green" and "Free" as reviewed by Mr. L.

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Many people are tempted to call Fried Green Tomatoes a women's film, but that's just an excuse for men not to see it. Some are even tempted to call it "the first feel-good movie of the year!" — but I liked it far too much to damn it with that tired phrase. "Fried" is, at its heart, a tale of friendship and independence, with a dash of murder thrown in.

"Fried" spends most of its time in the small Alabama town of Whistle Stop, where two friends (Mary-Louise Parker and Mary Stuart Masterson) grow up and run a cafe. Someone murders Parker's abusive husband, and Masterson is the prime suspect.

The film is framed in the present day, where Kathy Bates plays a frustrated housewife who hears the stories of the women through Ninny (Jessica Tandy). As a result of the stories, Bates become 'Tawanda', a feminist avenger of (humorous) sorts. The present-day scenes are just bookends, as the relationship between Parker and Masterson takes center stage.

Mary Stuart Masterson (Immediate Family) emerges a capable leading lady, lacing each scene with an inner angst. Mary-Louise Parker gets more screen time here than in Grand Canyon and this gives her a chance to shape a more well-rounded character. Kathy Bates departs from her Oscar-winning psycho in Misery to be harassed by just about everyone. She's so sympathetically pathetic, one just wants her to go crazy and start hobbling people.

Jessica Tandy completes the classy main cast. She's feisty without coming off as another racy "Golden Girl". Cicely Tyson makes yet another "special appearance" and Chris O'Donnell (Men Don't Leave) makes much of his small role.

To the film's credit, the cast creates characters that the audience instantly cares about. Director Jon Avnet lets the cast, rather than the plot, be the driving force of the film.

However, this means that the story is not exactly new. For the most part, this same type of relationship was explored in "Beaches." And the murder subplot isn't that involving. The whodunit constructed in "Fried Green Tomatoes" can be likened to an episode of "Murder, She Wrote."

"Fried Green Tomatoes" will not be remembered for its originality, rather for its relaxed, Southern style of story-telling. Sure, we've seen it all before, but aided by an excellent cast and steady style, "Fried" emerges as an above-average, witty soap opera. Grade: B+

Freejack: This souped-up futuristic chase film has big intentions, but looks like a "Total Recall" knockoff. Some neat special effects at the end save it from a total waste of time.

Emilio Estevez plays a race car driver from the present, who is snatched right before his death and sent to the year 2009, where his body has been bought by a wealthy dead man who hopes to insert his mind into Estevez's body.

Rene Russo plays his love interest; Anthony Hopkins breezes in for about 15 minutes and Mick Jagger plays a bounty hunter.

Jagger's fine, I mean what do you expect, Olivier? Dull, routine, and badly acted, this one's headed for home video heaven. Grade: C-

Women's Issues

EWC serves campus, community women

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

Back in 1972, women from the community felt a need for greater access to surrounding resources. Women negotiated to create greater access to resources and office space. Although the Everywoman's Center is no longer entirely staffed by volunteers, the mission and goals haven't changed, according to the director of the center.

The official mission, according to the Everywoman's Center's 1991 annual report, is a multicultural, multiservice women's center based at the University of Massachusetts, serving University and community women, including the five colleges.

> "The center promises safety and understanding when dealing with women and provides incredible services on a shoestring budget. We do more grant-writing and rely more on fund raising and donations than any other program in Student Affairs."
> — Carol Wallace

The mission is to provide leadership in promoting the fullest possible educational access and equity for women in higher education.

EWC has a commitment to multicultural issues and a national reputation for the quality of its services and programming, and for its role in public service and outreach to the community.

Madeleine Dupuis, coordinator of counseling services feels, "It is critical that we be able to offer these services because we are one of the very few places that remain free of charge. Women come here specifically because we offer a feminist women's perspective, and we provide services that are not available anywhere else. Most people have no idea what a valuable resource we are."

EWC Director Carol Wallace noted how unique the center is for many different reasons.

"The center promises safety and understanding when dealing with women and provides incredible services on a shoestring budget," she said. "We are more dependent on external funding than any other program in Student Affairs. We do more grant-writing and rely more on fund-raising and donations than any other program in Student Affairs.

"The EWC is one of the largest counselor-based women centers in the country. Last year we responded to 15,000 requests for service," Wallace said.

SERVICES

There is a 24-hour hotline (545-0800) for those sexually assaulted or battered. Counselor/advocates are available 24 hours a day to offer support, information and crisis intervention on the hotline. Walk-ins to Nelson House are welcome Monday - Friday, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. Counselor/advocates can help one cope and empower one to deal with present situations.

The Counselor/Advocate program is sponsoring a 10-week support group for adult survivors of rape. The group will meet on Wednesday nights from 7 - 9 p.m. beginning Feb. 26.

The EWC offers counseling services coordinated by Dupre. A variety of clinical services are offered, including intake and assessment interviews, referrals to community agencies and psychotherapists in private practice, short-term counseling, support groups and workshops.

Walk-in/drop-in hours are Monday and Thursday 12 - 1:30 p.m. Call-in hours are Monday, Tuesday and Thursday 10 - 11 a.m. and Wednesday 2 - 3 p.m. Individual and couples counseling sessions are available by appointment.

There are also a number of support groups being planned for spring:

- A post-abortion support group will begin Feb. 25 on Monday evenings from 5:30 7 p.m.
- A lesbian support group will begin March 2 on Mondays from 12 - 1:30 p.m.
- A peer support network for women who are adjusting to the changes that often accompany the birth of a child titled "Motherhood and Me." The group will meet every other Monday evening, 7:30 - 9:30 p.m., beginning Feb. 10.

There will also be a Latina Facilitator Training Project, titled Entrenamiento De Lideres De Grupo Para Latinas, a comprehensive training program that combines oppression education and support group facilitation techniques.

All interested Latinas who are: community service workers, counselors, educators and advocates are encouraged to apply. The eight-session training program begins in early February.

Applications are now available at the EWC.

The Counselor/Advocate program provides 24-hour comprehensive services to victim survivors of rape, battering, sexual assault and sexual harassment and their significant others. The person is ensured receiving both emotional support and the information needed to make choices.

- The Counselor/Advocate program will be sponsoring a ten week support group for survivors of rape. The group will focus on common issues facing survivors, including trust, anger and intimacy. The group will meet on Wednesday nights from 7 -9 p.m. beginning Feb. 26.
- The Counselor/Advocate program will also be sponsoring a 10-week support group for adult survivors of childhood sexual assault. The group will focus on common issues of survivors including isolation, blame and intimacy. The group will meet on Wednesday nights from 7 - 8:30 a.m. starting March 4.

The Education/Advocate program coordinated by Stacy Roth offers workshops and trainings to campus and community groups on issues of violence against women. Educator Advocates design and facilitate workshops on topics including rape, battering, sexual harassment, abuse and respect in relationships, media images of women, and assertiveness and self-defense.

The Graduate Women's Program provides organizational support which focuses on the educational, cultural and professional development needs of graduate women

The Resource/Referral Program provides information and referral to University and community women, serves as a feminist-based clearinghouse for information relevant to the lives of women.

Located in the resource room there is also a library with over 2,000 books. Wallace said, "I encourage people to drop by and have some coffee or tea and just see what it's all about."

First college date turns into sacking incident

As she spoke about her first date as a college student, her voice seemed to soften and her eyes lowered. She began by telling me of a nice guy she had met her first week at UMass and how excited she had been when he asked her on a date for the first weekend of the semester.

Stacy Malone

In accepting the invitation, she recalled a discussion she and her mom had about dating before she left for school. "No matter how nice a guy seems, be careful and keep control of the situation" are the words she remembered. So even though this guy seemed great, she played every move with caution, beginning with taking his phone number instead of giving out her own.

The first week of the semester brought many conversations between the two, and she soon felt comfortable enough to give him her phone number. The weekend came upon them quickly and she became nervous about going out with someone she had only known a short time. She was sensitive to her mom's warning and in making the date she suggested they bring friends along. He took this well and found a party for them to go to.

A faint smile crossed her face as she recalled preparing for the date hours before. She remembered how carefully she dressed so as not to look suggestive, and all the "sexy" outfits her friends picked out that she turned down. She was going to take her mom's advice and be very careful, but she was also going to look great and have a good time.

He arrived with his roommate, a constant smile, and filled with compliments. The introductions were made and everyone sat down to have a couple of beers and get acquainted. With all of the people in her room, she remembered how hot it became so when her date asked her to step out to the floor's balcony she only briefly hesitated.

"Careful," she kept repeating. She looked up at me and asked, "How much more careful could I have been? I was careful giving him my phone number, last name, address, the way I dressed and I kept things in control by inviting him to a place where there were a lot of people I knew. The balcony was only a few doors down from my room, it was hot in my room and he wanted to talk."

They walked down to the lounge and stepped out into the cool night. After speaking for awhile she suggested that they go back to her room where everyone was waiting for them. He agreed, but once they were again inside the lounge he sat down on a couch in the far corner. "It was dark in that corner, but the way he was joking around and pretending not to be able to get up made him no longer a stranger, but a friend. Things were going great. My mom would have been proud that I was being careful and had the whole evening under control."

As she reached out her hand to pull him up, he pulled her down on the couch. Now he had control. He started tickling her to get her to laugh and then he seemed no longer concerned whether she was having a good time. He threw her down on the floor and tried to take her shirt off and unbutton her pants. When she tried to scream his hand muffled the sound. He began to work on his own clothes and she struggled.

"We were in a public lounge. There was a huge window right there. I thought I had things under control. That was the only night no one walked by." She broke free and ran to her room in tears with his words chasing after her, "If you're not going to give me what I want, then I'm leaving." What would mom say?

Karen Lederer, coordinator and advisor of the women's studies department, welcomes all to attend the brown bag lunches.

Feminist forum begins

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

The women's studies department started its brown bag lunch series yesterday. Each week a different speaker will give an informal presentation on feminist issues.

Karen Lederer, an advisor and coordinator in the women's studies department, said at the first welcome and registration brown bag yesterday how "it's a nice opportunity for people in the campus community interested in women's issues to come together in an informal setting. It's also a great time for students, faculty and staff to meet one another."

The brown bag series, sponsored by the women's studies department, is hosted by a different speaker each week who addresses different feminist issues in an informal setting.

Objectives of the forums include: participation in a community of women's studies scholars, exploring topical feminist issues, and becoming familiar with people and resources on campus.

In addition to presentations on women in science and sexual assault on campus, the program offers a topic entitled "Women in Legal Education and Legal Practice: Is It Really Like L.A. Law?" This semester features faculty, staff and undergraduate and graduate student speakers. All of the campus community are invited to bring their lunch and share in discussion.

All programs are held Wednesdays in the Campus Center, 12:15 - 1:30 p.m. For more information, call the women's studies office at 545-1922.

Senate

Hite and Republican Mark Enoch, after both Enoch and Democrat Ellen Story addressed the senate.

Senior Ted Chambers, a Commuter Area senator who is managing Hite's campaign, said the endorsement of Hite indicated feelings among students against Gov. Weld's proposal for tuition retention.

"This is the first time in anyone's memory that the SGA has endorsed a candidate — that's a signal of how students feel about tuition retention," Chambers said. "Our opponents should realize they're on the wrong side of this issue."

Hite, who served as SGA president during the 1970s, said he was proud of the endorsement. He received 40 votes, with no other Democrats receiving any.

"The deciding issues [for the endorsement] were tuition retention and leadership — who is capable of leading the fight for a higher state appropriation," Hite said.

Enoch, the only Republican, said he opposes tuition retention. He also said as a Republican, he would have more influence with Weld than any of the four Democrats in the race.

"Massachusetts doesn't have the tradition of supporting higher education," Enoch said. "I don't know of a state that has a state University that gets as lost in the shuffle as UMass has."

Story said although she believes tuition retention is here to stay, it is still possible to change the legislature's attitude toward higher education and build more support for the University.

"Massachusetts is an anomaly in not having full tuition retention," Story said. "Tuition retention doesn't mean leading the University down the road to decline and privatization."

Story said she supports setting a one-third cap on the amount of tuition used for the University's budget, with the Commonwealth providing the other two-thirds.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A monetary setback is possible unless you stay on your toes. Act quickly if you sense a threat to your resources. Friends who try to impose on you are not worth helping.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It is sometimes necessary to say "no." Stand your ground and refuse to budge an inch. Entertaining at home may be less expensive than going out this coming weekend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A financial proposition you receive now may not bear close scrutiny. Do not commit your resources to a dubious project. Turn on the charm when dealing with someone who holds an important position.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A new venture in art or business gets the green light. If somebody is promising you the moon, it is time to stop, look and listen. Keep surplus funds in the bank.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If trying to break a bad habit, steer clear of people who still indulge in it. Self-discipline is the price of success. Brighten your home with flowers or a fresh coat of paint.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Show your heartfelt appreciation for favors and those who have helped you will do so again! Close a deal that promises to be highly profitable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Patching up a friendship will take time and effort. A member of the opposite sex plays an important role in your success. Visit a favorite bookstore. Self-help volumes are worth the cost.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful about making a commitment you may not want to keep. True love can surely withstand the test of time. A partner's needs may outweigh your own. Listen to your better nature.

SAGITTARUIS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow your usual prudent course and you will strengthen an existing financial arrangement. Hopes based on logic can be fulfilled. Limit your spending to essentials.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Matters that call for action should not be set aside for another day. Weigh your options carefully before making a choice. A friend offers wonderful advice; follow it.

AQUARUIS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Go slow. There is a right and wrong moment to press your case. Intimate surroundings and soft music put you in a romantic mood. Be sure you are reading mate's signals correctly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ask your partner before you run up bills, buy insurance coverage or dabble in investments. Having two sources of income is a blessing. Be more discreet about your love life.

signing the letter, but was unavailable for comment, as yesterday began the official signing period.

John Sawyer, a lineman from Towota, N.J., Kevin Bourgoin, a wide receiver and defensive back from Rutland, Vt., Mark Shalala, a lineman from Schenectady, N.Y. and Ron Howerton, a wide receiver and running back from Bellingham, Mass., said they had signed the letter and were sending it in the mail.

Bryan Healy, a tight end and linebacker from Rome, N.Y., had verbally committed and was believed to be signing.

According to Hodges, Shalala was the "find" of the players.

The 6-foot-2, 270-pounder was a first-team All-League and All-County selection in football and a three-sport athlete at Niskayuna High School.

Bourgoin, a USA Player of the Year in Vermont and Shrine Game participant, was also highly regarded by Hodges.

"He's an excellent prospect," Hodges said of Bourgoin, who is also the State Champion in the 200 and 400 meter runs. "He's a very determined young man who can play a lot of positions."

Sawyer, also a first-team All-League track performer, was a third-team Associated Press All-County selection in football at Passaic Valley High School.

Howerton was a Tri-Valley League All-Star in 1990 as a defensive back and in 1991 as a running back and a Conference champion in the high jump and 220-meter run at Bellingham High School.

O'Brien has since taken a greater interest in sports at the University.

In a statement released from the Chancellor's office yesterday, O'Brien said, "Within the coming weeks, I plan to make some major organizational decisions about athletics, which will certainly include an increased involvement of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council and the Chancellor's Office, in accordance with recent recommendations of the NCAA."

Reid's speech to the Student Senate was everything you would expect from a football coach; motivational, invigorating, enthusiastic, etc. It was reminiscent of Joe Paterno's speech given at the Republican National Convention in 1988.

"I'm leaving because I must," Reid said. "Hopefully that will never happen to anyone else. As General MacArthur once said, 'Perhaps some day I shall return.'"

Coach search begins, Hodges plans to apply

Jim Reid — his job is vacant . . .

Mike Hodges — he's applying for it.

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts' Department of Athletics began a nationwide search Monday for the replacement of the University's head football coach Jim Reid, who verbally resigned Jan. 23.

Frank McInerney, the Director of Athletics, said the department has received approximately five nominations and 10 applications without solicitation for the vacancy.

Mike Hodges, UMass' defensive coordinator and a member of the Minuteman coaching staff for 13 years, told the Collegian yesterday he would apply for the position today. No names of any other applicants have been given out by the department.

"I want the job," Hodges said. "I'm definitely going to apply."

Hodges and the team's offensive coordinator, Doug Berry, have been directing the program's administrative duties since Reid quit.

Berry said yesterday he would not apply for the opening.

"It has to be a coach that understands the problems in the Commonwealth and the changing nature in the general academics and more specifically, the football program at the University," said McInerney, who reiterated that he has yet to receive an official resignation from Reid.

Reductions to football considered in Dec.

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

An ad hoc committee of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council considered cutting football scholarships as early as Dec. 4, 1991, according to a press release from University of Massachusetts Chancellor Richard O'Brien's Office which was made public yesterday.

"It means that a lot of people knew [about the cuts]," said ex-UMass football coach Jim Reid before addressing the Student Senate last night.

Reid said he did not believe Athletic Director Frank McInerney knew about the proposal in advance. McInerney was unavailable for comment.

Reid resigned on Jan. 23 after being told scholarships he had promised to student-athletes were eliminated.

Figures cited in the Jan. 31 Campus Chronicle by Stevenson Fletcher, Chairman of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council, show the athletic budget will be cut by $235,000 in fiscal 1993. Of that amount, $100,000 will come from football scholarship cuts and the remainder will be subtracted from budgets of remaining teams.

According to the press release, "The decision to reduce the number of football scholarships for next year was fully in accord with informal discussions on Dec. 4 with interested Trustees, with the full concurrence of the President and the Chancellor."

Final action was taken when NCAA member schools voted down the proposed "division I-AAA" alignment for intercollegiate football. The press release from O'Brien's office notes an "ad-hoc committee of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council" formally recommended cutting football scholarships on Jan. 18, five days after NCAA member schools defeated the I-AAA proposal.

The proposal would have allowed schools the option of offering only need-based scholarships while retaining Div. I status. Both Div. II and Div. I-AA schools voted against the measure. UMass supported the option.

O'Brien maintained last night he did not know why Reid was not informed earlier of the decision to cut scholarships. He said it would be "speculative" to offer possible reasons why Reid was not told, although he offered an explanation in the release.

"Specific instructions to Coach Reid that recruitment would be severely reduced were delayed because of the Athletic Department's hope that an alternative approach to its inadequate budget would be found and football could be spared," O'Brien said.

"It might have been better to recognize in early December that such could not be the case," he said.

Reid harbored no ill will toward the administration in last night's address or in a later interview.

"I appreciate the Chancellor having the integrity to do what he did," Reid said of O'Brien's decision to release details of the decision to cut scholarships. "He was advised not to, but he did."

Reid playing waiting game

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

He hasn't officially resigned yet, but Jim Reid is not coming back to coach the University of Massachusetts football team, the way he has for the past 19 years, the last six as head coach.

For now, he is just another statistic, just another person in this country without a job. For now.

Reid quit his coaching job Jan. 23 after learning from Director of Athletics Frank McInerney, the University would be unable to offer incoming freshman football recruits full athletic scholarships, which he had already verbally committed to.

What's next for Jim Reid?

He says he's had an interview with an insurance agency and offers to teach high school history (a subject he loves) while coaching the football team.

However, it's hard to imagine him doing anything in a suit.

He loved his job, his players, the people he worked with and the University. In fact, he loved everything and everyone. And he still does.

Yet, he confidently says he has no regrets.

That's the type of person Jim Reid is.

"The more I think about it, the more I think I did the right thing," Reid said, before his speech to the Student Senate last night. "There are no second thoughts.

"I love this University," he said. "I loved it on Jan. 22 when I thought we were going to have a strong football program and I love it now."

Reid understands that it is not a good time to be looking for a job, with the economy being the way it is, but remains confident (as he always is) he will hear from a university about coaching football soon.

He says this is no time for people to feel sorry for him. Instead, it is time for students to lobby. Make it known to the government, what is going on at this University, especially how great it is and can be with more money.

"It's funny how we get headlines about [my quitting] and not about the four programs that get cut from the School of Education," Reid said. "I'm angry about that."

Reid's departure opened the eyes of even the most apathetic sports fans. Chancellor Richard

Look to end 27-game Conference losing streak

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team goes into tonight's basketball game against St. Bonaventure (7 p.m., Curry Hicks Cage) looking to break one streak and to keep another going.

UMass (4-15, 0-8 in the Atlantic 10) has a 27-game Conference losing streak dating back to the 1989-90 basketball season. The streak was extended Tuesday night, when the Minutewomen lost by 4 to the University of Rhode Island.

The Minutewomen have been led by juniors Kim Kristofik and Jenny Moran in A-10 play. Kristofik led the team in points in three games, and Moran has been UMass' high scorer in two A-10 losses this year.

UMass' opponents have either concentrated on stopping Kristofik down low, or stopping Moran's jump shot, but have been unsuccessful in dropping both.

If either player can get hot tonight, it could mean a win for the Minutewomen. If not, it could create a lot of rebounding opportunities.

A positive streak the Minutewomen have going is a three-game streak in which the team has out-rebounded its opponents. Teams such as No. 23 West Virginia, Rutgers, and Rhode Island have all lost the rebounding battle to UMass.

If this doesn't surprise you, maybe it should. The Minutewomen are less than giants, as only Kristofik breaks 6-feet. In contrast, Rutgers had at least nine players suited up that were 6-feet or taller.

According to UMass coach Joanie O'Brien, size shouldn't make a difference.

"It's just a matter of wanting that ball bad enough," she said.

Unless they turn around the results of this year's first meeting with the Bonnies, it will be the rebound streak that falls, and not the A-10 losing streak. UMass lost 81-64 to St. Bonaventure on Jan. 25, and mustered only 5 offensive rebounds, 28 overall. Both of these dismal outputs were season lows for the team.

St. Bonaventure (8-8, 4-4 in the A-10) will be a tough foe, but O'Brien said she likes her team's chances.

"I think we'll get a few teams the second time around," she said. "I think we match up well with Saint Bonaventure."

Game Notes: Kim Kristofik needs 11 points to reach 500 for her career . . . Jenny Moran moved to third place on the Minutewomen's all-time 3-point field goals made list in Tuesday's game . . . Gloria Nevarez has fouled out in two of the last three games.

Student Senate votes against fee increase

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate voted Wednesday night against implementing a proposed fee increase of $2.50 in the Student Activites fund payed by all University students.

"It was a principle stand not to vote for it," said Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Student Senate.

The Student Activities Office wants the fee increase implemented to cover "fringe benefits," said the motion.

"How can we vote against tuitition retention and then turn around and vote for a fee increase," Monaghan said.

"If we support such a small meaningless fee, then we are supporting other increases," said Dave Gagne, president of the Student Senate.

Of the possible 44 eligible votes on the issue: 29 opposed the motion, eight were for it and seven people abstained from the vote, including Monaghan.

GEO contract derailed

Questions of legality concern Board of Trustees

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

The contract unanimously ratified by the membership of the Graduate Employee Organization last Thursday was denied full approval by the University Board of Trustees at a meeting last night in Lowell.

After months of extended negotiations and a week-long strike last fall, the trustees' ratification was the final step in officially implementing the union's first contract.

"Basically they reneged on us," said GEO co-speaker Peter Underdown. "An agreement was made that ended the strike, and they in effect retracted it."

Interim University President E.K. Fretwell said the contract has not been rejected. "It has only been delayed until the legal matters can be squared away," Fretwell said.

"The Board is going to reexamine the spirit of the contract. But, I would like to see things keep moving ahead," he added.

A GEO press release said the various GEO committees "are surprised and distressed by the Board of Trustees actions, and more specifically by General Counsel William Searson's stated objections."

The release went on to say that the issues of binding arbitration and recognition were resolved by Searson previously, and the issue of recognition was "clearly resolved" in a recognition election won by GEO 3-1 in November 1990 that is "legally binding."

The trustees were reportedly recommended to accept the proposal by the Chancellor's office, but instead passed a resolution to withhold full ratification until a special meeting to be held sometime before early March.

One sticking point in the contract is the issue of binding arbitration which, if accepted, would by default indicate recognition of GEO as a union.

"There is basically some hesitance with the de facto recognition of a union," said student trustee Kevin Newnan. "But I think they are generally in favor of the contract."

Still, the health fee waiver, stipend increases for graduate employees and a grievance procedure without binding arbitration will be implemented, effective immediately. These agreements are in effect only until the end of the 1992 academic year, with only the health fee waivers extending into the 1993 academic year.

The Graduate Employee Organization, which is affiliated with District 65 of the United Auto Workers union, represents approximately 2,400 graduate student TAs, research assistants and interns. GEO has been grappling with the University administration for several years to settle a contract, with this latest contract a result of almost a year of negotiations.

GEO is holding an emergency membership meeting Tuesday, Feb. 11 at 5:00p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom to discuss a course of action.

Check out candidates running for state rep.

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the first of a six-part series profiling the candidates for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Although one might think it lonely running as the only Republican in the race for the Third Hampshire District's state representative's seat, Mark Enoch of Amherst doesn't seem to mind.

Part of the reason is that as Democrats Jon Hite, Ellen Story and Terry Franklin of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham battle for the Democratic nomination on Feb. 18, Enoch gets to go straight to the finals — the general election on March 17.

While the four Democrats were grabbing most of the attention, Enoch entered the race in late December as the candidacy of UMass student Paul McGonnigal foundered over questions of his residency and other issues.

"I wanted there to be a candidate," Enoch said in a recent interview with the Collegian. "In my own small way, I'm trying to restore the two-party system.

It is clear from statements like these that Enoch takes a wide-ranging view of issues. Given Enoch's eclectic background, it is not surprising that he sees things from a wide perspective.

A graduate of Deerfield Academy, Enoch received a bachelor of Fine Arts degree from Trinity College in Hartford, Conn. in 1972. He participated in a tutorial with well-known Everglades Painter Franz Josef Bolinger at the University of Miami from 1976 to 1977.

Professionally, Enoch has been an art teacher and highly successful track coach at Trinity Preparatory in Orlando, Fl., an administrator for the Florida State Baseball League, worked for 12 years as a teacher in a federally-funded adult educational school and managed an art gallery in Oregon.

Given his varied background, one would expect that Enoch doesn't subscribe to conventional wisdom about politics.

"I would like to dispel some of the myths about the Republican Party," Enoch said. "It's good for people to realize that not every Republican is to the right of Ronald Reagan."

Enoch also said he thought many people have misconceptions about Gov. William Weld, noting the Governor's strong stands in support of abortion rights and gay and lesbian rights.

Weld, who Enoch called "hard-working and progressive," is continuing in the Commonwealth's long tradition of progressive Republicans, according to Enoch. He pointed to former Governors John Volpe, Frank Sargent and Elliot Richardson, as well as former U.S. Senator Edward Brook.

"There's the myth that Republicans are rich — but I think many of your big contributors are apt to be Democrats," Enoch said, noting that in the 1990 gubnatorial race, the Democratic Party outspent the Republicans by a three-to-one margin.

Enoch said his allegiance to the Republican Party was formed in the late 1960s and early 1970s as he grew up and attended college.

"The Democratic Party didn't have the same caliber as the Republicans [during this period]," Enoch said. "There was a progressive element and a strong liberal and conservative element which appealed to me."

ICE ICE, MAYBE-For some, the ice isn't too thin, like for the sea gulls perched on the edge of some ice on the Campus Pond.

With start of new semester, Greeks begin annual ritual

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

It's that time of year again. The campus is suddenly decorated with flourescent posters telling you to "just do it." You are offered the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to give up the D.C. early and forever. Confused? Wondering what all those posters hanging in the lecture halls really mean?

At the start of every spring and fall semester, the Greek area holds a rush period for potential new sorority and fraternity members. During this time, students are given the opportunity to visit each house and meet the brothers and sisters of the fraternities and sororities.

The two-week rush period for fraternities began last night with an information session held at the campus center. The session was run by the Interfraternity Council and ended with a visit to each house where short presentations were given.

Each fraternity also has four or five "open" rush nights which feature different social events such as pizza parties, movies, or bowling. The fraternity rush period is run under the strict guidelines of the Interfraternity Council. Alcohol is not allowed at any rush event.

"Rush is the life breath of the Greek system. It gives people a chance to meet the brothers and see the house, and realize we're not just 50 guys wearing letters,"

Committee in 1988, said he doesn't mind if people continue to have misconceptions about what he believes the role of the Republican Party to be.

"The Republican Party is blue-collar — the longer the Democrats refuse to believe this, the happier I'll be," Enoch said. "It's easy to have the blinders of the state in which you live."

One of the biggest issues that has emerged in the campaign is the governor's proposal for the University to retain 100 percent of its tuition money. Currently, the University retains 30 percent of its tuition, with the rest going into the state's general fund.

Enoch said he believes tuition retention will act as a means for the state to back out of its role in funding the University.

"If the powers be feel that [tuition retention] is the way its going to be, there won't be the same urgency to bring back state appropriations," Enoch said.

Although several of the Democratic candidates have kept a higher profile than Enoch, he believes his Republican ties could give him the opportunity to have influence on Beacon Hill and with the governor.

"Who can do more for Amherst — a small fish in the opposition party or someone who could walk into the governor's office and get his ear?" Enoch asked.

Enoch, who has said he will only serve as long as Weld is in office, said he has met Weld several times when the Governor has been in the area.

Despite this district's reputation as largely Democratic, Enoch said he has a chance to win the election.

"It's not unheard of for Amherst to vote Republican," Enoch said.

Enoch said if he were elected, it would probably be more of an "interregnum," to allow the Democrats to find an "heir apparent," to U.S. Representative John Olver and State Senator Stanley Rosenberg, both of whom served as long-time representatives for the district.

Self-imposed term limits are one of the ways of putting this country's political process back on track, Enoch said.

"You need turnover — you get careless otherwise," Enoch said. "We've had a Democratically-controlled general court in this state for too long."

Enoch said he believes the fact he can be both persuasive and open-minded will help him to be an effective legislator.

"I think I can have someone come away to my way of thinking without my brow-beating them," Enoch said.

Israeli discusses Gulf War

Author reflects on 'survivors paradox' in Mideast

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

One of Israel's foremost writers shared his experience during the Gulf War SCUD attacks on Israel and his views on the Middle East Peace talks with a captivated audience last night at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel.

Best known for his books, "The Yellow Wind" and "See Under Love," David Grossman reflected on the "survivor's paradox" in the Middle East.

The situation in the Middle East is a survivor's paradox, Grossman said. Having never lived in peace, both the Israelis and the Palestinians lack the ability to envision it.

"If one people occupy another people, they must be prepared for mass demonsration. Israel failed to understand that they had occupied," Grossman said.

This ideology can be evidenced in Israeli media, he said.

When a person is killed in the occupied territories, the media fails to use the word "occupied," no names are given, and the words "Palestinian" or "Arab" is not used, Grossman said.

"If you use language in such a distorted way...if you do not describe reality then one day you wake up to a reality that is indescribable," Grossman said.

The problem in Israel is that in the last 25 years there has been no ideology, Grossman said.

"If you live in the states perhaps you can survive for many years without ideology. In a state like Israel it is almost impossible."

In the Middle East, there exists a lack of talent to imagine peace, Grossman said. "We are so rich in imagining catastrophe but not in imagining peace."

The Middle East is composed of survivors, he said, and with that comes a survivors mentality.

"People who have been survivors all their life survive to live and live to survive," Grossman said.

"Imagine if we were to combine all the huge energies we put into wars and fighting over the years," he said.

"We are very generous in fears and nightmares, and

Agreement formalized

By SARAH LEVESQUE
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Richard O'Brien and rector Andrej Pelczar of Poland's Jagiellonian University met Tuesday, Jan. 28 in Amherst and signed an agreement formalizing a program to develop a business school based on the free-market system for Poland's oldest university.

In this novel agreement, the University of Massachusetts, Boston College, Columbia University and the University of Hartford will send faculty members to Krakow each semester to teach students and train the Jagiellonian faculty in capitalistic business and economics.

Forging a true educational link between the United States and Poland, professors from the four American schools will also collaborate in research and publication projects with a focus on issues of "privatization" and starting new businesses in Poland.

This is an "opportunity [for faculty] to interact with their counterparts in Poland and to see history in the making," said O'Brien. "The agreement also underlines our strong interest in international programs."

The faculty exchanges and future student exchanges will be funded by scholarship and grant funding by the four U.S. schools and Jagiellonian University.

The major funding behind the program is coming from the Mellon Foundation and the United States Information Agency which both provided a total of $340,000 in grants to design and implement a "complete business education program based on the free market system."

Craig Moore, chairman of the Department of General Business and Finance in the School of Management, met this January with the Polish government and business leaders, along with the rector, faculty and students of Jagiellonian University to help set in motion the new program.

Moore was very impressed by the University in Krakow and was optimistic of the changes in Poland's economy.

"Poland is about two and a half years ahead of the former Soviet Union. The stage the former Soviet Union is in now, Poland has already been through that. This is because certain industries, like agriculture, were privately owned," Moore said.

"Poland is restructuring its economy, but still the country, its currency is quite stable," he said.

"This was my first time in Poland and I was able to see what a cultural and beautiful city Krakow was, with its fifteenth century Renaissance architecture. It's a very historic place," Moore said.

One of the first classes to be taught in the new business education program at Jagiellonian is by University of Massachusetts Finance professor Nelson Lacey.

This spring semester in Poland, he is teaching a course called, "An Introduction to Business and Capitalism."

said junior Chris Grohe, rush chairman of Theta Chi.

Grohe expects about 300 men to participate in spring rush, and said spring always draws more rushees than the fall due to second-semester freshman feeling more settled.

Junior Marc Anderson of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity remembers rush as a good time to meet people. "At first, rushing was kind of a nervous experience, but once you get in the fraternities they make you feel comfortable," he said.

Sorority rush period begins on Feb. 11 with an information session held at the campus center. The rushees will be divided into nine groups and will meet later in the week to visit each of the nine sorority houses.

The groups will be led by "Rho Chi's" which are sorority sisters selected by each house. The rushees will have a chance to meet the sisters and watch slide shows at each house. Later in the week, they will attend theme parties such as Grease and Annie at the houses they prefer.

Panhellenic Council Co-Vice President of rush, Senior Marci Blacker, said rush is important because they are trying to expand the Greek area.

"Compared to the University's student population and to other Greek areas at University's of this size, our Greek area is small," she said. Blacker expects between 200 and 300 women to rush this spring.

Rush is known as a time to meet many different people and have a lot of fun doing it. "Rush was fantastic. I was a freshman at the time and living in the dorms, and I wanted to get involved in something.

"Rush gave me the opportunity to meet a diverse group of people and make many friends," said Junior Hilary Monbouquette, President of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

Graduate employees endorse Hite for district state rep. seat

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization endorsed yesterday democratic candidate Jon Hite for the Third Hampshire District state representative seat.

Emily Isaacs, co-speaker of the union, addressed a small group of supporters and news media yesterday at the GEO office in the Student Union.

"We are very pleased to endorse Jon Hite. Essentially what it comes down to is the question of access, for employees and students," Isaacs said.

"He understands that retaining tuition, however appealing and expedient the concept might seem, will ultimately lead to raising tuition," she said.

Receiving his third major endorsement in two days, Hite seemed very pleased at the afternoon press conference.

"I'm very proud and honored by the endorsement, I think GEO understands the need that this university has to stop trying to fund the university on the backs of undergraduates and graduates and start fighting for legislative appropriation that can stop the bleeding on the campus," Hite said.

Hite, who received both the backing of the AFL-CIO and the Student Government Association on Wednesday, has developed strong campus support for his campaign.

"I'm not sitting back saying that I'm a front runner, and that this thing is all sewn up. I'm not taking the vote for granted, I'm not taking the issues for granted, and I'm going to work up until 8 o'clock on the 18th to make sure that we win, and we will together," Hite said.

Hite, explaining his campus support, wanted to make it clear to the media that he wasn't centering his energy just around UMass.

"I'm not focusing my campaign on students, I'm talking about an issue that is vital to the University and the students understand that," Hite said. "Employees and students understand the magnitude of the need for more support from the legislature and shutting the relief valve that tuition retention provides.

Robert Witherell, chairman of the SGA Budget Committee, was present to show support for the GEO's endorsement of Hite following yesterdays SGA endorsement.

"Usually, the undergraduate student senate doesn't make endorsements, but we felt that because of the situation with tuition retention that students had to take some type of action," Witherell said.

Believed to be a close race, the primary is set for February 18. Hite and his supporters are already geared for the final March 17 election.

Ex-court worker receives charges

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — A former court worker has been arraigned on charges of stealing drugs from the evidence vault at Salem Superior Court.

Brian P. Burns, 35, of Peabody, pleaded innocent to charges of possession of cocaine with the intent to distribute, possession of heroin with the intent to distribute and larceny over $250.

He was released Wednesday on $10,000 personal surety to await a Feb. 28 pre-trial conference.

Burns worked in the civil clerk's office at Salem Superior Court from 1988 to early 1991, when he left voluntarily.

According to the indictments, Burns took several pounds of cocaine and up to 3,000 bags of heroin from a walk-in safe at the Essex County court complex on April 6, 1991.

Prosecutor Gerald P. Shea said investigators believe Burns kept a portion for himself and sold the rest.

The courthouse vaults are used to store evidence from trials in progress. Clerk of Courts James Dennis Leary said he has implemented new procedures to improve security.

But Monaghan and Dave Gagne were quick to point out that the students who voted for it want to make sure that student organizations would not be adversely affected if it was implemented.

The Student Senate took the stance of non-implementation because there has been a decline in the number of Resident Student Organization's and a decrease undergraduate enrollment. They said SAO should also be downscaled, according to Gagne and Monaghan.

"There has been a decline in the RSO activity level over the past few years and SAO hasn't decreased, but in fact has added," said Monaghan.

Gagne and Monaghan also expressed displeasure with the way the SAO has handled student money. Both said SAO is not letting the Student Senate or students know how much money they actually have.

"SAO is hiding a lot of money from the students, and in my opinion they are hiding our ability to know where the money actually is," said Gagne.

very miserly about the ability to live a better life."

Someday there will be peace, Grossman said, but it will take many years for Israel to be accepted and acknowledged as a nation. The ability to make peace has atrophied in the Middle east.

To make peace, he said, "We have to open to rearticulate ourselves and to have faith in the enemy."

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Do you have any experience, son? Well, I can fry-o-late

This column is for the unemployed.

You got a minute? Probably.

At UMass, we throw around words like "socio-economic" to describe the economy and the politics and all that blah, blah. Well, how about we call it suckio-economic, which would be defining the factors in government and business that just suck right now.

Suckio-economic factors have made the act of getting a job these days, a job in itself. So I'm very busy looking, looking to get busy, but not getting paid.

Like the employed, I start my day with a cup of coffee and the morning paper. After scanning the classifieds, I get on the horn. Networking! Charming! Sounding serious! Sounding confident! Not taking "no" for an answer!

"Hello, could I speak to Mr. Flapski, please. Thank You.

Yes, Mr. Flapski? Hi. I'm calling about the ad in the paper. Listen, I just want to say that I have a lot of experience working the fry-o-lator. My parents had one installed in our kitchen at home. Really. As a kid, I used to run home from school with curly fries on my mind. When I got to the corner of our block, I could smell the grease and my pace would quicken. Mr. Flapski, you need a new deep-frier, and I'm your man! Please don't cry, Mr. Flapski."

A job at Taco Bell is no small triumph these days. In fact, there's been no triumph at all for me, not yet. I've been called back to meet the manager, or the wife and kids of the manager, but no job. What I want to hear is: "Nick, meet the garbage disposal. You two will be working very closely together."

Nick Nyhan

Take, for example, the breakfast restaurant Stables on Rte. 9 which recently advertised for a short-order cook, with at least two years experience. They got over 150 resumes in two days. So, Mr. Flap-jack-ski, who's got the upper-hand now? The college-educated or you?

Why am I intimidated walking in to these places to apply for a job? Not because it's a step up, but because it's a step down. The problem is in the level of my own education. My college education puts me at a disadvantage in the current suckio-economic climate. Not because I don't have a masters, but because the guy interviewing me for a job shredding lettuce is a high-school graduate who thinks I'm over-qualified. The process: the ads, the cold calls, the resumes, the lies, the interviews, people in pressed suits, impressing, getting an "in", the power, Gimme a piece of The Power! It's all repulsive. And I need a job.

The Northampton Brewery just had an ad out for an experienced bartender. When I went to apply, the woman behind the bar told me they wanted someone with two to three years experience. "But," she added, "they probably won't be hiring for that position for a couple of months." Well, I have no bartending experience but filed an application anyway. By the time they get around to hiring, I may have a couple years of bartending under my belt. But I needed immediate references: "Pacific Princess Cruise Lines - bartender. Supervisor: Issac. Address: Pacific Ocean." How can they call and check up on those references.

The violins are starting to kick in. That's our theme song and this self-pity party is coming to a close. This column was dedicated to the unemployed. And all I'm trying to suggest is that during the futile search for a job, when you're getting discouraged and looking for someone to blame, remember that it's them, not you. Don't be paranoid, just be aware that the everyone is out to get you. Some thoughts for the suckio-economic cimate.

Nick Nyhan is a UMass student

Griping friends are a drag

I would like to know how many of you would continue reading if my column began as follows:

"Well, my classes are really annoying and I had to get up early this morning. I'm really tired. My car needs a tune up. My roommate just got a pet gerbil and it's really annoying. . . "

If this is the most pressing issue, and this is all I dwell on, can I assume that anybody will take me seriously?

What if I began every conversation that way? How many of my friends and acquaintances would have the least desire to stick around and hear my sob story? Not many.

Mike Levy

Unfortunately, classes have resumed and many at UMass have thus continued their tendency to go off on tirades which have absolutely no interest to anyone but themselves. This is only the second week of classes, and I am already noticing the widespread nature of this problem. What will happen during mid-terms?

Don't get me wrong. Your worries are important. They are truly happening to you, bringing stress, and therefore they should not be disregarded. However, when all you dwell on are school related problems, you do not relieve any stress but instead wallow in it. Meanwhile, you bring down everyone else who might be trying desperately to complete assignments and then move on.

Often, when I bump into old friends who I havn't seen in a long while, I get one of the common, stereotypical UMass greetings, which I only hear as, "Blah, blah, QUIZ. Blah, blah, 3 A.M. Blah, blah, FAIL, blah, DRINK, blah SPRING BREAK blah blah."

I might sound low on the compassion meter, but how am I supposed to seriously listen and feel for these complaints? When I see an old friend and ask them the old "what's going on?", I would hope there is something more interesting that has happened to them since our last meeting than their class which they need a AB in the next exam to be able to only get a D on the last one in order to get a B for a final grade. I get so much information from all the people I see. Even if I wanted to keep track of everybody's exam schedules I would have to buy a separate notebook.

Am I being hypocritical, complaining about all these complaints? It is a different type of complaining, it would seem. You know, an old friend of mine (during a meaningful conversation) said there are two types of people: those who complain constantly, and those who complain about their complaining.

Hopefully I will be able to create a third category: those who have ceased to complain in either way. If everybody can make a concerted effort to see the bright side of everything and adjust to the realities of student life (which even many seniors have not accomplished) maybe we all can feel better, happier, and learn something more. A positive attitude, and we might even begin to pay attention in class, find an interest in learning (which should be why we are all here) and produce more for ourselves in our free time.

Oh, yes, free time. Complaining mode tends to overflow into our everyday lives. Suddenly the clouds don't exist, and you forget to take a deep breath from time to time. Last year I noticed that a friend would only judge things as either "bad" or "not bad." The words "good" and "refreshing" were long lost from his vocabulary. I tried to show him the light, but he just would not look. He would complain often about his job, and once I asked him why he was so unhappy. His response? He said to me defensively, "I'm not complaining. I like my job. Well, except the hours are long. . . and my feet hurt, and. . . "

C'mon, let's all snap out of it. How many of you have actually noticed how on a clear night there is a brilliant view of the stars just outside Mike's Westview?

NEWS ITEM: ALUMNUS TRIES TO SELL PLATE IDEA - MAY RAISE MONEY TO HELP UNIVERSITY

Closing the center is irresponsible

Another cultural center closed its doors yesterday after King Townes and Queen Ann from Whitmore ordered it shut. The other three cultural centers, United Asia, Latin American and Josephine White Eagle closed its doors last semester, but they did it under protest. It was done because students refuse to play a submissive role and to continue to dance to "Whitmore's hypocritical multicultural tunes."

Who empowered King Townes to close the only cultural center at the University? Where is the "student empowerment over the cultural centers" and other promises that we all talked about during the formative phase of the centers? What power do the the students directing the Malcolm X Center really have? Who is advising students managing the Malcolm X? The Malcolm X Center has been in existence for more than 17 years. Why was the Malcolm X Center forced to become part of the 3 other cultural centers in 1989?

Students from the Malcolm X Center should be allowed to keep the center open in spite of the order from Whitmore. Promises were made time after time that the administration would not interrupt the operations of the cultural centers under any circumstances. I urge Townes to relax and study the situation carefully before making irresponsible decisions. He should have trusted that the students would come up with their own solutions to their problems.

State study: let companies operate MBTA

BOSTON (AP) — The state could save millions of dollars annually by letting private companies operate some Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority bus and subway stations, according to a new state study.

For instance, private companies could put an MBTA bus on the road for $50 to $60 an hour, compared with the MBTA's cost of $80 an hour, according to a 150-page report issued by a Transportation Department task force.

The task force also recommended turning over management of some MBTA stations to private firms, who would handle policing, cleaning and fare collecting. However, the MBTA would continue to operate the trains, tunnels and tracks under the task force's plan.

MBTA General Chairman John J. Haley Jr. said Thursday that he found the study thoughtful and insightful.

It recognizes that there are some complexities involved in privatization," he said.

Without citing specifics, Haley said the authority will consider exploring some of the report's ideas.

But, he added, "it also talked of the necessity of balancing cost with the obligation of providing public service....We've got labor agreements and service commitments that we're going to honor."

He said the authority already uses private contractors for a variety of services. Over the past 10 years, he said, the MBTA has saved 50 million by hiring private cleaning companies.

"We'll continue to look at opportunities for privatization. We've had some very good things happen with it," he said.

The report, released Wednesday, also recommended further privatizing measures at the Department of Public Works, where Commissioner Hames Derasiotes said he would decide within 30 days whether to privatize 11 drawbridges on the North Shore and near Fall River.

He is also considering turning all DPW operations in the Springfield area over to a private contractor.

NOW THIS IS AN ECONOMIC PLAN.–Democratic presidential hopeful Tom Harkin of Iowa, watches as one of the children at the Merrinack Valley Day Care center in Concord, N.H., Thursday, reaches to touch a media microphone.

Many DPW tasks, including snowplowing and sign placement, have already been privatized.

The task force also suggested changes for Logan Internation Airport — more detailed concessions, privatizing fueling systems and getting private contractors to manage some terminals outright.

New Africa's music exhibit

By SEMAJ SELOM
Collegian Correspondent

While the University has fallen embarrassingly behind in many areas over the past few years, it has been able to maintain a somewhat respectable commitment to a few worthy artistic programs.

The Black Musicians Conference, now in its 21st year, will start on Monday, Feb. 10, and run through the 13th. The theme for this year's conference is "New Trends in Vocal Jazz," and will feature the great Jon Hendricks as its recipient for the Distinguished Achievement Award.

Opening the conference will be an exhibition of three artists, Nelson Stevens, Adger Cowans, both visual artist, and sculptor Dorrance Hill.

The exhibit, entitled "Images of Sound" will be in the Augusta Savage Art Gallery located in the New Africa House here on the campus of the University.

Both Nelson Stevens and Adger Cowans were original members of AfriCOBRA, an organization of African-American artists based in Chicago in the late 1960s and 70s. Stevens, Cowans and the other AfriCOBRA members worked often with Muhal Richard Abrams, Lester Bowie and the other members of the Art Ensemble of Chicago and the AACM. Like the Art Ensemble and the AACM, AfriCOBRA is still in existence, and this showing will provide the public a look at the work of artists who have been creating for well over 20 years, and are still active today.

"Acoustic icongography is the best way to describe it," says Stevens.

The opening reception will be at the gallery on Monday, from 5 to 7 p.m., featuring music from the vocal group Sonority, under the direction of gospel music authority Dr. Horace Boyer.

On Tuesday, Feb. 11, there will be a panel discussion with Jon Hendricks and noted music authors Leslie Gourse and Phyl Garland. The discussion will take place in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union building starting at 7:30 p.m.

The conference ends on the 13th with a performance by Bobby McFerrin and his 10-member vocal group Voicestra. Voicestra has been a long term project for McFerrin , as over the last seven years he has assembled singers of various backgrounds such as classical, "jazz", theatre, African chants, Indian ragas, and more, to fill his group. Unless you already have a ticket, don't bother, the show is sold out.

For another upcoming show, trumpeter Wallace Roney leads his own quartet at the Iron Horse on Sat., Feb. 8.

Mr. Lupo trashes Ms. Griffith

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

What is the deal with Melanie Griffith? Will someone please explain Hollywood's fascination with her? Doesn't she have enough money to hire a voice coach? And how in the world is she so convincingly heartfelt in this old-fashioned intrigue/love story?

Shining Through climbs above the Griffith rubble to resemble a 1940's spy melodrama complete with a naive heroine (Griffith), a dashing Corporal (Michael Douglas), a Nazi (Liam Neeson), and just enough twists to make it great escapist fare.

Suspend all reason at the first sign of the plot. Griffith plays Linda Voss, a half-Jewish, half-Irish working class woman who is fluent in German (thanks to her German grandparents) who works for Ed Leland (Douglas), a lawyer who Linda figures out is a spy. Furthermore, she discerns that the dictation he gives her is some kind of code, mainly because she's seen so many espionage thrillers.

They soon fall in love, then the War breaks out, and Ed's cover is no more. When an undercover agent in Berlin is killed, Linda gleefully offers to take his place. Due to her knowledge of German and her authentic accent, Ed reluctantly agrees to send her in for two weeks. The trip to Berlin will also allow Linda to search for her Jewish relatives, who are in hiding. All of this while trying to photograph secret Nazi documents. How's that for a premise?

The result is a film reminiscent of an older time, where the somewhat unbelievable plot was overshadowed by the thrills and romance. It recalls a time when going to the movies meant taking that leap of faith, allowing oneself, for two hours, to escape into a movie world that allows a girl from Queens to become a spy, to fall in love with the handsome hero, and to help win the War. Pure indulgence doesn't get any better than this.

However, one cannot just gloss over Melanie Griffith's wholly uneven and unimpressive performance. She may have the vulnerability and naivete down pat, but her airy, child-like voice and her stilted emotions can wear even the most giving viewer.

Her early scenes with Michael Douglas are comically on key (they're supposed to be) but when Griffith is deep undercover and speaking German, it just doesn't wash. So if you really can't stand Griffith, you'll hate this movie. If you can overlook and bear it, it is possible to enjoy the film despite her (look at "Pacific Heights").

Douglas, his top billing not-with-standing, is in about thirty percent of the film. He proves a nice counterpart to Griffith, and the pair share a cool chemistry. Liam Neeson ("Darkman") plays a Nazi officer who falls in love with Linda, and he gives a steady, controlled performance.

Joely Richardson livens up her role as one of Linda's contacts in Berlin and even John Geilgud ("Arthur") enters the scene as a crusty contact.

There's really no big mystery to solve or anything, and it's pretty amazing how much mileage "Shining Through" can get out of the danger Linda is in. From explosive air raids and friendly treachery to Linda's race against time, "Shining Through" works within the rules of the genre and aspires to be nothing more.

The music is appropriately ominous and swelling, and the film accurately captures the trapped feeling of wartime Berlin; or should I say how Hollywood perceived it.

"Shining Through" is not the type of movie for die hard espionage purists or period drama lovers. It's the type of film for people who like to get lost in a movie, to disregard reality and convention in favor of good old entertainment. "Shining Through" is such a film, where romance and intrigue rule, even if Melanie Griffith can't act her way out of a paper bag.

Scatterbrain: refreshing thrash

BY PETER ROAF
Collegian Correspondent

If you like thrash music but are bored of depressing songs about death, war and Armageddon, then treat yourself to a night of serious fun with Scatterbrain.

Vocalist Tommy Christ, guitarist Glen Cummings, guitarist Paul Nieder, bassist Guy Bronga, and drummer Mike Boyko jam with tongue firmly planted in cheek bringing a fresh sound to a style of music that is quickly growing stale. Scatterbrain evolved from Christ and Cumming's former band, Ludichrist, taking the same style of music and slowing down a little so the listener can better understand the lyrics.

'Clash on Broadway' for die-hard fans only

BY MITCHELL GLAVES
Collegian Correspondent

We've become cannibals, we Americans. We have finally turned on our own history and started to devour it. The Gulf War became the Tenth Crusade, our shopping malls have become Roman fora. Nowhere is this ghoulish fascination with things long passed more apparent than in the record stores of America: the box set, the all-digital Book of the Dead.

But for every "Star Time" or "Pandora's Box" or "Robert Johnson, the Complete Recordings" there are a 1,000 releases by the likes of Yes, or Led Zepplin, or, God help us, Chicago. The most problematic of these box sets must be "Clash on Broadway."

This three disc set covers the greatest rock and roll act of all time from their early days working out a pirated warehouse in London to the band's last sessions, recording the famously misunderstood "Combat Rock" (curiously, "Cut the Crap", the "Goat's Head Soup" of the Clash, is never mentioned in the liner notes, and not one track of it shows upon the discs).

What makes this collection so difficult to deal with though, is the very nature of the band's music. I mean, didn't Joe Strummer tell us that "phoney Beatlemania has bitten the dust?" Didn't he say there's something wrong with "turning rebellion into money?" Don't any of the old band members see something at least ironic in the concept of an ultra-slick, ultra-sellable, ultra-expensive ($50+) collection of tunes about socialism and proletarian revolution?

But the real issue here isn't politics, it's whether you should buy this box or not. Well...it depends. There are 64 tracks spread over the three discs of this collection. But, unfortunately, the vast majority are already owned by any self respecting Clash fan. There are plenty of UK-only tunes off the first album, but you have them if you have the import pressing of said album, and who doesn't? There are two interesting demo takes here starting disc one: versions of "Janie Jones" and "Career Opportunities" stripped down to the bare bones and sounding pretty good for it.

Elsewhere, one finds three live tracks, all sounding muddy and off-key, like they were recorded when everyone was drunk, or done on home tape recorder. Fortunately, these are pretty short songs, so the novelty of live Clash doesn't have time to wear off.

Also included are three previously unreleased tracks and one unedited seven-minute track, "Straight to Hell." Among the unreleased tunes, one, "One Emotion," is just kind of there, not really doing much, one is just plain awful ("Midnight to Stephen's"), and one, a cover of the old Ed Cobb standard "Every Little Bit Hurts," is fantastic. Most annoying however, are a pair of "edited" tunes: "Red Angel Dragnet" and "Ghetto Defendant," both of which lose their power and intensity in these cut down versions.

Other than these novelties, every track from "Story of the Clash" shows up here, confirming my early suspicions that this was little more than a greatest hits package padded with a few varieties to sucker folks like me. I mean, the least they could have done was to include "Guns on the Roof," possibly the best song the group ever recorded, and drop the eminently stupid "Cheat" or the equally idiotic "1977".

So, should you buy it or not? If you don't own any Clash at all, and don't intend on listening too closely, buy it. If you do, save your money, or better yet, buy the original albums (for $50, you could actually get three or four.) There is a pretty good 64-page booklet included, along with a lyric book, but you can live without them.

All in all, unless you're a die-hard fan, like myself, don't bother with "Clash on Broadway."

Alarming Breakthrough!

COLLEGE STUDENT TURNS FOUR YEARS OF BLUE BOOKS INTO GOLD!

A college student with a double major in physics and alchemy shocked the academic community by announcing that four years of blue books and all the memories that go with them could be turned into gold.

"I didn't know what people were doing trying to turn lead into gold, but obviously they didn't know about ArtCarved. I took one look at their big selection of men's and women's gold rings and picked one. It was easy. ArtCarved also gave me lots of custom options to remember my four years and a lifetime guarantee. I don't know any physicist who can do that," said the ebullient senior.

The big-hearted senior plans to share this remarkable discovery at the next meeting of the Future Physicists of America.

Sweeney T. Auditions

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Correspondent

Ever felt you got a raw deal? Do you want to get back? How far can revenge go? Find out by auditioning for this musical thriller Sweeney Todd.

This exciting play has a large cast that consists of six men, three women, and an active chorus. The musics and lyrics are by Steven Sondheim.

Benjamin Ware will be producing Sweeney Todd. The director, Dan Miller, and the assistant director, Minda Zupantiotis, plan to have rehearsals five to six days a week.

The main character, Sweeney Todd, is a barber who returns to London after 15 years in exile. On his return Sweeney Todd is told by Mrs. Lovett, who sells disgusting pies, that his family is gone. His wife committed suicide and his daughter, Johanna, is in the custody of a perverted provider, Judge Turpin. Angry at the disaster of his life and family, Sweeney Todd promises to get revenge.

The UMass Theater Guild, which has in the past performed A Chorus Line and West Side Story, is putting on the play. The guild is a student run organization that is independent of the UMass Theater Department. Everyone from any major is welcome to the audition.

Auditions will be held in EarthFoods, Student Union Building, UMass, beginning on Friday at 7 p.m., Saturday at 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. All auditioners are required to show up at the beginning of each session, because a song from the show will be taught. The judging will be based on this song. Callbacks are on Sunday at 10 a.m.

Rehearsals will take place over Spring Break. Production dates begin on March 25.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

Aries (March 21-April 19): You have the energy and incentive to accomplish great things. Put your loved ones' desires ahead of your own pleasures. Follow an exercise program with enthusiasm. Better health lies ahead.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Your life takes a new direction without your even realizing it. Do not be upset if a relationship comes to an end. A shrewd career move brings new challenges and rewards.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): Curb a tendency to argue with family over money. Learning high-tech skills will boost your earning power. Show more appreciation for your mate's efforts around the house.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): Loving partners will rejoice whole-heartedly in each other's success. Do not let envy keep you from offering your sincere congratulations. Your words of encouragement inspire a young person.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): A change of procedure at work could add to your clout. Tend to those chores you have been postponing. Then, you can leave for the weekend without a care in the world!

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Helping a child overcome feelings of jealousy brings the two of you closer. Welcome an offer of help from a dear friend or colleague. Widen your circle of friends by socializing this weekend.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An influential person gives you strong encouragement now. Forget your doubts and fears about a romantic relationship. Love will find a way! A change of lifestyle leads to new peace of mind.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Although a courtship gets off to a terrific start, there could be third party interference later on. Keep your cool. An overly aggressive attitude will only create unhappiness.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Learn to be a better listener and your circle of friends will grow. Curb a tendency to talk shop at social events. A romance you thought finished could start up again!

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Projects connected with home and family thrive. A phone call you made a week ago is finally returned. Work goes especially smoothly in the afternoon hours. Emphasize teamwork.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not grow impatient while waiting for certain promises to be fulfilled. These things take time. Loved one asks a special favor. Do what you can to make a parent's life easier.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): Pay attention if someone tries to warn you about a certain course of action. This person may have a lot more experience than you do! Get together with that special loved one tonight.

Men gymnasts seek fifth straight

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian Correspondent

Carrying an impressive 4-0 record into tomorrow's meet against Massachusetts Institute of Technology, members of the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team has its sights clearly set.

The goal is to be 5-0 on Saturday, Feb. 15 when the squad arrives in Philadelphia, PA to face defending league champion Temple.

UMass coach Roy Johnson sees tomorrow's meet as the perfect opportunity for some of the gymnasts to improve their individual performances and prepare for Temple.

"Some of the people who have been inconsistent on certain events this season must rise to the occasion so we can improve our overall team score going into the second half of the season," Johnson said.

Johnson also plans on giving some of the veteran gymnasts a breather. Senoirs Steve Christensen and Cal Booker will most likely compete in only one or two events. This will give Johnson a chance to "move some gymnasts around and try some gymnasts on different events."

The team needs to keep the momentum going that it has created thus far in the season. As a team they have been very successful in their last three outings. On Jan. 18th, the team impressively beat long time foe Navy.

It was the first time UMass has beaten Navy in over 10 years. The victory was followed by a win over league rival Springfield College in a dual meet on Jan. 29, and victories over both Cortland and Vermont in a triangular meet held in Boyden Gymnasium on Feb. 1.

MIT, on the other hand, has not been quite as successful. The gymnasts from MIT carry a 2-3 record into Saturday's meet. The team's two victories both came at the hands of Dartmouth, while the losses came compliments of Springfield College and UVM.

Men's track heading to Brown

R.I. Invitational leading up to Eastern Championships

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

On Feb. 7 of last year, the University of Massachusetts men's track team were preparing to take their 3-3 record into the Eastern Conference Championship meet in New Haven, CT.

This year, with the Easterns just over a week away, the Minutemen prepare to take their perfect 8-0 record on the road, for Sunday's New England TAC Invitational at Brown University.

"Even though it's a team meet, it's more of an individual competition than anything," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "It's a nice break for the kids between the regular season and the Easterns."

The marked improvement in the Minutemen's record can be attributed to both strong senior leadership, and a closer knit and larger team than last year.

"We're much deeper this year, and we're a team that has a lot of chemistry and we run with a lot of emotion," O'Brien said.

Also contributing heavily to the Minutemen's success is the performance of junior pentathelete Joe Kourafas, who leads the team in points, as well as being a perfect 3-0 in the long jump.

Kourafas, a former two sport star at Foxboro High School in football and track, has already qualified for the New England Championships in the pentathalon, and "Depending on who qualifies, he's probably one of the favorites to win," according to assistant coach Jim Giroux.

"Coming out of high school, Joe was a good all around athlete, but he only got to do the pentathalon once or twice a year," O'Brien said. "When he came up here, he got the chance to do it every meet, and he's really starting to shine."

Kourafas' longest jump of this season is 22-feet, two inches short of his personal best of 22'2". However, Giroux believes that come seasons end, Kourafas could be approaching the UMass record of 23'2".

■ Scambooger

Trouble featured a cover of Cheech and Chong's "Earache My Eye" and a song called "Down With The Ship (Slight Return)," which contains riffs by everyone from Phil Collins to Metallica. "Down With the Ship" was made into a video as was the song "Don't Call Me Dude," both of which appear occasionally on MTV's Headbanger's Ball.

The band is on the road in support of their new LP, Scamboogery, which is cast from the same mold as Here Comes Trouble. The song titles alone tell you what to expect from the album, i.e. "Big Fun," "Swiss Army Girl," and "Grandma's House of Babes." One of the best cuts on Scamboogery is a tribute to mixologists called "Bartender."

However, to only mention Scatterbrain's lighthearted songs would not do the band justice. Scatterbrain tackles serious issues on both albums without losing their edge. Here Come Trouble's "Goodbye Freedom, Hello Mom" and "Outta Time," and Scamboogery's "Fine Line," "Tastes Just Like Chicken," and "Logic" show that Scatterbrain can write intelligent songs while maintaining their unique style.

Women's swim faces big test

New England Championships to be a duel at BC

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Payoff time is coming soon for the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team.

After a long, grinding season in which the UMass swimmers compiled a 6-8 record, coach Bob Newcomb has been looking for a chance to show people just how good his squad is.

That chance will come this weekend at the New England Championships at Boston College.

For three days (Friday, Saturday and Sunday), the women's swim team will strut its stuff against 18 of the best teams in New England in hopes of coming home to Amherst with a victory.

"These girls have really worked extremely hard all season long," Newcomb said. "Our record [6-8] does not depict how well we've done this season. We were 2-6 after our first eight meets and then ran off four-straight wins; even our losses have been close.

"We are a very young team so I'm happy with our performances this year," Newcomb said. "We really haven't had any time to rest or shave this year so it's been difficult to compete at peak level.

"For this meet, however, we've had the time to rest, shave and work on a few things; this will definitely help us this weekend."

UMass' main competition will be powerhouse Boston College which has won the meet seven of the last eight years.

"Boston College will be tough to beat as always but they are beatable," Newcomb said. "The battle for second place should be closer though. There are about five teams who have a realistic shot at second place: UMass, Providence College, Vermont, New Hampshire and Northeastern. We are quite capable of beating all these teams."

One of the key performers for the Minutewomen will be Kimberly Broad, a sophomore from Carmel, Ind.

"Kimberly performs the 400 Individual Medley [IM] and the 500 meter freestyle," Newcomb said. "She'll be our first 'big gun' in the meet and will really set the tone for our performance.

"Kari Edwardsen also will be an important performer for us in the 100 and 200-yard backstroke and 200 IM," Newcomb said.

Injuries, however, could play a role in the meet according to Newcomb.

"Sophomore Jen Jackson, our best flyer, is injured and will not be able to perform this weekend," said Newcomb. "Our best diver, Allison White, is very questionable with a foot injury.

"These injuries are tough," Newcomb said. "But I'm confident that others will pick up the slack."

Newcomb admits that both he and his swimmers are nervous but says he is looking forward to this weekend as a chance to not only do well but also have fun.

"It is a really fun meet that everyone looks forward to all season," he said. "In recent years, UMass and other teams have brought much better competition to the championships. There is a unique flavor to it because there are so many teams [18] competing and there is always a big crowd which helps pump us up as a team.

"More importantly though, this weekend is payoff time for all the hard work we've put in this season," Newcomb said. "We owe it to ourselves to do well."

they're a lot better than everyone thinks."

Defending Blunt will be UMass' Jim McCoy, a matchup Calipari describes as one of the keys to this game.

Another key factor in the contest will be containing St. Joseph's forward Craig Amos, who is averaging 18 points and 6.3 rebounds per game.

The task of guarding Amos will be handed to Harper Williams, who has been hampered by an ankle injury suffered in the Minutemen's win at St. Bonaventure that forced him to miss practice on Thursday.

"Harper [Williams] missed practice on Thursday, and Will [Herndon] had a bruise on his wrist, but everyone else is okay," Calipari said.

The Hawks are coming off a disheartening 81-80 loss to George Washington on Feb. 1.

The Minutemen must be careful not to look past the Hawks to their meeting with Temple, although Calipari believes it will not be a factor.

"Temple is weeks away," Calipari said. "We're nine days away from that. We just have to come out and play UMass basketball which is guarding, contesting shots without fouling, and playing up and down the way we want to play. Every game is big now."

UMass football in a state of disarray

•Dean: Reid should have foreseen cuts •Conference, division change possible

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

David Bischoff, the University of Massachusetts' dean of the School of Physical Education, said football coach Jim Reid was given an indication in December that the team's football scholarships were going to be reduced.

Reid said he had no inkling and was never given any notice of the cuts until Jan. 23, prompting him to verbally resign that day, after not wanting to retract his scholarship promises to high school recruits for the upcoming season.

Bischoff said Reid should have foreseen the reductions after he asked Frank McInerney, the Director of Athletics, to inform Reid of the University's decision to vote in favor of establishing Div. I-AAA at last month's annual NCAA Convention.

Div. I-AAA is a proposed football division that would allow scholarships on a need-basis only, however, it was defeated by Div. II members. UMass is currently a member of Div. I-AA, which permits 65 scholarships.

"The message given by the decision to vote for Div. I-AAA should not have been a surprise to anyone, including Reid," Bischoff said.

Reid said he was told of the decision to vote for Div. I-AAA, but had no reason to believe it was a "message" meaning future cuts to his program.

"To say I would know of the reductions because I knew they were going to vote for I-AAA is a ludicrous statement," Reid said. "I-AAA isn't even in existence. There is no way you could assume that it would mean an immediate reduction in scholarships.

"Sherlock Holmes would not have been able to figure that out," the six-year head coach said. "I was aware of what I-AAA meant, but other schools have voted for I-AAA and their scholarship programs remained intact the following year."

Reid mentioned the University of Maine, Boston University and the University of Rhode Island as examples. Documents of the institutions' votes could not be obtained yesterday from the NCAA.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien released a prepared statement Tuesday, saying, "The decision to reduce the number of football scholarships for next year was fully in accord with informal discussions on December 4 with interested Trustees, with the full concurrence of the President and the Chancellor, and a formal recommendation on January 18 from an ad hoc committee of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council."

Bischoff said the decision to tell Reid outright was delayed because, "the Athletic Director [Frank McInerney] was hoping to get through another year."

O'Brien said, "It might have been better to recognize in early December that such could not be the case, and that would have avoided the need to withdraw offers which had been made."

Steven Fletcher, the chairman of the Athletic Council, said, "The issue to make reductions to the football program specifically didn't surface until mid-January. We [the Athletic Council] recommended football in mid-January on the basis that we didn't want to drop any more sports."

John Nittardy, the Athletic Department's Director of Development, was also told of the University's decision to vote in favor of the Div. I-AAA proposal.

Nittardy said he "didn't get the impression" that the vote would mean a reduction to the football program either.

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Department of Athletics is considering a change of the football team's level of competition, possibly a switch to a different conference or division which alots for fewer or no scholarships, due to a reduction in the program's funding.

The department voted in favor of a proposed Div. I-AAA at the NCAA Convention in January, and, although the proposal did not pass, it is still looking into the possibility of joining other schools with similar financial woes.

"There are lots of possibilities," said David Bischoff, the dean of the School of Physical Education. "We would like to position ourselves with other schools that agree to support football at an equal level, with like resources . . . an equal playing field."

Athletic Director Frank McInerney said in response to changing the direction of the program, "Clearly, that is what the future of this institution is loking at with it's academic woes."

The proposed Div. I-AAA was passed by NCAA Div. I and Div. III member schools, but not in Div. II, keeping it from its introduction as all three divisions must approve.

"To be competitive [in football], we have to find other schools that are in the same financial situation," Bischoff said. "And develop it to where it becomes a viable and interesting conference."

Bischoff said he has talked over options with other schools, but would not comment on any specific schools that desired to form an alliance.

"A lot of schools are seriously considering their options," he said.

Jim Reid, who verbally resigned as the football team's head coach Jan. 23, said the consideration by the department of Div. I-AAA was, "not a bad way to go just as long as everybody played within the same format."

A key difference between Div. I-AA, which UMass is currently a member, and Div. I-AAA is that one of its proposed bylaws states, "A Division I-AAA football institution shall not award financial aid to any football student-athlete except upon a showing of financial aid by the recipient."

Division I-AA allows its member institutions to operate with as many as 65 scholarships. UMass awarded 58 last year.

The original budget had the funding to add 16 scholarships after this year's team graduated, but the Athletic Department would only honor five after the reductions.

Five high school football players inked National Letters of Intent yesterday to attend UMass in the fall.

Several Div. I-AA member institutions already operate without scholarships for their football players, including the Ivy League and several Catholic schools like UMass rival Holy Cross.

"Football in I-AAA is no new concept, including to UMass," Bischoff said of the proposal which has been defeated at the annual convention for the last few years.

Asked if the change could pose a problem to the University in its nationwide search for a new head coach, Bischoff said, "No, I have no reason to think it would. We've had applications from coaches from both Div. I and Div. I-AA schools."

Bischoff also suggested that the Yankee Conference, of which UMass is a member, is considering lowering its scholarship number.

Minutewomen come up short

St. Bonaventure holds off late rally, wins 72-65

By KEVIN HERLIHY

A furious late-second half rally by the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team fell short yesterday, as they lost to Saint Bonaventure University, 72-65, at Curry Hicks Cage.

The Lady Bonnies superior height forced the Minutewomen to all but abandon any hopes of developing an affective inside game. UMass' top guns, Kim Kristifik and Jen Moran, shot a combined 8-22 from the floor as 6-foot-4 Vachelle Manly drove them out of the lane. Manly recorded only one blocked shot but altered many others.

Maleeka Valentine (14) drives past a St. Bonaventure defender in last night's game at the Curry Hicks Cage. The Bonnies won the game 72-65.

Down by 14 with just over seven minutes left the Minutwomen went to work, and when Moran hit a freethrow with :40 left the deficit was only three. That was as close as it would get as the Bonnies' Sue Shay and Casey Comoroski each hit two free throws to round out the scoring.

Jodi Urich, who entered the game as St. Bonaventure's leading scorer at 18 points per game, was held to just eight points on 1 of 8 shooting. Beth Gromlowicz and Shay stepped up, scoring 18 and 16 points, respectively.

Trish Riley led the Minutewomen with 16 points. Kristofik had 12 and Moran and Laurie Dondarski added 10 each.

"We knew she [Urich] was the key," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien. "You do a good job against one and you let the next one get free. Gromlowicz scored 10 points in the first half, and that really hurt us."

The game was nip-and-tuck for the first nine minutes, as an aggressive UMass defense forced the Bonnies into several turnovers. A jumper by Comoroski followed a long 3-pointer by Suzie Dailer as the Bonnies went up 22-14 with over nine minutes left in the half.

A jumper by Laurie Dondarski gave UMass a 31-30 lead with just under four minutes left, but both teams went cold as the next points were scored with only four seconds left.

But what big points they were.

A missed St. Bonaventure free throw ended up in the hands of Gromlowski, who was fouled by Moran as her shot fell through the net. The 3-point play put the visitors up 33-31 and reversed the momentum UMass was struggling to keep.

"It definitely gave them momentum," said O'Brien, "because it gave Jen her third foul, and when she gets three or four fouls she tends to lax on defense. And she didn't play much defense in the second half."

Riley, whose chronic back problems usually limit her to about 20 minutes per game, played 32 yesterday.

"We've got a week layoff," O'Brien said. "Trish knew she could go hard today and have some time to recover. They'll get a couple of days off and she'll be able to relax a little bit and get herself into playing condition by next Thursday."

Game Notes-The Minutwomen shot a respectable 45 percent from the floor for the game, compared to the Bonnies' 38 percent. The two teams combined for 34 second-half fouls. The Minutewomen travel to West Virginia next Thursday.

Battle-weary Minutemen host Hawks

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Fresh off its 76-58 drubbing of St. Bonaventure Tuesday night, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team (18-4, 6-3 in the Atlantic 10) faces the Hawks of St. Joseph's (9-10, 3-6) tomorrow night at the Curry Hicks Cage in what may be an exciting tune-up for the Minutemen's meeting with the Temple Owls, Feb. 16.

The two teams' last meeting saw the Minutemen score 56 points in the second half, en route to a 91-66 demolition of the Hawks at Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse in Philadelphia.

That loss sent the Hawks into a five-game losing streak which they bring to Amherst with revenge on their minds, and their pride at stake.

"The revenge factor will definitely be in their favor," UMass coach John Calipari said.

"It should be a good game," UMass point guard Anton Brown said. "Down there [Philadelphia] we really played well. We executed all our plays, and when our zone [defense] didn't work we went man-to-man and basically took them out of the game."

The Hawks come in as the top rebounding team in the A-10, and with the league's second leading scorer, Bernard Blunt.

"I think that if we can rebound with them, and our guards can stay with Blunt and Rap Curry, we'll be okay," Calipari said. "They've got the players, and

–Jim McCoy vs. Bernard Blunt –

Blunt, the leading scorer for the Hawks at 19.3 ppg should give McCoy all he can handle. He led the Hawks with 18 points the first time the two teams met, while McCoy had 24 for UMass. Blunt also averages 7 rebounds per game.

–Harper Williams vs. Craig Amos –

Amos brings his 18 points and 6 boards a game to the Cage. He can score both inside and out, which could be a problem for Williams since his ankle is not 100 percent. Williams may be guarded defensively by Matt Guokas, a wide-body, who may push him far enough away from the hoop to stall his inside game.

State of emergency declared in Algeria

By RACHID KHIARI
Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — The government declared a 12-month state of emergency Sunday to quell spreading Muslim fundamentalist unrest and said it would ban the Islamic Salvation Front.

A month ago, before the start of an intensive crackdown, the party was on the verge of winning power in parliamentary elections.

The moves by the army-backed ruling council came hours after police raided Salvation Front headquarters and after clashes between fundamentalists and security forces left about 40 dead and hundreds injured this past week.

The emergency decree was issued by the five-member High State Committee and announced on national television Sunday evening.

Later, the Interior Ministry said the Salvation Front would be dissolved because of "subversive actions. . . that seriously threaten public order and the state's institutions."

The emergency decree empowers police and military officials to set up special detention centers, to carry out arrests and searches without observing normal legal procedures, and to try detainees before military tribunals.

All demonstrations "likely to disturb public order" are banned. Authorities have the power to dissolve municipal councils. Most of the councils have been controlled by fundamentalists since local elections in 1990, a year after the Salvation Front and other opposition parties were legalized.

The announcement said the emergency decree was effective for one year, but could be lifted earlier.

The Interior Ministry meanwhile filed a legal complaint against the Salvation Front. If the court upholds the complaint, the party would be banned, state radio said.

Speculation had grown recently that the government would impose a state of emergency as part of its crackdown. Most Front leaders have been arrested.

There were no confirmed reports of serious political violence Sunday, but hundreds of fundamentalists marched through the eastern city of Constantine, shouting their readiness to die for the Salvation Front.

Earlier Sunday, the head of the five-member ruling council, Mohamed Boudiaf, said the council would act to curb street battles.

The council took power after the army forced President Chadli Bendjedid to resign Jan. 11 after he indicated he was willing to share power with the fundamentalists. The Front was poised to take control of Parliament in what would have been the first free national elections since Algeria gained independence from France in 1962.

The new government canceled those elections last month. The council promised to restore democracy, without saying when.

Support group helps women with eating disorders

Jen Dugan was driven by a fierce terror of gaining weight. Somewhat overweight as a child, as she grew older she began vomiting, sometimes several times a day.

At the end of her battle with anorexia nervosa and bulimia, only 94 pounds filled her five foot-seven inch frame. Obsessed by her disease, she still considered herself flabby.

At one point in college she was not able to get up from her seat because her legs would collapse.

"I was committed to my disease. I was obsessed. At one point I even ended up in the emergency room after passing out. I was really afraid of gaining weight. I had complete anxiety attacks. I was very secretive, especially when I became bulimic."

Dugan was 13 when she was first put on a diet for being overweight. She said she quickly went overboard.

"I didn't stop. I was teased and associated being thin with being valued and I didn't want to be devalued. I lost all perspective. I lost control."

Someone with anorexia nervosa is generally intensely afraid of being overweight and may claim to feel fat even if they are severely underweight. With bulimia the victim often vomits intentionally, or uses laxatives to rid the body of food. Often bulimics binge before vomiting.

After losing 40 pounds in three months while a teenager, and continuing to deny her problem, her parents and doctor finally gave her an ultimatim to get help.

"I was forced to either gain two pounds or be hospitalized, where I would be tube fed. I felt I had complete control and didn't want to forfeit any power by admitting it. I was really out of control," she said.

After a year of therapy, Jen said she felt physically and spiritually healthy. "My self-esteem increased and I became better socially adjusted. It took me a long time."

Today, Dugan owes much of her recovery to feminist analysis and an understanding she learned in women's studies courses.

"When I was thin, I got a lot of dates and positive feedback for being thin. Of course I couldn't have a relationship because I was so messed up and secretive, so it didn't matter," she said. "Women's studies courses made me understand what women and this culture do to their bodies to be loved. I am so grateful to be healthy about food now. I really missed out devoting so much time and energy with the obsession.

Malcolm X to reopen

By MARTIN JONES
Collegian Correspondent

The Malcolm X Cultural Center, the African-American cultural center which was closed last weekend following a disturbance at a dance on Feb. 1 will resume its regular activities this weekend, according to the center's staff.

The move to halt the center's activities came as a response to a pattern of violent incidents occurring at the center.

M. Ricardo Townes, administrative supervisor of the center, called for the center to temporarily shut its doors until the issue of the violence could be addressed.

Confusion spread as to why the center was temporarily closed. Mai Sam, student director of the Malcolm X Cultural Center, said the decision, " helped to ease the tensions raised by [Saturday's] incident".

Sam added the temporarily closure would, "help to instill a greater appreciation for the center and what it stands for."

According to Sam, the Malcolm X Cultural Center was established in 1975 when a group of Black students lobbied for a place on campus to hold social activities.

For years, Black students on campus had been limited to using a Jukebox in the lobby of Crampton House for their social activities. A room in the basement of the Berkshire Dining Commons was eventually set aside as a center for the African-American students. They named the center in honor of Malcolm X, the Black Nationalist leader who rose to power in the 1960s.

Since then, the center has served as a focal point for social and cultural activities within the African-American community.

According to center staffers, the most popular events at the Malcolm X Cultural Center are the weekend dances, which draw students from across New England.

"In addition to the weekend dances, the Malcolm X Cultural Center sponsors a host of other cultural and educational activities" says Sam.

Last semester the center hosted discussions on issues of the African-American community. The center also sponsored a poetry reading, and its annual Kwanzaa celebration. There is also a class on Tuesday evenings which discusses the life of Malcolm X.

Presently the Malcolm X Center is the last remaining cultural center on campus.

Sam said the center chose not to participate in the protest, citing its importance to the Black student population. "The Malcolm X Cultural Center is an important place where students of color can feel at home within the University," says Sam.

Sam also announced that the Malcolm X Center will be sponsoring a dance this Friday at 10 p.m.

Franklin hopes for undecided vote

Democrat seeks campaign reform, lower drinking age

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the second in a six-part series profiling the six candidates for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Amherst Democrat Terry Franklin is fond of telling people he is winning the lawn sign battle in the race for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

This is an interesting statement, because in contrast to Democratic opponents Jon Hite and Ellen Story of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham, Franklin doesn't have any lawn signs.

Franklin says because he sees far more lawns without signs than with them, it means there are still a lot of undecided voters, which Franklin feels could work in his favor.

"We're in a four-way horse race [for the Democratic nomination] — each of us has strengths," Franklin said in a recent interview with the Collegian. "Most people don't make up their minds until right before the election."

Voters will have up to Feb. 18, the Democratic primary, to make their choice. The general election will be held March 17.

Franklin, who describes himself as a "libertarian" on the issues of citizen's rights, but as more liberal on social issues, said his platform includes protecting women's rights to abortion, stopping a nuclear waste dump in Massachusetts, protecting local government control through Proposition 2 1/2 and legalizing marijuana and lowering the drinking age to 18.

On one of the major issues among the four Democrats, campaign finance reform, Franklin is putting his money where his mouth is — he is not accepting campaign contributions from anyone.

"One man was very insistent on giving

Police nab two heroin dealers

REVERE, Mass. (AP) — Police have arrested two men on drug charges after finding highly potent heroin in their apartments one day after three people died from what police believe was tainted heroin.

The heroin, found Saturday in a bag labeled "sentanyl," was 80 times more potent than heroin typically sold in the area, Revere Police Detective Mickey Casoli said.

In two separate raids Saturday, police arrested Thomas MacLellan, 33, and Dennis J. Ricupero, 35, and charged them with distribution of heroin and conspiracy to violate the narcotics drug laws. Ricupero was also charged with the sale of narcotics within 1,000 feet of a school.

Police said the two men were working together because they found identical bags of heroin at their apartments.

Vicki MacDonald, 29, her cousin, Richard MacDonald 29, and Donald Provencher, whose age was unknown were found dead Friday by Vicki MacDonald's 5-year-old son.

Another body was found later that day on a beach in East Boston and authorities were checking to see if the deaths were related.

The Suffolk County medical examiner's office was waiting for the results from toxicology tests to help determine what killed the three in Revere.

There have also been at least six cases of nonfatal heroin overdoses in Revere and East Boston in the last several days, police said.

While suggesting there may be a link between the portent heroin found and the deaths, police said they could not say for sure.

"We are closing in," Casoli said.

"This is bad stuff," he said. "It's all over the place. I understand there were overdoses in East Boston. There could be people out now that we don't even know about."

Panel: Wells' courage an awakening for Blacks

By ELIZABETH CHRISTOPHER
Collegian staff

The African-Americans in theater and journalism were leaders for the African-American community after the oppression of post-Civil War America, according to University of Massachusetts professors.

The professors spoke at a one-day symposium following the New World Theater's Saturday matinee performance of the play, Miss Ida B. Wells.

The symposium broke out into an audience-participated discussion at the University of Massachusetts Hampden Theatre.

The three-membered panel, moderated by Esther Terry, chair of W.E.B. Dubois department of African-American Studies, discussed issues from the lynch law in the United States, the awakening of the African-American experience in theater, to the dehumanization of Black people after Reconstruction and the Civil War.

"Ida B. Wells was the leading Black journalist, not the leading Black woman journalist, of this time period," stressed Professor of African-American Studies, John Bracey.

Bracey said he praised her "tremendous courage" for condemning the lynching of black Americans during a time where Blacks were threatened with death for speaking out.

He said Wells' efforts served to launch the anti-lynching campaign that was then taken up by the NAACP in 1930 and was not overturned until 1950.

Wells, who wrote during the years following Reconstruction, was recognized by Black leaders of her time, such as Frederick Douglass and Booker T. Washington.

Wells' investigative reporting revealed the economic motives for the lynching of Southern Black people. The victims of lynchings were among a rising class of Black Americans, Bracey said.

He said these local Black leaders, state representatives and artisans were competing for the growing population of European immigrants during the turn of the century. Bracey said that over 4,000 Black people were killed by 1919.

Joy James, Professor of Women's Studies, traced the sexual stereotypes of promiscuity placed on Black people from the dominant White society, "these dynamics continue to this day," she said.

James described the accepted prejudice of society — White people must be protected at all times from Black violence.

James affirmed the "lynching" of Black Americans still occurs as the standing-room-only crowd raised contemporary examples ranging from the Presidential candidacy of David Duke to the horrifying Carol Stewart murder case, where a Black man was falsely accused of murdering a White woman and her unborn child.

Doris Abramson, Professor of Theater, examined the use of theater to record and communicate African-American history and recited a long list of plays dealing with the issues of slavery, war, the Depression, as well as the life of Harriet Tubman.

She commended historical plays for to both fascinating and informing the audience, but described the difficulty in funding such works because of the disinterest of mainstream theater viewers.

Abramson ended quoting the song, "Strange Fruit" leaving the audience with the image of mutilated bodies of Black Americans hanging from Southern trees.

Program office vandalized

Window smashed at GLB center

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

A smashed window and a torn sign at the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns in Crampton Residence Hall in Southwest was discovered Saturday morning by an undergraduate worker.

According to University spokesperson Karin Sherbin, nothing was reported stolen and the office appeared undisturbed.

University of Massachusetts police were called, and the window was replaced by Housing Services early that afternoon.

The vandalism apparently took place between 6 p.m. Friday night and 10:25 a.m. Saturday morning. The matter is still under investigation, said Sherbin.

Members of the GLB community were disturbed by the incident but were not surprised.

"This vandalism is symbolic of the underlying homophobia in the University community, which, ironically, is the reason for the Program's existence," said the worker who discovered the vandalism.

Christine Murphy, a senior majoring in journalism and women's studies, said, "This seems typical because there is so much homophobia. This kind of thing happens all the time. I'm really not surprised."

A similiar incident took place last semester, according to Chris Macek, a program staff member. On a Friday night last November a window facing Sunset Street was smashed and glass fell on four people, including Macek, sitting in the lounge area.

Macek said the Program has been in the office in Crampton for about a year, but that there was no signs identifying the office until October, shortly before the first incidence of vandalism.

Assessing how you eat

Health Services asks about your diet

The following questions about your eating behavior can help you determine if you should seek help.

ASSESS YOUR OWN EATING BEHAVIOR

1. Do you feel a desire to be thin?
2. Do you feel societal pressures to be thin?
3. Are you preoccupied with food?
4. Do you feel uncomfortable in an environment where there is no food?
5. Do you feel uncomfortable in an environment where there is too much food?
6. Do you weigh yourself daily?
7. Are you always trying to lose weight?
8. Do you hide your food?
9. Do you estimate or count calories?
10. Do you take laxatives for weight loss?
11. Do you take diuretics for weight loss?
12. Do you take diet pills?
13. Do you fast one or more days per week?
14. Do you deprive yourself of food, then eat large amounts?
15. Do you try to exercise away all that you've eaten?
16. Do you induce vomiting after eating?
17. Do you feel fat despite the fact that others say you're thin?
18. Do you have difficulty concentrating due to your concern with food?
19. Do you eat differently (more or less) in public than you do alone?
20. If female, have menstrual periods ceased or become irregular since you've changed your eating behavior?
21. Do you feel isolated because of your eating behavior?

Each of the items in this questionnaire is a partial indicator of an eating problem. If you have answered "yes" to one or more of the questions, you may want to learn more about how to change your eating behaviors and attitudes.

If you have answered "yes" to a number of the questions, we recommend that you make an appointment with one of the University Health Services nutritionists.

— This questionnaire is taken from the University Health Services.

Services said Dugan's story is not unusual of anorexics or bulimics.

"We get barraged by media, women's magazines and advertising communicating to us to eat and be thin. It's very confusing," she said. "Models are around 65 percent of ideal body weight. Teenagers and college-aged people especially look at the magazines and feel they should look like that. The truth is that many models struggle with eating disorders."

"Who do you know that looks like those models anyway?" she asked. "It's unrealistic, and it just makes women feel bad about how they look."

Today, Dugan helps others with eating disorders by working as a group facilitator for a support group offered at University Health Services.

Eating disorders have increased over the years and as many as 20 percent of college students struggle with eating disorders, said Thomson.

Other eating disorders include:

• Compulsive overeating includes excessive amounts of food for reasons other than physical hunger. Compulsive eaters might feel a lack of control about food, and eat even when they feel uncomfortable.

• Chronic Dieting affects people who are vulnerable to fad diets, people who continually diet.

■ Franklin

me money, and stuffed a dollar bill in my pocket," Franklin said. "I used the money to buy red licorice for everyone."

Franklin, who said he expects to spend approximately $400 of his own money in the campaign, said the high number of debates between the candidates and the resulting media coverage has negated some disadvantages of not spending a lot of money.

"The main disadvantage of not having a lot of money is that when you spend money, you can reach people who will just remember a name," Franklin said.

An Amherst resident for six years, Franklin said he plans to increase his attempts to meet voters in the week prior to the Feb. 18 primary. Franklin said preparing for the large number of debates has kept him from getting out as much as he'd like, but he plans on spending up to 16 hours a day after Tuesday's debate at the Amherst Cable station.

Franklin also said he supports complete public funding of elections.

"It would really gall me to spend taxpayer's money for T. V. ads for politicians [as a legislator], but I'll do it," Franklin said. "This would certainly be better than the system is now."

Franklin said he opposes Gov. Weld's proposal for the University to retain 100 percent of the tuition money it brings in, an issue that has produced polarization among the four Democrats.

Hite opposes all tuition retention, Story wants the University to retain one-third of its tuition and have the Commonwealth provide the other two-thirds of the University's money, while Page wants to keep a small percent of tuition and have the Legislature provide a more reliable flow of money to the University each year.

Franklin, who has said he believes Weld "has it in" for higher education in the Commonwealth, said the University should not give up the 30 percent of tuition it currently retains without an alternative source of funding. The University currently sends the other 70 percent of tuition money into the Commonwealth's general fund.

"There are so many competing groups on campus, and I don't want to get involved in the internal workings of the University," Franklin said. "My job as a legislator would be to get as much money as possible for the University as a whole."

Franklin said he supports retaining Proposition 2 1/2 because questions about property taxes should be decided on the local level, and a repeal of Proposition 2 1/2 would amount to "taking away the vote" on these questions from towns in communities in the Commonwealth.

Franklin, who received a degree in biology from Tufts University in the mid-1970s, said his experiences there awakened his strong interest in environmental issues.

Among the issues Franklin has advocated are keeping the Yankee-Rowe nuclear power plant from opening, stopping the Commonwealth from opening a nuclear waste dump and passing recycling and toxic waste initiatives, such as adding taxes to producers of toxic waste.

"The environment is a long-term issue — when other issues come and go, the environment remains," Franklin said.

Franklin, who has often said he either walks or uses public transportation, also advocated such common sense measures as avoiding waste and using available resources more efficiently.

Franklin has also said the role of government has grown too big in Massachusetts — using his own candidacy as an example. Franklin said he has had to file over 50 pages of documents with four different state agencies to run for state representative.

"Government has a function — it has 101 things to do that it does well," Franklin said. "If we cut away some of the fat, we can expose the things it does well."

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Participate in student government

At about this time last year, the Collegian was filled with articles and editorials about the student government elections. The administration said that they were not going to recognize any elections run by the Student Government Association. The SGA, on the other hand, said that elections would be held regardless.

As it turned out, the administration eventually recognized the elected student leaders and student government has been a strong voice for undergraduates ever since. It is election time once again.

If you have ever wanted to get involved and make a difference on this campus, I urge you to run. Here are just a few examples of what the SGA has been doing recently: 1) a voter registration drive, during which 500 students registered to vote, 2) denounced tuition retention and sent a letter to graduate students and faculty urging them to discuss it in their classes, 3) actively working towards reforms in housing. In the future, the SGA is planning to hold regular voter registration dr[illegible] n the Student Union and will have a "Get Out the Vote" campaign in upcoming local and federal elections.

On Tuesday, Feb. 11, nominations will open for the positions of Student Government President and Student Trustee. Elections will also be held to fill vacant senate seats. Nomination forms will be available in the SGA office (420 Student Union). For the president and trustee positions, 250 signatures will be needed. Only 25 will be needed for the senate seats.

If you have any questions, feel free to stop by the SGA office or call at 545-0341.

Fraternity not guilty

In regards to the letter from the woman who had car trouble on Superbowl Sunday:

After the letter was published, members of our chapter, Lambda Chi Alpha, were approached and asked about our chapters' involvement in the incident. We would like to point out that the harassment that occurred was not related to our chapter nor any individuals involved with Lambda Chi Alpha. The reference to our house is purely geographical and although the letter may suggest we were involved; we were not. It's unfortunate that this event took place. It's also unfortunate that such an article can inadvertently perpetuate such negative stereotypes about Greeks.

In America, pro-choice is pro-freedom

Freedom is expressed as the power to do, say or think as one pleases. The United States of America, being a democracy, thus entitles us, as citizens of the country, to make our own laws. It is our choice to abide by them, support them, and even protest them, as long as we stay within the confines of all the other structural laws. The creation of these laws are not designed to restrain us, but to organize and civilize our modernizing society. The differentiating opinions within the society determine the minority and majority from there a compromise is made, resulting into a negotiable law that we can all live under.

Unfortunately, in the politics of abortion there is no just compromise and you must either permit women to govern their bodies as they see fit or you can retract from them that right. In Amendment Fourteen, adopted July 28, 1968, it proclaims "...no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States..." Reproductive freedom is a privilege given by nature and a woman should have the choice in determining her own result. This is a choice to be made by a woman as an individual and not by a government.

If women are responsible enough to excel as senators, doctors and lawyers then what right does this country's government have in depriving them of their due intelligence in deciding whether they are emotionally, physically, or economically capable of giving birth to a child? Why is the government eager to fight for the freedom of other countries and yet, hesitates to grant women the authority to reign over their own bodies? These questions are incomprehensible and if the democracy was a concise mechanical instrument we would not pose these questions, but the democracy is not a routine tool, it is constructed of the imperfect inhabitants of this country. Fortunately, in the United States we are bestowed the freedom to be imperfect and are given excessive attempts to strive for perfection. Reproductive freedom is a prodigy awarded by nature and we, as proud American citizens, must not let such a precious freedom be stolen by mankind.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Pampering can be okay

I am female. I enjoy being pampered. I love chivalry. I could care less if someone referred to me as a girl. And do you know what? Oh my God is it possible? I am intelligent. In fact I even have a couple of friends who think I am too. Isn't it wonderful that I can enjoy little luxuries and still have a mind? What is more important is that I'm not the only one! There are more intelligent very feminine women on this grand ole campus of UMass. Unfortunately not all of us are as appreciative of this detail. No, I'm not talking about men, organ donors, or accordian players. Disappointingly so, I'm talking about other women.

I have several female friends who told me that they felt door opening was patronizing. They claim that men perform this act of chivalry because they are taught to, not because they want to. At the same time, isn't the same circumstance recurring as feminists demand being called women? Guys are doing it because we are teaching them to. I'm sure it doesn't matter a great deal and with good reason. In a casual atmosphere, what are we doing besides using a term to differentiate the genders. I personally am not so insecure with my femininity that I concern myself with something so trivial.

Seana Barnhill

We should see chauvinism, the notorious construction worker thing, or that repulsive okay signal a guy gives your date concerning your physical acceptance (that's what annoys me most), as simple their simple ignorance and try to ignore it. Why get peeved? It's going to happen anyway and always. Besides I've whistled at guys walking down the street. I'm sure they don't like it anymore then I do. I've also gone to the DC or Campus Center and just checked out guys for awhile. Regardless of being slightly derogatory, it's harmless fun.

I used to think the half-naked women hung in dorm rooms on this campus were awful. To the point that I would screech when ever I saw them in a boyfriend's room. Then I discovered self-confidence. Then I began to see it as another poster next to his cars. Funny thing, self-confidence.

Of course there is an extreme of chauvinism that shouldn't be confused with simple ignorance. For example Dee Barnes case against NWA. Regardless of what anyone says, there is no reason for revering the action of throwing "her through a door" which they claim is "no big thing" in one of their song lyrics. We should focus on this, not trivial matters such as whether we should be called women or not.

We also shouldn't be so closed minded to focus just on women. We aren't the only ones, by any means, subjected to bashing. What about homosexuals, Jews, and every single race represented in the US. There are much more important things to spend energy focusing on.

We, women, are very lucky. We're able to tell each other anything, because we are much more sympathetic and more able to identify with each others problems. This holds true whether we are hetero, lesbian, black, white or striped (Yes, I know it's a generalization and I believe, generally it's true). We have something that few men will ever really find or have, but will always want. That's the ability to open up totally with each other, our own sex.

It needs to be realized that women have a choice to do or be anything in the world. A woman can run for president of the country, or president of the PTA. A woman can be a goddess with love slaves or she can stay home with a juicy novel. Whatever her choice is, it needs to be respected as her right to do or be whatever she wants to become by other women. We need to respect all of these as courageous She-ra jobs.

Whether reading, talking, writing, or just being, it is important for us to respect each other first, before we expect others to.

Bible should stay out of Annex

I am writing in response to Diana D'Avanzo's article "University Textbook Annex leaves out most crucial work" (Collegian, 2/5/92).

First, Ms. D'Avanzo should realize that the name of the Textbook Annex is self—explanantory. It is a store that carries textbooks, and is not the place for the Bible. The only reason a Bible should be sold there is if the University sponsored the Bible as a textbook in a literature course or Bible study course. Since the Bible is a religious book, it has no place in the Textbook Annex.

Second, I certainly hope that Ms. D'Avanzo realizes that Jews do not use a Christian Bible, and have placed no faith in Jesus Christ. Her inclusion of Bernard Ramm's quote about the Jews' preservation of the Bible is out of place in an article about a Christian book.

Not only was I offended by this inclusion, but I was also offended by the article as a whole. I do not believe the Christian Bible is the "most crucial work", as the title states. I am sure many people on this campus would agree with me. Have you forgotten, Ms. D'Avanzo, that other religions have different books and view them as more important than the Bible?

And, I do not understand how you can "personally guarantee" that reading the Christian Bible will not disappoint me. I have read passages from the Bible and can honestly say that they did absolutely nothing for me. If you want to crusade for Christ, Ms. D'Avanzo, join a religious group, and keep your views off the supposedly non-sectarian University editorial page.

Heterosexual sex is not unusual

We are writing to Trystan Skeigh in response to her article on Feb. 6, "If you want to achieve the ultimate orgasm, hold the male." Ms. Skeigh, you make an erroneous implication in your article. You imply that a healthy heterosexual relationship cannot exist. If you believe that lesbian sex is superior to heterosexual sex, you are entitled to your opinion. This does not, however, give you the right to attack the heterosexual lifestyle. If we wrote an article extolling the virtues of heterosexual sex over homosexual sex, you would construe this as an attack on the homosexual establishment.

In fact, an article such as yours tends to polarize the college community. Do you know what this means, Trystan? This means that you piss off liberal minded heterosexuals who would otherwise have no problem with your way of life had you not passed judgement on theirs. Do you really want every heterosexual believing that lesbians are against their way of life?

You imply that men are not capable of making love and can only violate women to "prove their virility." Do you know what heterosexual sex is like or are you listening selectively to disgruntled women? You may not believe this, but with love and communication a man can learn to please a woman just as well or better than you can. Heterosexual sex is natural and necessary, not cruel and unusual.

Masqueraders about the campus

We are writing this letter because we are very concerned about people who masquerade about the campus garbed as men of the cloth. This is very offensive and we believe it is affecting our intellectual capabilities.

Such mockery of religious beliefs displays a total lack of decency and is a disgrace to the University and the community in general. All I can ask is why?

BCP happy to answer questions

The Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) staff will be very happy to explain, to anyone interested, how we use our resources to serve the students and the community. We are very happy to report that every penny allocated to the program goes to meet the BCP students' needs directly and to work with the school system to reach bilingual students from grades 8th through 12th. Please, do not hesitate to come and learn about our special projects in the community. Perhaps we can use your experiences and ideas and learn from your suggestions.

Is it safe for mom to go to work?

Remember the old slogan for the movie Jaws — "Just when you thought it was safe to go into the water . . ."

Well, I had a friend in grammar school who practically screamed whenever near the ocean — literally started hyper-ventilating. But I'm from Springfield, so we don't worry about that too much — the closest thing to the water is the Connecticut River — and it smells like refuse.

Well, I've had sort of a Jaws revelation myself — but about the future of family and child-raising.

I saw The Hand that Rocks the Cradle.

Not exactly a model example of day care — or even worse — in-house child care.

For a woman who used to think day care the only way to be a successful career mother, I shiver at the thought of leaving my children in the care of another woman.

Gayle Long

My mother was the typical housewife and wonderful mother — she went back to work, but only part-time until my brother and I were old enough to stay at home for more than an hour without any care or fear that we might burn the house down.

Finally, she was back to working 40-hour weeks, but was home when we needed her — when we were sick or when we needed the chaperone for the class trip to Boston.

Ever since I was small, I wanted to be a professional. Most kids say they want to be doctors because for one thing, they know they help sick people and on the other hand, their parents tell them that doctors are rich.

All kids decide early on that they want to be rich. It's dreams of owning the motorized car or the super Barbie condo and Corvette (what else should Barbie drive if not a Corvette?).

So, my parents pushed me to be a hard worker, taught me the importance of having a job and tried to impress the need for an education. Hence, here I am.

But, almost 15 years later — after boys no longer have cooties and roller skates are definately passe — I have put wieght on having a family of my own (I don't mean within the next nine months, so mom and dad, if you read this, don't freak out). And the conclusion is the same that my mother came to when carrying her first child, namely me.

The movie revolves around a woman named Claire, who is pregnant with her second child. While being examined in the doctor, he molests her. She presses charges and the case is all over the newspaper and television. The doctor kills himself, leaving behind his pregnant wife. His wife, Payton, flips out and miscarries.

And through the coincidence of the silver screen, she ends up as the nanny of Claire's children.

Claire and her family are unaware of Payton's past and when the family is split and divided because of the manipulations of the evil nanny, is when the violence erupts.

All in all, I have to admit I liked the movie. I wanted to get up from my seat and try to punch the woman. It made me angry while I was watching it and happy when 'peace' was restored to Claire's family.

But on the way to the car, I realized that the worst thing a mother could do was to trust a perfect stranger with her children — even if it is in her own home.

I guess the 'ideal' family doesn't exist, but it seems that not raising your own family could contribute to that.

So call me maternilistic, call me paranoid (DON'T call me conservative). But the fact of the matter is, my kids will only call ME 'mommy'.

Tsongas gaining ground on Clinton, poll says

BOSTON (AP) — Former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts appears to be catching up with Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, according to a new poll of likely Democratic primary voters in New Hampshire.

The poll, conducted Thursday, Friday and Saturday, showed a drop in support for Clinton each night and a steady increase in support for Tsongas.

Over the three days of polling, Clinton had 28 percent of the likely Democratic primary vote, Tsongas 25 percent, Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska 12 percent, Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa 10 percent and former California Gov. Jerry Brown 6 percent. Fifteen of those polled were undecided.

Two percent voluntarily mentioned they support New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, who is not a candidate. A write-in campaign for Cuomo has been launched.

Meanwhile, Bush continues to hold a strong lead - 58 to 28 percent - over his Republican primary challenger, Patrick Buchanan.

With the state's primary just over a week away, fewer than half the Democratic voters and just three of every five Republicans say they are firmly committed to a candidate.

The poll was conducted by KRC Communications Research for the Boston Globe and WBZ-TV. It had a potential margin of error of plus or minus 5 percentage points.

About 880 New Hampshire voters were interviewed Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings: 400 Democrats and Independents who said they planned to vote in the Democratic primary and 400 Republicans and Independents who said they planned to vote in the Republican primary.

Another 360 interviews of likely Democratic primary voters were conducted Saturday because of the volatility among voters in that party. An additional 240 interviews also were done Saturday of likely Republican primary voters.

Ida B. Wells: emotional monologues

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Correspondent

In case you somehow missed the thousands of fliers, posters, and advertisements, I will remind you that February is African-American history month. To celebrate and remember the many years of struggle, determination, and achievement of African Americans, the New World Theater presented Miss Ida B. Wells in the Hampden Theater Feb. 5 through the 9th.

The two-woman play took the audience through the life of Ida B. Wells, a leader in the crusade against black lynchings and other injustices done to her people in the years following her birth in 1862 until the 1930s.

The two actresses who portrayed Wells at various periods in her life were magnificently convincing. Their empassioned monologues transformed the audience into an emotional state. Throughout the play we not only understood Miss Wells' plea, we felt it.

Ingrid Askew, (Zora, The Leonard Melvin Show) who primarily portrayed Miss Wells in her later years, looked out into the audience with the sincere, sad, proud eyes of a warrior having won a battle long ago.

She added the wit and humor of a knowing, wise woman throughout the play as she looked back upon her life's struggles and accomplishments.

Nefertiti Burton (Common Ground, A Matter of Principle) was stunning and full of passion as a younger Wells. Her monologues were powerful. At one point in the play her desperate cry for help in reaction to watching a man burn to death during a lynching brought tears to my eyes.

Burton was inspiring and driven, and did great justice to the passion with which I am sure Miss Wells fought throughout her life.

Both actresses were extremely versatile in playing characters of different ages, sexes, and backgrounds, including Well's father, Susan B. Anthony, and British aristocracy.

The stage setting was simple, and consisted only of a tiny platform with two wooden chairs, a table and a tea set, and a large white screen with one of Miss Wells' speeches upon it in enlarged writing.

The atmosphere was intimate due to the fact that the platform was so small and close to the audience, and we felt more like visitors taking a journey through time with Miss Wells than onlookers of a production.

The play highlighted some of Miss Wells' greatest struggles, including being forced out of a first class train section because of her skin color, having her Memphis newspaper office destroyed by angry whites when she spoke out against the hateful lynchings that were killing her friends, and being forced to move north, to Chicago.

Miss Wells also encountered hypocrisy from such well known historical figures as Susan B. Anthony, a leading woman's suffragist who believed that her cause was separate and all together more important than that of Miss Wells.

Perhaps her greatest obstacle was the uncooperative attitude of many of her fellow blacks, who were often too afraid of white bureaucracy and of such groups as the Klu Klux Klan to speak out against them, much less support Miss Wells' struggle for black equality.

The play began and ended with audio recordings of children and adults stating what freedom means to them, and what role history has played in bringing about these ideas. For example, one young man said that freedom was walking through Bensonhurst, New York, without getting shot at, or going into a store without people thinking that he was going to rob it because he was black.

Ironically, many young children on the tape did not know who Ida B. Wells was, and may never know of her struggles fought for the right of African-Americans and to end the racism that still tears our country apart today.

Help celebrate Black History month. Various events are being sponsored throughout the month, a dedicated multicultural theater ensemble will continue to present productions throughout the month and information is available at the Student Activities office at 545-3600.

The New World Theater, a dedicated multicultural theater ensemble will continue to present productions throughout the semester. For more information, call 545-1972, or stop by their offices at 101-103 Hasbrouck Hall.

'A Tribute to the Wailers'

Talk by DJ Steffens, music by Loose Caboose

By BRIAN TREMBLAY
Collegian Correspondent

Misconceptions about reggae music's most recognizable artists, the Wailers, come much cheaper than a dime a dozen, and start with the group's name. The Wailers were originally a vocal trio comprising of Bob Marley, Peter MacIntosh, a.k.a. Peter Tosh, and Bunny Livingstone, a.k.a. Bunny Wailer.

Tosh and Wailer left the group in 1974. The group then became Bob Marley and the Wailers. The Wailers then became strictly Marley's backing band. You'd never know this looking at the reissued Wailers albums today; Tosh and Wailer rarely, if ever, get any metnion as an equal of Marley.

The same can be said when it comes time for songwriting credit. I can't count the number of times I've seen a music critic write about Bob Marley's song, "Get Up, Stand Up." It is in fact a song co-written by Marley and Tosh, although it's more Tosh's song than anybody's. Even things like who Bob Marley's father was seems a mystery. (For those who care, he was a white Jamaican, not a British naval officer.)

If you're wondering how you can find some fact instead of fiction regarding reggae's foremost artist, you can start tonight by attending "A Tribute to the Wailers." The heart of this tribute will be a presentation by Reggae DJ, archivist, critic and writer Roger Steffens.

Steffens has a personal collection of hundreds of hours of as yet unreleased footage of Wailers, concerts and interviews, as well as a very thorough collection of their music. He'll be presenting both, plus his own stories of meeting Marley, of going on tour with him in the 1970s and much more.

Considered a Wailers "authority," Steffens has written biographies of Bunny Wailer and Bob Marley. He recently wrote liner notes for the double CD One Love, a compilation of the Wailers early years recording for legendary producer Coxsone Dodd at his famed Studio 1, and is currently working on a complete discography of the Wailers.

The tribute will conclude with a live concert by recording artists Loose Caboose, a reggae band from right here in the Pioneer Valley. Tickets are cheap : $5 for the general public, $3 with a valid 5-college ID, and under 18 admitted free (not a misprint.)

For Wailers fans, this is a show not to be missed, and for those of you interested in reggae music, here's an excellent chance to become acquainted with an artist who's stature in the world of music is huge, more than a decade after his untimely death.

"A Tribute to the Wailers: Bob Marley, Peter Tosh, and Bunny Wailer" Monday, Feb. 10 at 6:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, is sponsored by WMUA Radio.

Annual BMC kicks off today

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

The 21st Annual Black Musicians Conference will open today with 'Sonority', a vocal jazz ensemble conducted by Dr. Horace Clarence Boyer in the Augusta Savage Gallery, New Africa House at 5 p.m.

The performance will introduce 'Images of Sound', an art exhibit, hanging works by Nelson Stevens, Dorrance Hill and Adger Cowen. The exhibit is sponsored by the University Arts Council and the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, and will show until Mar. 6.

Tomorrow offers a guest panel to discuss 'New Trends in Vocal Jazz' including legendary jazz singer and lyricist John Hendricks. The discussion will start at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge, admission is free.

Discussion will be followed by music. 'Just Friends', a well-reviewed New York based ensemble embracing many diverse musical forms from opera to gospel to jazz, is to end the evening.

The four-day celebration will be brought to a close with a performance of Bobby McFerrin with Voicestra on Thursday, Feb. 13 in the Fine Arts Center.

The Black Musicians Conference is a program of the Fine Arts Center, University of Massachusetts.

THE GETTYSBURG ADDRESS IN AN ELECTION YEAR
Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.
Now my opponent seems to think that raising taxes and letting criminals run free is the way to run a country. Don't fall for that liberal ploy! READ MAHLIPS...

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

"Same as the others, O'Neill. The flippers, the fishbowl, the frog, the lights, the armor. . . . Just one question remains: Is this the work of our guy, or a copycat?"

Quote of the Day

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Finding the right words may be difficult today. Let your imagination flow. Making certain domestic adjustments will improve a close relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You have a clear path to success now. Guard against flashy behavior. Let VIPs know that you respect their views and they will gladly give yours a hearing. Resist issuing an ultimatum.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): It may be difficult to harmonize with higher-ups this morning. Avoid a direct confrontation or your image could suffer. Work conditions improve when you show team spirit.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use your powers of persuasion to win people over to your way of thinking. You need to be sharp, but not overpowering. A real breakthrough is possible where a creative endeavor is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Welcome a chance to break free from recent financial restrictions. Your accomplishments are impressive. Focus on making influential new contacts. Perfect your sales techniques.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You ought to feel invigorated and confident once you view a perplexing situation from a distance. Work out a solution with your associates. A common sense approach will win you new admirers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Too much fooling around on the job could land you in trouble. You may have to play catch-up and patch-up later this afternoon. A new relationship will keep you on your toes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Making an intelligent concession will improve a relationship. You can change your mind without compromising your high standards. Co-workers will be more cooperative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are a stickler for detail, unwilling to leave anything to chance. Keeping someone in the dark about your plans could lead to a serious misunderstanding. Take key people into your confidence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Open new lines of communication with partner. Do not let a personality conflict interfere with progress at work. Tackling certain projects on your own will prove therapeutic.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Speak up if you feel your territorial rights are being violated. Establishing firm guidelines will make you feel more secure. A family member may include you in an investment transaction.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You come to grips with a problem not of your own making. Make it your business to clear up a confusing situation. Romance smiles on you tonight. Dress up if going out.

Alums, O'Brien to discuss football cuts

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

A concerned group of alumni have organized to investigate the workings of the University of Massachusetts Athletic Department among a disruption caused by a large and sudden budget cut to the University's football program.

Frank DiTomasso, the captain of the 1980 Minutemen, and an executive board of an unnamed coalition have a meeting scheduled for this afternoon with Chancellor Richard O'Brien to discuss the administration's recent decision-making and the program's funding.

David Bischoff, the dean of the School of Physical Education, and Frank McInerney, the Director of Athletics, have been invited to the meeting as well.

"It's about fact finding," DiTomasso said. "Our goal is to find out what happened, who did it and where the program is going."

On Dec. 4, University President E.K. Fretwell and O'Brien along with interested Trustees decided to reduce the number of football scholarships for next year.

The reduction became public when the team's head coach, Jim Reid, verbally resigned upon hearing of the cuts for the first time, Jan. 23.

"Our group would like to work hand in hand, inside and outside, with the administration in any and all aspects of the Athletic Department," DiTomasso said. "We're going to take our direction based on the facts."

O'Brien said yesterday that DiTomasso requested the meeting and was unsure of the content.

"I'm going to go in and listen to their concerns," O'Brien said.

Asked if he was displeased with the handling of the situation surrounding the football program, O'Brien said, "There are some judgement calls I would have made differently."

Nick Salmon, a captain of the 1988 team, expressed his concerns to DiTamasso last week.

"I don't think the department has been run properly," Salmon said yesterday. "I think the people running the department should just step aside. They don't have what it takes. They have no creativity and no drive. They're trying to pull the wool over our eyes with all of their informal meetings."

Salmon expressed his displeasure that the department spent money to send several administrators to January's NCAA Convention in California.

"It's management like that that got us upset and makes us want to take action," Salmon said.

Salmon also said the alumni is so upset it may cause some of them to limit their contributions.

"They [alumni] are going to be less apt to donate more money," he said.

Peluso, a model of high standards

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Jay Peluso is a student, a member of the Air Force ROTC, and a star swimmer for the University of Massachusetts swimming team. For most people, setting the UMass record in both the 200 Individual Medley (1:54.85) and the 400 I.M. (4.06.91) would be enough to make a season, or even a career. Peluso, on the other hand, says that he has not even reached the standards that he has set for himself for this year.

"I haven't met my goals for this season yet," says the Cumberland, R.I. native. "But I hope to go under 1:54 in the 200 I.M. and under 2:05 in 200 breaststroke."

Currently, Peluso is preparing for the New England Championships at Bowdoin College (Feb. 13-15) where he expects to swim the fastest times of the season.

Judging by the fact that Peluso, a junior, has blossomed into what coach Russ Yarworth says is the team's "most consistent swimmer", one would assume he was born wearing a swimming cap. This is not the case, however, as he says he never would have started swimming had it not been for the urging of his mother.

"I started swimming when I was a freshmen in high school, which is not very long ago compared to a lot of guys," he said. "A lot of the really good swimmers, such as Scott Reed, started when they were under eight years old. I didn't even want to start swimming because I didn't want to wear the suit, but my mom signed me up anyway and it just stuck."

Although Peluso is the first in his family to swim competitively, he says the rest of the family is equally active in sports.

"My sister plays college basketball and volleyball at Quinnipiac, my little brother is really into football, my father played lacrosse for Brown, and my mother is just a very big sports fan."

To maintain his conditioning throughout the year, Peluso plays waterpolo for UMass in the spring and for the U.S. team at Brown University in the summer. He also likes to lift weights and play basketball.

Yarworth assessed Peluso as a swimmer and a leader.

"Jay is probably the most versatile swimmer that I have ever coached, he's the kind of person who will swim in any event. He also has tremendous team attributes. In and out of the pool he is a leader emotionally and physically."

Although Peluso plans to continue swimming after college, he is also looking forward to taking a break from swimming's relentless schedule.

"During the season I spend about four hours a day in the pool, and there really is no off-season in swimming because after the swimming season I go right into waterpolo," Peluso said.

Player of the game

University of Massachusetts guard Jim McCoy scored a season-high 25 points, 21 of which came in the second half. When the Minutemen trailed 60-59, he scored six consecutive points in a crucial second half stretch which put UMass ahead for good.

Why UMass won

The Minutemen went on a 10-1 run that left the Hawks 8 points down with 5:21 to play. St. Joe's just could not stop Jim McCoy in the second half, as he shot 7-for-11 after intermission and finished with 25 points. UMass guard Derek Kellogg came off the bench in the first half and played aggressive defense, picking up three steals in just five minutes. Kellogg's full-court pressure-defense slowed down the Hawks' attack, especially Rap Curry, who finished with 7 points. Harper Williams and Will Herndon scored 17 and 15 points respectively.

UMass' next opponent

The University of Massachusetts hosts Temple University on Sunday afternoon at the Curry Hicks Cage (4:30 p.m.) Temple is 12-8 and has a game Thursday night at Memphis State. The Owls beat the Minutemen in Philadelphia earlier this season, 83-61. The Minutemen have never beaten Temple in 21 games. Temple got good guard-play in the first meeting and its 2-3 zone effectively shut down UMass' inside game.

McCoy shoots down Hawks

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The knock on Jim McCoy is he's not tough enough, he can't hit long jump shots, he doesn't take it to the basket strong, he tends to take bad shots and occasionally disappears in the course of a game.

Try telling all that to St. Joseph's coach John Griffin, who watched McCoy torch his team for 25 points (21 in the second half) and he would probably give you one of those 'are you nuts' looks.

Even McCoy's biggest critics had to love what he did in the second half of Saturday night's University of Massachusetts 81-73 win over St. Joseph's at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"It was a war out there," McCoy said. "In the second half, St. Joe's started to take control. We needed someone to step up. In the first half, I just didn't have any shots."

"Derek Kellogg got him [McCoy] started," said UMass coach John Calipari. "He created easy shots for him. I was happy Derek was aggressive."

Kellogg, a freshman who considered red-shirting before the season, came off the bench and had three steals in five minutes. His play impressed his coach so much, he earned a start in the second half.

"I'm proud of Derek's effort," Calipari said. "He didn't make great plays, he made easy plays. I started him in the second half because of the way he played in the first half and because Anton [Brown] had three fouls. But mostly because of the way he played."

Kellogg said, "Jim McCoy really stepped up tonight. When he's hitting, anyone can play point guard."

After the Minutemen (19-4, 7-3 in the Atlantic 10) jumped out to a 46-31 lead with 18:03 remaining in the game, the Hawks (9-11, 3-7) mounted a 21-4 run to go ahead 52-49 with 11:47 left.

McCoy then hit a spinning jumper in the lane and another from the elbow to put UMass back on top by 1, 53-52.

The lead see-sawed back and fourth, until UMass picked up the tempo and scored 10 of the next 11 points. At that point, the Minutemen led 69-61 with 5:21 remaining and St. Joe's never pulled closer than three.

Down the stretch, UMass, which has struggled at the free throw line all season, made 4 of 6 foul shots to preserve the win. The Minutemen, who are shooting 65 percent from the line as a team, converted 25 of 35 freebies for the game.

"Every free throw that we had to make, we made," Calipari said.

Bernard Blunt (25 points, 11 rebounds) and Craig Amos (14 points) each scored four points in the final 2:36, to pull the Hawks to 76-73 with :36 remaining. But McCoy's two fast break dunks in the final :29 dispelled any hopes of an upset.

"When you get down 15 points and come back, that is the sign of a team with character," Griffin said. "We're beyond the point where we look at this as a moral victory. It's still a conference loss."

The Minutemen jumped out to a quick 11-3 lead, before St. Joe's was able to regroup and actually tie the game at 17 with 10:27 to go in the first half.

William Herndon (15 points, 6 rebounds) led the Minutemen with 11 first half-points, while Harper Williams (17 points, 12 rebounds) had eight. Herndon scored his 1,000th point as a Minuteman on a finger roll drive, which at the time put UMass ahead 17-12. Herndon, along with Williams, Tony Barbee and McCoy have all scored over 1,000 points for their careers.

Herndon, who was 5-for-5 from the floor for the game, did some things in the first half that quite honestly should not be allowed. Other than the typical Brown-to-Herndon ally-oop which we have come to expect, the 6-foot-3 forward tipped in a missed shot, by soaring through the air, over McCoy (and several others) and finger-rolled the ball in.

St. Joe's took its first lead with 9:07 remaining, when Bernard Jones converted a fast-break layup. The Hawks actually led 26-21 with 6:11 remaining. However, the Minutemen went on a 16-5 run to close out the half ahead 37-31. Herndon scored UMass' final six points, including "the tip".

Kellogg's hustle sparks UMass

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Jim McCoy had 25 points and Harper Williams a double-double, but it may have been Derek Kellogg's 14 tireless minutes off the bench that led to the University of Massachusetts basketball team's 19th win, 81-73, Saturday night over St. Joseph's.

Kellogg, who entered the game averaging only 5.7 minutes in 14 previous contests, checked in with 4:30 to play in the first half, with the Minutemen trailing 26-23, and sparked a 12-5 run to give UMass a 37-31 halftime advantage.

Kellogg had three steals and one rebound before the intermission while causing instant havoc among the Hawks' offense.

"Derek's what we needed to get us going," UMass center Harper Williams said. "We needed someone to come in and play hard and aggressively, and he did just that."

Just as the Minutemen started to falter, falling behind for the first time in the game by three, Kellogg's hustle spread to the rest of the team.

"He played with a lot of enthusiasm, which made us play with a lot of enthusiasm," Williams said. "He never quits."

UMass coach John Calipari said, "We would've been down 8 to 10 [points at half time] if he didn't play in the first half."

Kellogg, a freshman from Springfield's Cathedral High School, was rewarded with a start in the second half and directed the Minutemen to a 9-0 run and their biggest lead of the game, 15 points, just under two minutes after the intermission. Kellogg also contributed a 3-pointer in the flurry.

"He didn't make great plays," Calipari said. "He made easy plays, got the ball into the post. He defended and helped us make a run."

"I tried to do whatever I could to change the flow of the game in our favor and I guess it worked," Kellogg said. "I think the time I contributed were quality minutes.

"It's a high for me to get in the game," he said. "And I wanted to make the best of it."

"The Energizer Bunny," as nicknamed by Williams, is known as one of the Minutemen's hardest practice players when he is usually assigned to guard teammate and UMass' top scorer Jim McCoy.

"He works hard all the time," said fellow point guard Anton Brown. "The way he practices really helps him in games like this."

A McDonald's honorable mention All-American in high school, Kellogg was also credited with getting McCoy on track to his season-high output.

"Derek Kellogg got him [McCoy] going," Calipari said. "[He] got us started by giving him easy shots."

Asked if Kellogg would see more playing time in the Minutemen's remaining games, Calipari said, "I don't make that decision, the players do."

Reid to resign, may take job at Richmond

By TAMIR LIPTON

University of Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid will officially end his 19-year alliance with the school Thursday and may be offered an assistant coaching job at the University of Richmond.

Reid, who spent the last six years as head coach, verbally resigned on Jan. 23 after being notified by the Athletic Department that scholarships which he had already promised to incoming high school recruits would not be honored.

Richmond coach Jim Marshall said late last night that Reid will be offered a job coaching inside linebackers, perhaps within a few days.

"A lot depends on whether he wants to live in Richmond," Marshall said. "I've known Jim for a long time and he would be a welcome addition to this program. He would add enthusiasm, knowledge and the kids would love to play for him."

Last Thursday, Reid wrote a letter to Chancellor Richard O'Brien which the coach believed was his letter

Tyson convicted on rape charge

Ex-heavyweight champ may face 60 years in prison

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Boxer Mike Tyson was found guilty Monday of raping a Miss Black America contestant who said he lured her to his hotel room and overpowered her.

Jurors deliberated about 9 hours before reaching their verdict in the case, which threatens to end the rags-to-riches career of one of the most prominent athletes of his generation. Tyson was the youngest heavyweight champion ever, and had been planning a comeback in a title fight against champion Evander Holyfield this spring.

Tyson, 25, sat staring straight ahead impassively as the verdict was read. He was found guilty of all charges he faced — one count of rape and two counts of criminal deviate conduct.

The judge said Tyson could remain free on $30,000 bond and set sentencing for March 6. He faces up to 60 years in prison.

Tyson and his entourage, including his promoter Don King, left the courthouse without making any comment.

The trial followed, and was often compared to, two other cases in which relatively unknown women said they were wronged by powerful men — Clarence Thomas and William Kennedy Smith.

But prosecutor Greg Garrison afterward discouraged such comparisons.

"It's clear that when a one-on-one crime results in a conviction, it's always a victory in a sense. However, we don't want to make it bigger than it is," he said.

The 18-year-old victim was not in the courtroom when the verdict was returned.

Asked what his most effective evidence was, Garrison said, "That beautiful 18-year-old kid with a pure heart. She's a young person with a lot of courage."

Alex Haley, Roots author, dies at age 70

By JAMES L. ENG
Associated Press

SEATTLE — Alex Haley, the Pulitzer Prize-winning writer whose book "Roots" told the story of the Black experience in America and inspired people of all races to search for their ancestors, died Monday. He was 70.

Haley, whose other works included "The Autobiography of Malcolm X," died of a heart attack at Swedish Hospital, said hospital spokeswoman Jane Anne Wilder.

Haley had been scheduled to speak Tuesday at the Bangor Naval Submarine Base near Bremerton, said Liz Beauton of the base's human resources department. Survivors include Haley's third wife, My, and a son, Bill. Haley won the 1977 Pulitzer Prize for "Roots: the Saga of an American Family," the gripping story of his family's monumental journey from Africa to American slavery and ultimately to freedom.

The result of 12 years research, the book blended fact and imagined detail in tracing Haley's family back six generations to Kunta Kinte, who was

Hite opposes tuition retention

Jon Hite

Editor's note: This the third in a six-part series profiling the candidates for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Amherst Democrat Jon Hite has often said he wouldn't have been able to attend college if it weren't for the University of Massachusetts.

A 1978 graduate of the University, Hite is competing with Ellen Story and Terry Franklin of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham for the Democratic nomination on Feb. 18 for the Amherst-Pelham state representative seat vacated by State Sen. Stanley Rosenberg in late September.

Hite, who describes himself as "testy, impatient and driven," but also as someone who likes to listen and who enjoys the company of his friends, said he values the role the University played in his life.

"I have a passion for UMass that comes from knowing how important it was to my life," Hite said. "I'm a progressive who believes in opportunity and who understands that for many people in our society, the barriers to equality are formidable and need to be knocked down."

One issue that Hite, 36, has made a cornerstone of his campaign is Gov. William Weld's proposal for the University to adopt full tuition retention. Hite has emerged as the campaign's strongest opponent of the proposal, calling it a "poisoned apple."

"If Massachusetts were the kind of state that had the tradition of financing and philosophically supporting UMass like other states, then tuition retention would be an avenue to maintain a margin of excellence," Hite said. "Unfortunately, in Massachusetts, tuition retention is rapidly becoming an excuse for the legislature and governor to decimate the budget at student's expense."

Hite, currently on leave from his job as deputy director of the Northampton

New Kids speak (?) out in suit

By ELINOR MILLS
Associated Press

BOSTON — A lawyer for the mega-stars New Kids on the Block said the group will file a lawsuit Monday accusing a former producer of slander for telling the media the singers lip-synced their songs.

The complaint, to be filed in Superior Court in Boston, asks the court to assess punitive damages against Gregory McPherson for statements he made to the New York Post that appeared on Jan. 29.

"Everything that man said was untrue and defamatory," Leonard Lewin, the pop group's attorney said Sunday night.

McPherson told the Post and other media organizations the New Kids did no more than 20 percent of their music and that New Kids' creator and manager Maurice Starr and his brother, Michael Johnson, did the singing in concerts and on albums.

Starr has said he and Johnson have only done background vocals.

The New Kids have "suffered humiliation and have been subject to contempt, disgrace and ridicule before the public and within the music industry, have been injured in their good name and business reputation and have suffered embarrassment and mental pain and anguish," the complaint said.

McPherson, a music professor at the University of Massachusetts, is suing Starr, claiming he owes him royalties. McPherson could not be reached for comment; his phone number is unlisted.

The group's agent, Bob Woolf, had previously said McPherson, who also played keyboard, was fired by the group. Woolf could not be reached Sunday night for further comment.

Lewin said McPherson unjustly dragged the New Kids into his suit against Starr.

"We weren't even named in the lawsuit he [McPherson] started against Maurice Starr and yet these statements were made," Lewin said. "My guess is that McPherson is using it as leverage to get Maurice to cave in to him, to give him some money."

The New Kids' suit dubbed McPherson's lip-sync allegations "vindictive."

Last week, a Chicago fan sued the New Kids for $75 million, contending the group defrauded consumers.

kidnapped from Gambia, West Africa, in 1967 and shipped to this country as a slave.

The book sold 6 million hardcover copies and has been translated into at least 37 languages. The ABC television miniseries adapted from the book drew 130 million viewers over seven nights in January 1977, then the largest program audience ever.

"He was truly a gifted person who wrote a book that was monumental," said NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks.

Haley's warmhearted and rich descriptions of his ancestors' lives set off a wave of interest in genealogy, lasting long after the book faded from best-seller lists.

"He was enormously important, probably more important than most of us really realize," said U.S. Education Secretary Lamar Alexander.

"His importance will be lasting. It wasn't 15 minutes in the sunlight; it'll last forever."

In an interview last Tuesday, Haley said he was still getting reactions from "Roots" decades later.

"To this day, people, particulary African-American people but White people as well, will just totally, unexpectedly... walk up and not say a word, just walk up and hug you and then say 'Thank You,' " he told radio station WKYS in Washington, D.C.

The book made Haley rich, generating a steady stream of royalties and making him a fixture on the lecture circuit.

It also attracted four plagiarism suits. Three were tossed out of court but Haley settled out-of-court with author Harold Cortlander, who charged Haley lifted a 100-word segment from his novel, "The African." Haley said the passage "was in something somebody had given me."

Haley, the eldest of three sons, was born in Ithaca, N.Y., on Aug. 11, 1921, and raised from infancy in the west Tennessee town of Henning by his maternal grandmother. His father, a college professor, was studying in the North, and his mother, a grammar school teacher, died young.

"I find that Southern-born people, White or Black, tend to be better raised that people from other sections," he said in a 1988 interview. "Grandma taught me like that."

For example, Grandma would not have approved of four-letter words or explicit sex scenes, Haley said, so "Roots" didn't have any.

Haley graduated from high school at 15 and had two years of college before enlisting in the Coast Guard as a mess boy in 1939.

He began his writing career on Coast Guard ships during World War II, first penning love letters for shipmates, then working, then working on manuscripts. The Coast Guard created the special position of chief journalist for him in 1952.

He did much of his later writing abroad cargo ships, booking passage several times a year to escape telephones and speaking invitations.

SW security system gets mixed review

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

The four new security systems installed over winter intersession to beef up security in each of the Southwest high-rise residence halls have received mixed reactions from residents.

Dan Chase, a sophomore political science major living in Kennedy said he found it easy to manipulate the new security system which requires residents in that building to punch in a seven-digit code number to enter.

"It is easier to give out the code number to friends than it is to walk downstairs and give them your key," he said.

"The doors are usually propped open with a trash can so I don't see how this increases security," said Chase.

Ian Quinn, an undeclared freshman who lives in John Adams, said, "I have probably punched in my code number only once." He said because people are coming in and out all day it makes it easy to enter the building without entering your code.

Quinn said the security system was very simple to use. "Unless you are a mental midget you can figure out how to use the code number," he said.

Residents using the security system installed in Coolidge show a "proximity card" — a card issued to each student living in the building — to a machine which reads the card and decides whether that student lives in that particular building, according to Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini.

Vinnie Grasso, an undeclared freshman who lives in Coolidge, said the system is inconvenient and does not increase security at all. "It is a pain in the neck to carry around the card and anyone can get in if you give them your card," he said.

Tom Murry, an undeclared sophomore who lives in Kennedy, said he loves the new security system. "People don't wander around the building as much and it is easy to punch in the code number."

Kennedy's security system scrambles around the numbers so that a person standing behind a resident entering their code won't be able to tell which numbers they are punching in, said Zannini.

"The only problem with [Kennedy's] system is the code is too long and it is hard to enter the numbers when you are drunk," said Murry.

Julie Kennedy, a junior psychology major who lives in John Quincy Adams, said it is needless to have a new security system that does not increase security.

"Along with sliding your card through a machine, you still have to sign people in and use your key," she said.

Craig Gravem, an undeclared freshman who lives in Kennedy, said the doors should not be locked for 24 hours.

New Students Program needs summer help

By FELICE COHEN
Collegian Staff

Are you the type of person who enjoys meeting lots of people? Is comfortable speaking in front of groups? Loves UMass? Well, if so, the Admissions office and the New Students Program have some great opportunities for you.

Applications are being distributed now for student admissions representatives and University tour guides for fall 1992 and for new students program summer counselors for this summer.

The jobs of the student admissions representatives are to conduct informational interviews and counsel prospective students as well as assist professional staff with presentations.

Applying to be a University tour guide, one should be able to speak effectively in front of groups of students and parents. As well as have the willingness to be assigned to lead tours on weekends and holidays as well as for additional tours as needed during the academic year.

The student admissions representatives have the opportunity to receive internship credits while the tour guides are paid on an hourly wage.

The new students program summer counselor position is both a student admissions representative and University tour guide in one. The New Students Program position requires one to have a knowledge of a variety of residential, academic and social opportunities on campus. The position offers a nine-week salary, free room and board and health coverage.

According to Jeanne Horrigan, associate director of the New Students Program and coordinator of the tour service, "The student counselors play a critical role. We strive to hire a diverse group of the best and brightest students.

IT'S A BIRD, IT'S A PLANE, IT'S SUPERMAN — Donna Butler (center) provides a campus tour for Gina FaFoutis (right) and her mother. They are from Athens, Greece.

Students should be skilled in planning and leading activities as well as having a a high level of energy since the hours are long and require substantial interest and investment.

Amanda Millett, a former new students program summer counselor said she felt the position will help her after graduation.

"I've had the opportunity to meet many kinds of people and have developed my public speaking skills, which are a necessity in any type of leadership position."

The New Students Program also gives you the opportunity to come away from the the summer with many close friends and fond memories, said Millett.

To apply for all positions you must be a UMass undergraduate in good academic standing. Any involvement with campus groups, registered student organizations and residential staff experience is great.

The deadline to submit applications is Feb. 14.

Housing Authority, said his experiences as a UMass student in the mid-1970s taught him the value of becoming involved.

During Hite's time at the University, where he served as speaker of Undergraduate Student Senate in 1975 and as SGA co-president in 1977-78, said much of his time was spent fighting budget cuts and tuition increases.

"When you meet SGA presidents today, it's incredible to realize how the issues have remained the same," Hite said. "[Then Gov.] Dukakis was a terrible governor for public higher education — he didn't think it was necessary, and we fought him almost every step of the way."

Endorsed last week by the Student Senate, he said tuition went from $300 to $600 a year when he was at the University, noting "all you can do is stall [tuition increases] — you just try to hold back the tide."

Hite also said the student government worked to help open the Student Credit Union, the Legal Services Office won the right to sue the University, juniors won the right to move off-campus and bus services in the area were expanded while he was at the University.

As the University's director of Alumni Affairs in the early 1980s, Hite helped UMass win one of the largest increases of any state agency following the passage of Proposition 2 1/2. He said a widespread campaign among parents, students and alumni is needed in the Commonwealth's current conservative fiscal climate.

"The government will learn to respect UMass when the University's alumni, parents and students have a sustained effort over a decade to increase the volume of support for higher education," Hite said.

Hite said his early political memories, such as the killing of three college students working for civil rights in Mississippi in the early 1960s, helped teach him that individual citizens can influence the political process.

"Watching [presidential candidates] Bobby Kennedy and Eugene McCarthy in 1968, the message was clear — getting involved makes a difference," Hite said. He quoted the abolitionist leader Frederick Douglass, who said "Power concedes nothing without demand."

In a period where there is widespread disillusionment with government on both a state and national level, Hite said there are ways to revitalize and restore faith in the political process.

"We need to be judicious in the promises we make and be willing to stand up to special interests and say we are not going in the right direction politically," Hite said. "Most importantly, the government has to communicate better with citizens."

Hite has voiced support for campaign finance reform, an issue that has emerged as a center of controversy among the four Democrats. Ellen Story, who is widely believed to be the front-runner, has drawn criticism for setting a spending limit of $30,000.

He expects to spend $12-14,000 and said he would have agreed to limit his spending to $10,000 if all the other candidates had agreed to do so, but that he couldn't put himself at a "competive disadvantage."

Hite said he favors legislation designed to limit the influence of lobbyists in politics and to reduce the amount of campaign contributions from special interests.

"Who are these people that contribute $1,000 to state representatives and senators?" Hite asked. "It's not that they think this person is the next leader of the free world — they just want access to them."

A member of Amherst Town Meeting for 10 years, Hite said whatever happens in this election, he won't have any regrets about the campaign.

"I've run for office and both won and lost — losing isn't the worst thing in the world," Hite, who lost a bid for Amherst Select Board in 1987, said. "If you run a campaign that's positive and tells people where you stand and is inclusionary, then win or lose, you can be proud of what you've done."

Computer stolen from Tobin

Compiled by MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

A Zenith lap top computer, software, power supply and manuals valued at $2,000 was reported stolen from a Tobin Hall office on Friday afternoon by a staff member, University of Massachusetts police said.

Two male subjects were escorted out of the Campus Center on Friday night after they were observed acting in a disorderly manner outside of the Travel Agency, police said.

ARRESTS:

• Daniel S. O'Donnell, 19, of Boston, was arrested Friday night at the Hampden Dining Commons and charged with disorderly conduct and indecent exposure.

• Gary A. Paquin, 29, of 211 Northwood Apts., Sunderland, was arrested Friday afternoon and charged with operating a car with a suspended license, operating a unregistered vehicle, operating an uninspected motor vehicle, operating with a revoked registration and operating an uninsured motor vehicle.

LARCENY:

• A radar detector and a stereo system, worth about $600 was reported stolen by a women from Lot 26 on Thursday night.

• A stereo system and a radar detector, worth $500 was reported stolen by man from Lot 26 on Thursday night.

• A Sony disc player, valued at $500 was reported stolen from a car in Lot 13, early Friday morning.

• An employee of the Worcester Dining Commons reported Thursday night that a leather jacket a stereo headphone was stolen from an employee's locker room. The estimated value is $375.

• A woman reported that a radar detector estimated at $150 was stolen Thursday afternoon from Lot 33.

• A women reported that a black leather bra valued at $70 was stolen from her vehicle in Lot 43 early Sunday morning.

Valentine's Day: Or should we say, February Fool's Day

The closest things to "glove" that exist in this world are perhaps preferred companionship and, of course, physical pleasure. Simply put, why would we as individuals want anyone else around? Maybe a given person is "fun" or "interesting" or especially willing to engage in activities as a couple but it is still based on self. Preferred companionship itself has less to do with mutual devotion than being a blatant case of two people using each other.

Let's be honest for once in our pointlessly vapid and sickeningly hypocritical lives. We as aminals (I spell it the way I pronounce it) are attracted to each other by physical beauty. We are much more concerned with how people look than the character that festers inside the flesh that every other human around them is so fixated upon. If this is the case, fine, then let's admit it for god's sake already and cease to believe in this noxious notion of "glove." Oh, if there were only another intelligent species to show us just how pathetic we are!

Now some people will contend that somehow "glove" is present within the reality of our existence. Wrong! On a superficial surface, one may find examples (but even these are rare) of someone performing a service for another that does not seem to benefit the performer in any way. Thinking of an example is difficult enough but for now, we will use giving one's life for another — the most obvious, cliche, extreme and solely imaginable act that comes to mind. Any other acts of "glove" you may or may not be able to conceive are no doubt less important and certainly less fatal and will therefore be considered lesser expressions or actions planned to win the favor of another, which will, unlike death, yield potential kickbacks in the future, and will fall into the "I'll scratch your back, you scratch mine" category, regardless of the time interval between scratches.

Tony Westcott

But what about death? Every act a person executes is done foremost and first as a service to him/herself. In most cases, there are ulterior motives behind the act of someone dying for another's "glove." Discount unrequited "glove," for one crucial half of the party is obviously not in the least mutually interested enough to permit another to perish for no worthwhile reason other than self-pity, which does not constitute "glove" either.

An apparent theory for this suicidal behavior is that death does not faze the party facing it enough to realize their folly and may even welcome it. Any person who would not dive into freezing H_2O to relieve a "gloved" one and permit them to perish would endure such a miserable life within a society that would shun him/her, they might as well select the lesser of two evils and jump in. Hey, they might even end up a hero and have their social security number retired, like all the great American war heroes, or have their picture printed upon a box of Wheaties (you know, cool hero stuff).

Therefore, there is only self-glove. Even this, however, is not possibly plausible. The prime thing that motivates us all as humus, er, humans, is pleasure. Even survival takes a lesser priority. Our only concern for survival arises form the possibility that pleasure as we know and "glove" it might end after death. And as for those "glovers" who will die for another, well, chances are they're gambling on the hope that there exists an afterlife (yet another noxious notion) where pleasure exists and maybe even at a more intense level.

Personally, I'm all for engaging in this preferred companionship/ physical pleasure thing (call me a hopeless romantic) and I'm single, I enjoy skeet shooting and water polo, my favorite foods are Twinkies and Gatorade and I dig rock 'n' roll music while appreciating what Bach and all those cats were into back in the Middle Ages B.C. plus the doctor said I should be getting well soon so give me a ring and who knows, maybe I'll be giving you a ring someday in St. Stephen the Blessed Heathen's Church and then we can have three twins named Boris, Maurice, Horace, Dolores, Doris and Clitoris. . . please, please, please, I'm soOoOo lonely. Meet me at Basics tonight at 5 and we'll talk over tossed egg salad, shellfish Presley, smoked salmonella and don't forget the seltzer water that soothes my soul, cookiebunny. . .

Hatred rears its ugly head again

Those students and faculty who utilize the tunnel connecting Bartlett and Herter have noticed in recent weeks that the language of violence and hatred has found a home there.

Written on the wall, in black ink, is the expression, "Roasting in the flames of hell. . . fags die!" Beside and beneath this abhorrent and grotesque display of ignorance and fear is a piece of graffiti equally repugnant. It reads, "Down with Hets!" (het-erosexuals) and is accompanied by an inverted pink triangle.

Once again in our university, hatred rears its ugly head. And once again, anger and fear drive the people responsible for it. If the expression "down with hets" was meant to advance the cause of civil rights or disarm homophobia, it failed.

Robert Kennedy once wrote that, "Cruelty and wanton violence may temporarily relieve a feeling of frustration, a sense of impotence. But the damage of those who perpetrate it — these are the negation of reason and the antithesis of humanity, and they are the besetting signs of the 20th century."

The jury is in. Hatred serves to accomplish nothing, save the destruction of the human spirit and the theft of human dignity.

The struggle for gay civil rights, and indeed for a more peaceful and compassionate planet, will not be won by those who employ hatred and intolerance as the instruments of their struggle. Nor will the struggle be won on the walls of the Herter/ Bartlett tunnel. Nor will it be won by lofty rhetoric alone.

Indeed, the struggle for civil rights will be won by those who see non-violence as the pathway to peace and who see courage and commitment as the instruments of change.

The time has come for all of us, gay and straight, to bash back against hatred. But not to bash back with wanton violence and destruction; to bash back with education, tolerance and a deep pride in the expression of our identities.

The time has come for all of us engaged in the struggle against the bondage of oppression, to rededicate ourselves to those principles which will deliver us from our oppression: courage, commitment and compassion.

The time has come for all of us to rededicate ourselves to that the Greeks wrote so many centuries ago, "To tame the savageness of men [and women] and make gentle the life of the world."

Recession is the r-word

I'm beginning to feel scared.

That nasty r-word won't go away. It oozes its way into newspapers, campaign speeches, television ads. It's trailing muck into nearly every household in the country. And no one knows what to do.

I believed everyone at first. Okay, it was just a tiny little recession and after a few months things would be back to normal. Then things got worse. Mr. President tried to reassure me, telling me the recession didn't exist, that it was in the people's minds and we should all just snap out of it.

A nagging feeling picked at me, as I watched family friends lose their jobs and their security. Jay Leno's barbed jokes equating the middle class and the homeless began to hit closer and closer to home.

I didn't expect the hometown to have changed much while I frolicked at UMass during fall semester. And driving through Berkshire County over break, I saw things were essentially the same: the old mill houses in Adams serving as low-income housing, the abandoned and charred factory just over the line in North Adams, the boarded over storefronts and "For Sale by Owner" signs dotting lawns. It still looked grim.

The only new storefronts were discount and thrift stores — you know the kind. You can buy napkins and jewelry and stationery and hair pins and candles — everything costs just a dollar. Not too encouraging.

Thumbing through the papers only deepened my unease. The area's major employer, General Electric, continues to decay, shedding employees with no end in sight. Development is stalled; well, Kmart may build. That will add a lot.

Through all this ran the usual undercurrent of neglect. Located in the western end of the state, locals regard the political view that Massachusetts runs from Boston to Springfield bitterly. To be heard in Boston, the people of the Berkshires have to yell a little more loudly than anyone else. And the people don't have the energy anymore.

I know Berkshire County isn't the only place battered by the recession. It's just the place I know, only one of thousands of communities damaged severely by a rotting economy.

There must be a way to put the nation back on its feet. I certainly haven't figured out what it is, but I know what it is not. It isn't cutting taxes. Cuts in education and social services won't do anything positive. Verbally shredding the Japanese for having the audacity to make good cars won't make American cars any better.

I was told that anyone could go to college — if you couldn't afford it, money was available to help you. Not necessarily. I was told that if I went to college, I could do anything. Not necessarily true. I want a good education, a job, a family. Well, good seems to be optional now — just an education would be nice. A job? Not very likely. And how can you support a family without a decent income?

Things will turn around, the government assures. Okay. I can believe that. I have to believe that. But how do we repair the damage being done? We can't afford maintenance of basic services — how will we afford the repairs? With cuts in education, we're watering down classes for an entire generation while demanding that they find the skills and abilities to successfully compete in a world market. It's not going to be easy.

The recession won't last forever. But the decay it has begun will continue to crumble society. To make repairs, and then to rebuild — that will last a long time.

A few words would do the trick

A few days ago I visited the University Gallery to see its exhibit of works by contemporary Mexican artists. My thoughts about this show were about the same as they are regarding most exhibits I attend: "Interesting, but I really don't get it."

I propose a simple improvement: artists and curators should provide a brief bit of information on the purposes or intents involved in the creation of each work. Two or three sentences on the title card would suffice.

For example, the French Impressionist Claude Monet produced a famous series of paintings portraying a particular spot on a river at various times of the morning. When I first saw these paintings I thought they were featureless and boring. Later, I learned that Monet's intent was to portray the varying qualities of the air above the river as humidity, mists and illumination changed between sunrise and midday. Once my attention was directed to the portrayal of the air, I instantly recognized and appreciated what successful works these paintings are. I did not need a course in the history of Impressionism to enjoy and appreciate Monet's works. All I needed was a few words of guidance. So, artists, I know you prefer working in the visual milieu, but please give us just a little verbalization. We will enjoy your work more and give you more of the appreciation you deserve.

UPC equals spring concerts

By MIGUEL DeJESUS, Jr.
Collegian Correspondent

If you were asked what "UPC" stands for, would you know?

Many students don't have a single clue.

In fact, it's kind of disappointing because it has a major role on campus. For those of you who have never heard of your "on-campus concert connection," here's your chance to become familiar and involved with the Union Program Council, otherwise known as UPC.

Up until now, UPC has brought The Talking Heads, The Greatful Dead, Elvis Costello, U2, Bob Marley, James Taylor, REM, INXS, Run DMC, Tito Puentes, Queen Latifa, 3rd Bass, Dinosaur Jr., and many more.

The music spectrum UPC has covered ranges from progressive dance music to rock, pop, rap, funk, reggae, blues and jazz. And UPC has foreseen trends in the music industry. Due to this, they have booked acts much cheaper than their competitors because they book the shows before the acts receive mainstream popularity.

A good example of this is Jesus Jones.

UPC brought them to UMass right before their incredible, world-wide success struck with hits like "Right Here, Right Now," and "International Bright Young Thing."

UPC was created in 1977, and has grown to be the largest entirely student-run production company on the east coast (and second only to UCLA's in the country). It has produced approximately 200 shows ranging from solo acts to many well known bands that have appeared in the Bluewall, The Fine Arts Center, and the Student Union Ballroom.

In 1981, UPC started to produce a free annual Spring Concert on the campus pond lawn. Each year the event has grown in popularity. For many students, the Spring Concert is the only UPC event they will see.

In the past, such acts as The Alarm, Shinehead, Tom Tom Club, Bonnie Raitt and Bob Dylan have participated in the Spring Concert Series.

A lot of time and energy is put into producing the event, and UPC is always interested in getting more students involved with their productions. The Security, Stage Crew, Hospitality, and Promotion managers are always recruiting students for upcoming events.

This allows you to run for one of those positions and others: like Talent Coordinator, Muticultural Talent Coordinator, Production Manager, and Business Manager.

You can also become a voting member. Any full-time undergraduate student may become one by attending three consecutive general meetings or by working shows.

Meetings are held on Tuesday nights at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center. Their first meeting of this semester is on Tuesday, Feb. 11, in room 165.

So get involved! Attend their meetings, stop by the office (rm. 406 in the Student Union), or call them at 545-2892. Help them bring you concerts.

Massage: Not a pipe dream

By DAVID DEMERJIAN
Collegian Staff

For those of you who think that laying back and enjoying an hour-long massage is just a pipe dream, think again.

A unique business has recently opened in the area, and they are ready to show students and professionals alike just how relaxing and healthy a massage can be.

The Northampton Center For Healing Therapies, located at 6 Crafts Avenue, is dedicated to "wellness and growth in an atmosphere of professionalism, healing, education and support."

The center specializes in what is called a "client-centered massage," says Kris Chamberlin, one of the nine professionally trained therapists employed at the center.

"The first thing I do when I get a client at the center is sit down and talk to them. I try to find out exactly what their needs are and then select the right massage for them."

The center has two basic massage options to choose from. The traditional Swedish massage consists of "long, smooth strokes and is designed to relax muscles and relieve stress," says Chamberlin. The sports massage, on the other hand, concentrates on intensive attention to certain overworked muscle groups.

According to Chamberlin, each massage serves a different purpose.

"While the Swedish massage is a great stress reliever and relaxer, the sports massage is geared toward athletes. A good sports massage enhances performance by relaxing and loosening overworked muscles."

The center offers a variety of healing therapies other than massage. Feldenkrais Method therapy, a system of educating the body to release habitual stressful patterns by learning new ways of movement, has been successful in treating children with brain damage, people with chronic back pain, cerebral palsy and injuries from car accidents and falls.

Multicultural Affairs

Looking at BCP as actual opportunists

It seems to me that current technological developments are contributing to the expansion of an absolutist power-system of social-economic-polity. The final outcome of these dynamic, becoming a highly controlled and totalitarian system, of which cultural individualism stands out as revolutionary action. Thus, we are subject to the power-system needs.

The current power system has enabled the users of the English language's rhetorical vocabulary to substitute the essence of oppression for that of multiculturalism, at least in the public sphere. Furthermore, and in light of past social, economical and political experiences, the power system has been able to communicate the desired moral attitudes, through its continuous manipulation of the language.

Charles Venator

Thus, when we use the American Heritage Dictionary, to define our moral values, we are defining ourselves in the context of the American heritage and not within our historical reality. The use of a language, as a means of communication and or social interaction, has helped to deceive, control and define the values of both the oppressed and the oppressor.

While many of the oppressed groups have managed to form some resistance against the consequences of this tendency, by using revolutionary languages such as the "Black English" and "Spanglish," the great majority of people are becoming increasingly entrapped in the political correctness and other poetic rhetoric. The use of a language, as a means of communication and/or social interaction, has helped to deceive, control and define the values of both the oppressed and the oppressor.

The power-system is continuously creating ideologies with a common telos (end), the extension and preservation of itself. This is fundamentally achieved by directing every individual and community to create an illusory collectivity, characterized by the homogenization of a common will. By destroying diversity, manifested through the alienation of the students (or the people), from the power structure of authority and participation in social, economical and political movements, the power system manages to control and eradicate our inner most forms of resistance, our historical culture. This is what Elliot Monteverde and his christian-styled martyr tribe are successfully attempting to accomplish.

Last semester's media hyped, cultural center, GI-Joe actions, perhaps created by Whitmore's power system, certainly created by the "Bilingual Colonial Program" is our clearest example. While an apparently ignorant bureaucratic leviathan O'Brien yielded some arbitrarily chosen concessions to the BCP, in the name of the Asian-Latino-Native American-Third World Theatre Street Gang.

These elitist opportunists purposely excluded the Black/African American community, as well as the rest of the people, from any form of participation or support. The result has been an assimilation of the colorless/imperialists people's traditionally oppressive technique of stigmatation. These snowball effect, egocentric and self-declared liberators(or perhaps liberals?) have both perpetuated and become an essential part of the oppressive power system.

As a result of the latter reality, we can conclude that the students "of color's" foremost enemy, at least within the confines of this University can be identified as our inefficient corrupt and self-interested leadership. In the public eye, we can identify the majority of the staff of the BCP.

If any real progress is to be made in the development of a diverse multiplicity of cultures, within the UMass society, we must begin by evaluating and defining our goals as a community. There is no room for corrupt, self-interested and inefficient blockhead leaders.

We, as a people, need to weed out our backyard, while recognizing that it is often easier for the people of color to identify a colorless enemy, yet it can be very hard to see a chameleon. We must begin by empowering the students with the authority to participate in a continously changing agenda.

Moreover, must not get caught in the trap of analyzing oppression through a single dimension, such as social economic class or racism, but to seek to define oppression as a complexity of issues, that affect us in particular and collective ways.

Finally, I wish to exort all those political writers to address the issue, not the writer.

Charles Venator is a UMass student. The views expressed in this article are those of the author and do not necessarily represent those of the Collegian.

Puerto Rico as an institution of racism

Racism in Puerto Rico is a phenomenon or a parasite well established in the Puerto Rican society of today. The racial conflict in Puerto Rico is characterized by numerous collective and individual mental disorders. Clearly, changes to the actual social structure are only possible with major social reforms.

Unlike the biological disease of bilharzia, racism is not confined to the tropical regions of the world. A historical analysis of the past 500 years would unquestionably yield evidence that the phenomenon of racism is current in every corner of the world where European colonialism and slavery has existed.

Elliot Monteverde Torres

It has, however, been established by some "experts" in the field that, prior to the arrival of the Europeans to the Southern Hemisphere, slavery and colonialism was an integral aspect of certain societies and civilizations. This could very well be true. Yet, this claim is at best poorly documented. The fact that this perspective belongs exclusively to the oppressor himself inevitably raises the question of credibility. It has been suggested this is motivated not for its historical and anthropological validity but as a clever mechanism by the oppressor to establish what amounts to an excuse.

The conflict of racism in Puerto Rico is more institutionalized than it is in the United States. This is a situation which is predictably aggravated as a result of the invasions and colonizations of which Puerto Rico has fallen victim. The dose of oppression administered to Puerto Rico is so strong the subject of racism, when raised in an open forum, is considered to be evil and insulting. The problem is so serious that to acknowledge publicly that there is a racial conflict it leads people to condemn and dismiss the person as a fault-finder. In fact, people would fervently argue the problem is about classism and not racism.

In general, the population of Puerto Rico is racially schizophrenic — distorting reality by delusions and hallucinations. Puerto Ricans in general, suffer from the more considerable problem of racial dementia praecox, a deterioration of the ability to reason and develop.

The repercussions of the racial conflict in Puerto Rico, with its roots in the plantation system, are deeply rooted. The colonial government, the National Guard, the police, the Church, the media, the educational system, the arts, etc. act simultaneously as ambassadors and victims of the oppressive colonial system originating in Washington.

These entities are consequentially responsible for the destruction of the Puerto Rican identity — one which is primarily Black, Mulatto, Indian and Mestizo. The values of the inherently racist society of Spain and the blatant racism characteristic of the metropolis were, and continue to be successfully transplanted into the medulla of the Puerto Rican society.

The causes of racism in Puerto Rico can be appreciated today in the following: the racial composition of the colonial government; the racial composition of the school children in the deplorable public school system in opposition to those in the private school system; the denigrating roles played by Black actors in the media vis-a-vis those played by the "light-skinned" Puerto Ricans; the racial composition of the so-called lower classes; the racial percentage of the educated and professional; the countless derogatory terms in the Spanish language; the numerous offensive references to Black Puerto Ricans in the literature; the general interpretation that black is negative; the conception of the Black Puerto Rican as exotic and physiologically more adept to the rigors of hard labor and in general, the portrayal of Blacks as intellectually and culturally inferior.

However, the most remarkable aspect of racism, according to how this phenomenon is manifested in Puerto Rico, is the half-successful obliteration of the African legacy in the Puerto Rican identity. To achieve this goal, the oppressors have deliberately over-emphasized the contributions of the Taino Indians and, of course, the Europeans.

Consequently, particularly in the middle-class, we witness the neurotic denial of ourselves as a mulatto people. The racial disease in Puerto Rico has resulted in a low self-esteem; an inferiority complex; radical divisions and our lack of pride.

Most importantly, this confusion prevents us from identifying ourselves with other oppressed peoples of the Third World. Unfortunately, it is not until we are confronted with the harsh racism in the United States that we ever become aware — a paradox to the process of assimilation.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE BLACK COMMUNITY ON FEBRUARY – BLACK HISTORY MONTH!

You have an accent. Where are you from?

Hello! This is the first Multicultural Affairs page for the spring. "No kidding!" You may be thinking.

For the first and last time in the semester I'm going to tell you a little about myself. I am a freshman, School of Management major and I'm from Puerto Rico.

It's fun when some people ask me where I'm from. They usually ask me if I'm from Spain, Portugal, France or whatever place comes to mind. Usually they ask me after they hear my accent. Well, I don't mind.

Then they ask me: "Are you on exchange or for the four years?" For the four years, I answer.

Or they ask you: "Are you an American citizen?"

— Yes, Puerto Ricans are American citizens. No, I did not have to use a passport to come here, nor is there foreign currency either.

"How did you hear about UMass?"

— Well, a guy in admissions came to my school to give a presentation on UMass as many colleges do.

"Are there any K mart's in Puerto Rico?"

— Yes, there are K mart's in Puerto Rico and Blockbuster Video, Sears, J.C. Penney, Toys 'R' Us and every kind of fast food restaurant.

Oh yes, I have been discriminated against, and it always has happened. But, do you know something? I DON'T CARE!

I see people as individuals. Thank God I was not raised to distinguish people on the basis of color. There have been people who have told me horrible things but I cannot judge the group they belong to, only that one person. I cannot hold it against the group because of the individual ignoramuses who harassed me. If I did that I would be a racist, that includes being racist against Whites. I cannot say I do not like White people because of those ignorant people who tried to bother me. Tried, because they did not succeed.

Evelyn A. De Jesús

On the other hand there have been many neat things which have happened to me. For example, when I was in my English 112 class my teacher used to encourage me because of the great effort I was putting into the work. He knew English was not my first language. Thank you, Mr. Huscle!

The best thing that has ever happened to me is that I have learned as a human being. I have learned to have all sorts of different kinds of friends. Their background, sex, religion, whatever doesn't matter.

I want to see everyone's opinions on this page. You don't have to be classified as a minority to write here. I want your opinions, your experiences, your concerns etc. Cartoons please!

The Multicultural Affairs page does not necessarily have to be complaints about whatever. But, of course, everything has to be covered, and even more so if it is based on reality.

You do not have to be a writer to write here. If you need any help just give me or anyone else on the staff a call so we can help. I NEED WRITERS. THAT MEANS YOU! I need writers from the Asian, Cape Verdian, Latino, Native American, Indian and Black communities and everyone else I'd love to mention but I don't have the space.

I want to cover your activities. But I need you to tell me when and where first. Just give me a call or drop me a note. I will be there.

To end this: I hope you have a good semester and please, don't forget to write. See you soon!

Where Careers Take Off!

Bring back the old Robyn Hitchcock

By SCOTT KESNER
Collegian Correspondent

I visited Pearl Street for the first time Thursday night.

I was briefly disoriented in my new surroundings, but was greeted by Robyn Hitchcock's opening act, Matthew Sweet, who diffidently told jibes and quickly made me feel welcome in his world of humor.

Although Sweet is a guitarist/songwriter, not a comedian, his comical pieces often proved more interesting than his musical material.

For instance, Sweet's mocked sorrow about missing a radio interview was far more effective than "Divine Intervention," the dirge that followed. Also effective were the manic solos of guitarist Ivan Julian, who often uplifted the show when it bordered on boredom.

For the most part, Sweet's performance was a likable one. I did enjoy the tender musings of "I've Been Waiting" and "You Don't Love Me," as well as a backing vocal-less version of Sweet's current single, "Girlfriend."

Musically the show was pleasurable, but visually it was lacking. Sweet needs to assemble a younger, more athletic band of buoyant musicians so they may go freely milling about on stage. Until this change occurs, fans may want to tank up on coffee before showtime.

The straightforward demeanor of Sweet's band, which looked like it wanted to go home and eat sandwiches, was in no way preparation for Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians' set.

Hitchcock's semi-power trio, including bassist Andy Metcalf and drummer Morris Windsor, made me sad upon first glance. The vision flung me back to a time when Hitchcock came accompanied only with an acoustic guitar.

I became nostalgic at the thought of his Bluewall performance in '89. We all assembled in front of him in kindergarten-like fashion as he enchanted us with his tall tales and the music that accompanied them. Although the Pearl Street show opened with one of his patented, ribald soliloquies, my days of musical kindergarten were over.

"Birds in Perspex" was my first sample of what Hitchcock is capable of in a band's presence. Well, it pretty much sounded like what he did with the band in the studio, except maybe a little more tinny. I have to admit that I'm a big fan of Hitchcock's studio stuff, but I found that having a band reproduce it live proved one-dimensional.

After playing most of his current album, Perspex Island, and a few cuts from Globe of Frogs, including the effervescent "Balloon Man," Hitchcock added back dimension by shifting into solo acoustic form.

Here the show became interesting, as Hitchcock, the post-modern Syd Barret, banged out eclectic numbers from his acoustic Eye album, and slowly reassembled his threesome by incorporating Metcalf's stride piano and Windsor's light brush playing. The highlights of this unplugged set were a hokey a cappella, and "Madonna of the Wasps" from the Queen Elvis album.

Shortly after, the band once again returned to electric form, but I was lost in reverie, hoping that one day I could see Hitchcock and hear his acoustic guitar again.

You've Just Been Cleared For Take Off.

You can get a lot more out of life when you set your sights a little higher. Which is what applying for the American Express® Card is all about. When you get the Card, it's easier to do the things you want to do. And with the student savings that come along with it, you can do even more.

Fly roundtrip on Continental for less than $100 each way.

Student Cardmembers receive four travel certificates. They can be used to fly anywhere Continental Airlines flies in the 48 contiguous United States. Two for the school year, and two for the summer.*

Depending on where you fly, each school year travel certificate is good for $129 or $189 roundtrip—and each summer travel certificate is good for $149 or $199 roundtrip.

Airfare examples based on destination.

Roundtrips	Your School Year Fare

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Although you like to take charge, you would be wise to encourage other people to express their ideas. An employer gives you the green light for a pet project. Romance sizzles!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Kind words will strengthen family ties today. They could also start the ball rolling on a new project. Expect fanfare tonight when you find yourself in the spotlight. Do your laundry today and call Mom.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Steer clear of a casual flirtation now. You could be playing with fire! Fulfill your regular responsibilities with enthusiasm; that is where true happiness lies.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasize friendly interaction both socially and on the job. You may be able to land an important client or contract if you know the right people. Gather with good friends tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Listening with an open heart will lead to new togetherness. Celebrate the special rapport you and a loved one enjoy. Turn on the charm when attending social affairs. Put others at ease. Don't kiss your dog on the lips; it's gross.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romance and entertainment dominate your agenda now. Feast on life; drink it up! A quiet night at home restores your energy following a busy day. Bid good riddance to subliminal worries.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Hidden forces may be creating deception or confusion at work. Listening to the grapevine helps you unravel a riddle. You find out more than you expected. Keep your promises to loved ones.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful not to jump the gun where a domestic matter is concerned. You may not have all the information you need to make a convincing argument. Confer with friends or co-workers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are eager to forge ahead with your career plans. A corporate headhunter could help you land a coveted job. Remember your manners! Be careful not to badger or insult potential allies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Join forces with another person to make a creative project profitable. Your timing is right and your chances for success are excellent! Romance reaches new heights this week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Helping a family member or co-worker should be your top priority today. A new friendship is launched as a direct result of your good deeds. The love temperature keeps soaring.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Private and personal schemes flourish today. Doors previously closed to you open right up! Put your best foot forward at a conference or gala social event.

Women's swimming falls at New Englands

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Going into last weekends' New England Championships at Boston College, University of Massachusetts women's swimming coach Bob Newcomb thought that his team's chances of coming home to Amherst with a victory were very good.

He even went as far as to say that it was payoff time for the hard work his swimmers have put in all season long.

Unfortunately for UMass, neither of Newcomb's hopes came true as the UMass swimmers, scoring a dismal 327, finished seventh [out of 18 teams] behind perennial favorite Boston College.

B.C., locked in a duel with Providence College for most of the meet, finally overcame the Friars 574.5 - 557. Springfield College came in third with a score of 434.

Leading the way for UMass was sophomore Allison White who overcame a foot injury and won the 3-meter diving competition (419 points) and finished second in the 1-meter competition (348.90) behind Springfield College's Julie Killion (353).

White was named co-diver of the meet with Killion, who placed third in the 3-meter.

"I was really happy with my performance and the fact that I was named co-diver of the meet," White said. "As a team, it was a difficult meet but I think we could have swam much better than we did.

"I think it's fair to say that we really didn't reach our potential at this meet or the whole year for matter," White said.

Sophomore Kimberly Broad also was one of the key performers for UMass, scoring a season-best time in the 1650 freestyle of 17:53.16. She placed second behind Northeasterns' Jessica Gerber, who had a time of 17:32.33. Carolyn Curran of UMass was ninth [1833.34].

Broad also placed seventh in the 500 free with a time of 5:18.23.

"Overall we didn't swim up to par," said Broad. "However, considering all the injuries we had going into the meet [Jen Jackson and Allison White] we didn't do too badly."

As a team, UMass placed first in the 200 backstroke with a score of 37 and also won the 1650 free (26 points). In the 800 free, UMass took third.

B.C. was the story, taking eight events.

In the 400 individual medley, the Eagles scored a whopping 50 points overall to take first place (the closest competitor was Northeastern with 29 points) and ran away with the 100 breaststroke (39 pts.). P.C. was close behind, winning six events.

In the 400 Medley Relay B.C. and P.C. finished one and two respectively (3:58.16 and 4:01.23) with UMass filling the number eight slot (4:11:34).

Although after Friday's events UMass was tied for fourth place with Vermont, the Minutewomen never really had a chance to win the meet as B.C. and P.C. were in control from beginning to end.

"Boston College and Providence were in a class by themselves," Newcomb said. "They have such quality and depth and we didn't swim as well as I expected; add those together and you get a subpar performance from us.

"I was, however, really excited about the performances of some the girls," Newcomb said. "Allison [White] was definitely the highlight of the meet for us; it's quite an honor to be named co-diver of the meet. Carolyn Curran, a sophomore, was also spectacular.

"I'm not happy overall with our team performance, though," Newcomb said. "I just hope we do a lot better at Easterns [Championships] in two weeks."

Jason Fox scored an 8.75 to lead the squad to a 43.70 point rotation. MIT scored only 36.60 points on the vault.

The team now has a 5-0 record as they continue to prepare for Temple. The leaders had a rest and the rest of the team had a chance to see where they are. The team knows what they have to do to beat Temple. A 224.80 point performance may have been good enough to beat a weak MIT team, but it certainly will not beat defending league champions Temple on Saturday.

Alumni questions still unanswered

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Four concerned University of Massachusetts alumni met with Chancellor Richard O'Brien and two key members of the Athletic Department yesterday to discuss the lack of communication surrounding cuts to the University's football program.

The recently developed coalition, which came in search of facts, said they left the Chancellor's Office with more questions than answers.

Frank DiTommaso, the captain of the 1980 football team, and three other former players wanted to find out who made the decision to make scholarship reductions to the program early last December, but weren't given a direct response.

"That was one of the focal points [of the meeting] and we never got a satisfactory answer," DiTommaso said while leaving Whitmore Administration Building around 7:30 p.m. after more than an hour of deliberation. "We basically told them that we didn't get any conclusive facts to any of our questions."

David Bischoff, the dean of the School of Physical Education, said, "At the University, nobody makes a decision," but followed by saying, "If you have a budget and you don't have enough money you have to cut someplace and somebody has to make a decision of where it has to be cut."

Frank McInerney, the University's director of athletics, was also present at the meeting and said afterward, "Their role was to find out as many facts as they could about the system, and you can't explain the system. We're a function of the state, and as such, it's very complex all the way down the line."

In a statement released Feb. 5, O'Brien said, "The decision to reduce the number of scholarships for next year was fully in accord with informal discussions on Dec. 4 with interested Trustees, with the full concurrence of the President and the Chancellor, and a formal recommendation on Jan. 18 from an ad hoc committee of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council."

One of the concerns of the alumni group was why the University did not tell football coach Jim Reid in early December that the cuts may have been forthcoming.

Reid verbally resigned upon hearing of the cuts for the first time, Jan. 23, after not wanting to retract verbal scholarship promises to high school recruits.

"We're concerned how they let the situation be handled the way it ultimately was," DiTommaso said. "Jim Reid had his football program cut and he didn't even know about it while he and the other coaches were out selling the University. It turned out to be a whole pack of lies and very embarrassing to the University."

Asked if he was displeased with the handling of the situation, O'Brien said Sunday, "There are some judgement calls I would have made differently."

O'Brien said Monday, "It's a judgement call as to who translated the general directions of cutting back in football."

Bischoff said, "If there's ever one complaint about a University, it's that there's never enough distribution of information, never enough communication."

DiTommaso said something positive came out of the talks.

"The dean has agreed to make himself and members of the staff available to sit with us and see how we can help," DiTommaso said.

He said there was not any exact date set for a future meeting between the concerned parties.

of resignation. However, due to complex legal language, O'Brien did not think it was a resignation letter.

"I talked to Chancellor O'Brien [last night] and apologized to him," Reid said. "I didn't mean for the letter to be anything other than a resignation. I will officially resign Thursday."

UMass officials have not begun the search for a new football coach because they have contended all along, Reid had not officially resigned. However, the search should begin sometime next week.

"These are tough times [to get a job]," Reid said, late last night. "Jim Marshall has been a good friend for a long time and I would love to work for him.

"I'm only interviewing for the job," he said. "I probably won't find out if I get it for at least a couple of days. This is a good opportunity."

Intimidation still part of game

"The Boston Bruins traded Craig Janney and Stephan Quintal to the St. Louis Blues for Adam Oates..."

I fell back in my chair in disbelief. "Janney and Quintal for Oates," I said once or twice, just to see how it sounded.

Harry Sinden has never been afraid to wheel and deal. To get something you have to give something, or so the saying goes. He's done it countless times, so this deal should come as no surprise.

The Boston media had Janney traded for just about every NHL superstar over the past two seasons.

Adam Oates is a bona-fide superstar who was unhappy in St. Louis. He can skate, score, pass, check and drive the Zamboni machine between periods if he has to. Few should be shocked that Sinden dealt for such a quality player, especially when he was so available and the price was right.

Greg Sukiennik

So why am I still pissed off that Sinden dealt Janney away?

Go back to 1988. The Bruins hadn't played well enough to get anywhere close to the Stanley Cup since the likes of Brad Park, Terry O'Reilly and Rick Middleton wore the black and gold. Garry Cheevers was the goalie, Don Cherry was the coach and the "Big Bad Bruins" checked and intimidated opponents mercilessly.

Who was it that brought the B's back into contention? A line consisting of a sometime brawler who could also skate and score and two unknown newcomers. They were known by their last names, as if they were all one name glued together — "Neely-Janney-Joyce."

Cam Neely has been out most of the year with a knee injury. Bobby Joyce was last seen toiling for the Washington Capitals.

And Janney? While he continued to grow as a scorer and as an excellent passer, Janney also gained a reputation for being "soft," especially in the playoffs — a label he didn't deserve.

Janney is short by most NHL standards. During the regular season, this usually didn't effect his play. However, in the playoffs, opposing teams would routinely key in on Janney by having him shadowed all game long.

By shadowed I don't mean "me and my shadow;" I mean opposing teams assigned someone bigger than Janney to beat on him for 60 minutes. It's just part of the game in the NHL, where if you can't outskate 'em, you beat 'em up.

Adam Oates is a bigger physical presence on the ice than Janney is. While not characterized as a fighter, Oates can hold his own in checking situations and isn't as vulnerable to abuse as Janney sometimes was.

In the Norris Division, the WWF of the NHL, where Oates played his entire NHL career with St. Louis and Detroit, fights and cheap shots are just part of the fun. Oates, who came into the NHL right out of college, excelled as a passing, scoring center despite the prevailing mayhem. If Janney truly was traded because he wasn't as adept at the physical game, Oates is a good replacement.

I live close to the New York state line, within the Albany media market. This enabled me to see Oates lead Renselear Polytechnical Institute, an engineering school with no other Divison I sports besides hockey, to the NCAA title in 1985. Bruins fans who have seen his totals for the year and think he's not a scorer will be pleasantly surprised to know Oates was a scoring machine for RPI.

As for Janney, he and Quintal join a St. Louis team far off last year's 100-point pace. Part of that may have been linked to Oates' unhappiness, and who knows, Janney could spark the Blues. He could also get beat up pretty badly in a division full of goons if his teammates don't protect him.

But still, while the trade makes perfect sense, there's something about team loyalty Hary Sinden seems to forget every time he makes a trade. Maybe such notions are impractical, but after all, these are the Boston Bruins, and Janney did help spearhead their resurgence.

Gymnastics defeats MIT, set for Temple

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian correspondent

Even with its top competitors sitting on the sidelines Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team had no problem beating the gymnasts from Massachusetts Institute of Technology by a score of 224.80 to 139.20.

The line-up was designed by head coach Roy Johnson to give his top gymnasts a little bit of a mental break and to give some of the gymnasts who had been performing inconsistently during the season a chance to "step up a notch" before the team faces Temple this weekend.

"Our top competitors make up half of our team, we need the other half of our team to elevate their level of performance for us to be successful against Temple and Syracuse," said Johnson. "Right now we are averaging 44.0 per event, we need to be averaging somewhere between 45.0 and 47.0 if we want to beat Temple."

The squad from MIT had neither the depth nor the skill to compete with the gymnasts from UMass. On the pommel horse and the high bar MIT was only able to field two gymnasts, and only three MIT gymnasts competed on the parallel bars.

UMass had a 6.8 point lead after just the first event, floor exercise, and the lead simply continued to grow. After the second event, the pommel horse, the score was already UMass 76.10, MIT 42.90.

On the parallel bars, MIT scored a meager 18.5 points, while UMass, with the help of an 8.75 point performance from Bill Sayman, scored 37.5 points.

On the vault, Jason Braud scored a 9.25, and

Tsongas maintaining a steady course

Campaign holds even pace to primary

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — In this season's race to the New Hampshire primary, Paul Tsongas has been methodical in charting his 11-month drive, more like the tortoise than the hare.

Now with one week left to the critical test, Tsongas' aides say they're picking up the pace, enjoying the excitement and preparing to peak Feb. 18, although the pace will remain deliberate.

"This campaign has always been one that planned things out, tried to advance the ball a little each day," said national political director Paul Shone. "We don't anticipate any big surprises in the final week."

U.S. Rep. Nicholas Mavroules, D-Mass., has advised Tsongas to stay the course.

"Everything he has done has been a very slow, methodical, stone-by-stone buildup," he said. "Little by little he has gotten his message out."

In this era of 30-second sound bites, the former Massachusetts senator has relied on a dense 86-page term paper titled "A Call to Economic Arms" to pitch his candidacy.

"Next week he has to give them the executive summary," Shone said.

Campaign manager Dennis Kanin said that means "crystallizing his message," in one more new commercial, a major televised debate Sunday and a week of colorful staged events.

A host of rallies, speeches and phone calls will be sandwiched between a Manchester, N.H., town meeting where Tsongas' name will be lit on the marquee of The Palace Theatre and a Valentine's Day birthday party for Tsongas and his twin sister in a hotel ballroom.

Tsongas has staked his entire quest on New Hampshire. He has promised to withdraw if he does not finish first, second or a very strong third. A Boston Globe poll released Monday showed Tsongas and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton tied at 26 percent.

For nearly a year he has run a shoestring operation, reporting a debt this winter.

"We'll live and die by the results every week," from Feb. 18 on, said campaign spokeswoman Peggy Connolly.

If Tsongas fares well in New Hampshire the campaign expects a rush of donations to pay for the next competition in Maine Feb. 23 and "if we do well in Maine we'll get more money and invest it for Super Tuesday," she said.

Aides say Tsongas is finally viewed as credible and electable as evidenced by increased donations.

Kanin said Tsongas raised $250,000 the last week in January, the same amount collected in three summer months. "In the last two days, $40,000 has come in the mail."

The money has been like a head rush to a campaign that couldn't afford to send signs to its Washington state office. It has enabled Tsongas to increase his television advertising in three states and put a little in the bank.

"Paul is really pumped up," Kanin said. "He gets excited about the money coming in."

SMOKE ON THE EIGHTH FLOOR — At 9:52 p.m. last night, a fire started in an electrical box on the eighth floor of the Campus Center. Burning insulation on wires in the box generated excessive smoke, forcing 50 people to be evacuated from floors 3-12. There were no reported injuries and no damage other than the electrical panel.

T.A. dies following surgery

Scott Allan Nitzsche of Reading, MA, a teaching and research assistant at the University of Massachusetts, died on Feb. 8 due to complications following surgery. He was 25.

Nitzsche worked in the Polymer Science and Engineering Department at the University and was due to complete his 5-year doctorate program in Polymer Science this September.

A member of the American Chemical Society, Nitzsche published ten research papers in the field of Polymer Physics.

He graduated from Reading Memorial High School in 1984 and received his B.A. in chemistry from UMass-Amherst in 1988. Nitzsche was also a recipient of the Monsanto Fellowship.

GEO reacts to stalled contract

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Organization last night voted on a course of action concerning the recent derailment of full contract approval at an emergency meeting in the Student Union Ballroom.

Approximately 250 "very angry" members of GEO gathered for the closed meeting to discuss plans of how to respond.

"The actions set to take place in the next couple of weeks are not to be divulged," said GEO co-speaker Peter Underwood.

"Let me just say that we are taking positive action to ensure we do get the contract approved and implemented," he said. "That is the goal of the whole membership right now."

On Jan. 31, the GEO membership unanimously ratified a contract proposal after a full year of negotiations with the University administration. Last Wednesday the contract was unexpectedly denied full approval by the Board of Trustees.

According to co-speaker Emily Isaacs, GEO is awaiting the Feb. 28 trustees meeting in which they hope attorney William Searson will "acknowledge and affirm his previous decision" on binding arbitration and union recognition as "legally sound moves."

Isaacs said if the contract were to be tabled again, GEO would perceive that as rejection and would "act accordingly."

When asked about the possibility of another strike in the near future, Isaacs said that no one wants more GEO action, including members.

"GEO is not strike-happy, contrary to popular belief," said Isaacs. "It is a last-resort action. But since the contract is not approved, we are not under the 'no-strike' clause."

Underwood said, "No strike has been voted upon."

Susan Pearson, chief negotiator for the administration on the contract, said, "It's too premature to speculate, but

Kelley unafraid to speak his mind

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a six-part series profiling the candidates in the race for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Larry Kelley of Amherst doesn't pull any punches as to why he entered the race for the Amherst-Pelham state representative seat.

Kelley, an Independent competing in the March 17 general election for the seat vacated by State Senator Stanley Rosenberg late last September, said he decided to enter the race when he found out Ellen Story of Amherst was running.

"Ellen Story is both the most formidable and the least qualified candidate," Kelley said in a recent interview with the Collegian. "She's formidable because she's both a woman and a member of the Amherst wine-and-cheese circuit."

Kelley also referred to what he called the Amherst's "namby-pamby attitude" that dictates everyone in the town should get along and "no one should go out and be aggressive."

Kelley has also said "[Story's] only claim to fame" was serving as a member of Amherst Town Meeting and when Story was a School Committee member in 1986, "there was so much money cascading in from Boston, anybody could have done a good job."

The other candidates for the Democratic nomination are Terry Franklin and Jon Hite of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham. Mark Enoch of Amherst is the sole Republican in the race.

Story said Kelley is "really reaching" in his statements about her, noting that she has worked for 18 years with low-income women and children at the Western Massachusetts Family Planning Council. She also said all of her education has been at public institutions.

"I really don't know what [Kelley] is talking about — I'm certainly not out drinking wine and eating cheese every night," Story said.

"Larry Kelley is having a good time making provocative statements," Story said.

Kelley, a businessman who runs the Karate Health Fitness Center in Amherst, said he is someone who "speaks his mind."

"I'm busy — I want people to get to the point," Kelley said. "When people deal with me, they know they're in a competition."

Although Kelley says he has "no illusions" about his chances of winning the race, he feels he is the best of any of the candidates on fiscal issues.

"I've had a lot of experience in the private sector, and you have to be a fiscal conservative to survive there," Kelley said. He noted that in 1982, when he first opened his karate school, 77 percent of small business openings that year failed.

One of Kelley's major fiscal issues is Amherst's Cherry Hill Golf Course. The Town purchased the Course in 1987 for

Elvis' division faces cutbacks

By MARK FRITZ
Associated Press

FRIEDBERG, Germany — Elvis' old barber is all shook up. The King's mane man, the guy who pruned the Presley pompadour, is worried that he may have to find a new place to dwell.

"Sure, I'm afraid," says Karl-Heinz Stein, the head haircutter at the base where Pvt. Elvis A. Presley spent his overseas Army hitch.

The legacies of Presley's stay at Ray Barracks north of Franfurt have suffered from the massive reduction in American Forces in Europe.

The Elvis A. Presley Dining Facility recently closed and Presley's old Alpha Company is moving to new quarters.

Ray Barracks has so far survived.

For as long as it does, Stein intends to keep his shrine to Elvis, including the scissors and straight razor he used to maintain the Presley pompadour after his basic-training cut grew out.

Auto worker says he's sorry for bad brakes

COLUMBIA, Md., (AP) — A man who complained about faulty brakes on his 1992 Buick got an apology, but not the one he expected. It came directly from the auto worker responsible for the mistake.

"I would never have believed it. I'm just amazed," said John F. Jacobs, 48, an electrical engineer. "It appears to be that they're paying attention to quality control."

Rich Richardson, a foreman in the Flint, Mich., plant that built Jacobs' LeSabre, thought he was calling a dealer when he dialed Jacobs' number last week. When he realized he had the car owner on the phone, he decided to go ahead with the call anyway.

"I thought we ought to talk to him. The defect was so important that I thought we ought to tell him we are going to see it never happens again," Richardson, 47, a 29-year GM veteran, said Monday.

Jacobs told Richardson he had traded in a 1985 Toyota van for the Buick, and Richardson decided to call auto worker Mike Wilson, who had installed the brakes, to the phone.

Jacobs said both men apologized profusely for the improperly secured bracket in the left front brake.

Floodlight smashes at hotel entrance

A fallen exterior floodlight caused this damage to the outside of the Campus Center Sunday night. The light was reported damaged earlier Sunday, but no response was made.

By BROOKE C. WHEELER

A floodlight illuminating the entrance of the Campus Center Hotel which was reported to the Physical Plant Sunday as being loose crashed to the flagstones at the entrance Sunday night, breaking one of the gray slabs and spraying broken glass in the immediate area.

"I heard a huge crash," said Holly Harris, the hotel clerk on duty at the time. "At first I thought there was a metal trash can blowing around in the wind."

At the time she heard the crash, Harris was checking a customer into the hotel who had, just moments before, come in through the north entrance.

"The [customer] had come through that door about a minute before the crash," she said. "It's just luck they didn't come in one minute later."

Earlier that day, a security worker for the Campus Center had noticed the light looked loose and reported it to Building Operations, according to senior manager Forrest Davies.

"The worker reported the light was hanging, literally, by its wires and blowing back and forth in the wind," said Davies. "We notified the Physical Plant, but they didn't respond. If they had, this could have been prevented."

Physical Plant Director of Operations Patrick Daly said, "The loose light was reported, the call was not responded to, and it is true [the accident] could have been prevented."

"We did have people up there working with the lights' retracting mechanisms a few weeks ago and no one noticed any problems," he added. "We will have to make a thorough inspection of the other lights."

The light was one of ten on the north side roof of the Campus Center Hotel. There are twenty roof-based retractable floodlights, all of which were originally installed when the hotel was built in the early 1970s, according to Daly.

The Physical Plant is supposed to do regular checks on the lighting fixtures and make needed repairs, Davies said.

"I am not happy about what happened," he added. "I'm just thankful there was no one hurt."

Speakers look to close gap between communities

by MORGAN BITTON
Collegian Staff

Prompted by a speech by City College of New York Professor Leoanard Jeffries, the Jewish Community of Amherst and the UMass B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation sponsored a panel discussion and workshops Monday night, centered around combating anti-Semitism.

Rabbi Sheila Weinberg introduced the event which presented many responses the local community can take to anti-Semitism. "We are building viable bridges between the Jewish community and other communities," she said.

The panel, titled "Anti-Semitism — Local and National: What can be done?" featured Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of UMass Hillel, Leonard Zakim, New England Regional Director of the B'Nai B'rith Anti-Defamation League and Bailey Jackson, dean of the UMass School of Education.

Following the panel discussions the audience of about fifty broke up into groups for workshops with one speaker acting as chair for each group.

Although Rabbi Perlmutter said he would "rather be doing just about anything than discussing anti-Semitism," he told of many recent occurrences of anti-Semitism at UMass and how the Jewish community can best respond to anti-Semitism.

Rabbi Perlmutter only discussed incidents which were brought to the attention of Hillel by UMass students.

Anti-Semitism at the University is often aimed at the whole Jewish community, Perlmutter said. He complained about Hillel posters being defaced and menorahs knocked over around Hanukkah time, one at the Hillel House and one outside the Student Union.

Perlmutter also cited graffiti on dorm doors, bulletin boards and elevators. He discussed the evils of calling women "Japs," which Perlmutter believes combines sexism with anti-Semitism.

Besides sexism between students, Perlmutter also said some professors discriminate against Jewish students. He gave one example in which a student told a professor she could not attend classes when they occurred on a Jewish holiday. He said the professor replied, "You need to pick between your religion and your education."

To combat anti-Semitism, Perlmutter said he believes "we have to make this a community issue."

Zakim said, "We have to be open and acknowledge that we are more able to wave the flags against anti-Semitism in this country than in any other country."

He also explained how Judaism and Jewish culture is more integrated in the United States than in any other country today, including France and England.

Dr. Jackson spoke of his involvement with the Black Jewish Dialogue and the Social Issues movement at UMass. "I usually come away less than satisfied, feeling like we missed the target and something is usually said to offend more than one group."

Dr. Jackson discussed options to make the Black Jewish Dialogue more effective. "Before building bridges we have to decide what is in the gap. Sometimes when we build bridges they fall because we haven't assessed the gap."

Dr. Jackson believes when we learn about each other, "we can see the things that brought us together and it will expand the way we see each other."

'Gift of Judaism' appreciated

Jewish Arts Festival opens with Leslea Newman

By ELIZABETH CHRISTOPHER
Collegian Staff

"To be a Jew in the 20th century is to be offered a gift," began poet and author Leslea Newman at her reading last night, commencing the 16th annual Jewish Arts Festival.

Newman read from her collection of poetry and fiction to a small but captivated audience at the Hillel House Lounge, focusing on women in Judaism.

"The Jewish Arts Festival is a way to celebrate the culture of the Jewish people," said Yehudit Heller, Program Director for Hillel.

"Judaism is not just about holidays and prayer, it's [about] life," she said.

Newman, who lives and writes in Northampton, has received many writing awards including the Massachusetts Artist Fellowship Award in Poetry. Among her works are "Just Looking For My Shoes," "A Letter to Harvey Milk," and several children's books that deal with gay parent families, including "Gloria Goes to Gay Pride."

Ever since she was a little girl, Newman has been writing. For Newman, writing was often a way of expressing loneliness or a feeling of "being different."

These sentiments were clearly expressed as she read her closely biographical short story entitled, "The Gift." The story traces the confused and often lonely childhood of a young Jewish girl, Rachel, through her sexual awakening as a lesbian woman.

Newman's details of young Rachel's defiance of Jewish tradition during Passover where she sneaks a bologna sandwich, to her obsession with straightening her frizzy hair as an adolescent brought a personal feeling to the work.

Being a lesbian in the Jewish community has sometimes been difficult, Newman said, but, "both my identities as a Jew and a lesbian are very vital to me [and] I wouldn't give up either one. "My biggest challenge is to live my life in the most honest way possible embracing all my identities."

Newman, whose writings include three children's books, said self discovery has made her writing stronger. Writing for children is different from adult literature because you must think about your audience, Newman said. Because there are so few words, messages are communicated through the story and illustrations, she added.

Newman frequently presents readings at colleges, both locally and nationwide.

Currently, Newman is teaching a writing workshop for women entitled Write From The Heart, in Northampton.

The Jewish Arts Festival brings poets, artists, comedians, and authors in an effort to express pride and creativity in the Jewish culture and to share it with not only Jewish students, but the entire campus, Heller said.

Arkin decries 'accountants' war' in Gulf

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Celebrating the Persian Gulf War by hailing the "precision" bombing of Iraq last year fails to consider the "human quotient" of modern warfare, said a Greenpeace researcher yesterday night.

"At some point, war becomes less like combat and more like execution," said William Arkin, director of Military Research for Greenpeace International, on the 43-day Gulf war in which 400 members of the Allied forces and over 200,000 Iraqis were killed.

The first lecture in a series sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies, Arkin spoke to about 50 people in Thompson Hall examining the reasoning and results behind the largest mobilization of troops since World War I.

Arkin said the highly-lauded Stealth technology and "smart" bombs didn't even produce the most damage — 62 B-52 bombers dropped one-third of all the ordinance used in the war.

Nevertheless, Arkin said, such "precision" weaponry did kill thousands of Iraqi soldiers and civilians.

"The precision and efficiency with which [the Iraqi infrastructure] was destroyed ripped away the foundations of the Iraqi society."

He said 28 electrical power stations were destroyed in just one or two days. "On Jan. 17 and 18, we were able to essentially flip the switch on Iraqi electricity."

But the "secret of the war," Arkin explained, was the use of "accountants" to tally a score and declare victory.

The entire country of Iraq was photographed, he said, and 7,000 photo interpreters poured over thousands of feet of film to find proper targets and "aim points."

According to Arkin, 800 targets were selected which were comprised of 6,200 exact aim points. We had won the war when all targets had been destroyed, he said.

"It is a perfect war for accountants," Arkin said.

Arkin felt the American news coverage of the Gulf War served to dehumanize the destruction and turn the reality of war into mere abstractions.

"Night after night, we had an orgy of watching those [expletive] battle tapes convincing ourselves that we were doing well," Arkin said. "We all saw this mini-series on TV."

Arkin said he's worried about the advancing military technology which serves to insulate citizens from the truth behind combat.

"If we build airplanes that are fancier and fancier. . .then we are making the abstractions of war that much greater," Arkin said.

$1,000 in damage done to vehicle

Author slams Thomas hearings

Law professor discusses issues of race and gender

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

The author of a highly acclaimed book on race and rights said Monday night before a standing room only audience that the Clarence Thomas hearings epitomize the disrespect accorded a sexual harassment charge filed by a woman.

Patricia J. Williams, author of the highly acclaimed book Alchemy of Race and Rights: Diary of a Law Professor, is on leave from the University of Wisconsin at Madison where she teaches law and women's studies. She currently teaches at Harvard University and at Columbia Law.

The over 300-person audience peppered Williams at Hampshire College with questions concerning the recent Clarence Thomas case and other relevant issues concerning women.

"I was surprised there was a consensus against Anita Hill, despite her compelling testimony and credibility," Williams, who opposed the Thomas nomination, said.

Williams said the decisions Thomas will make in the future concerning women will be interesting.

"I can hardly wait," she said, adding that she will have her pen in her hand ready and her "fingers on the keyboard."

Williams said she finds it amusing that Thomas' role model was Malcolm X, the Black Muslim leader. Apparently not finding many similarities between the two, she noted how "not outspoken" Thomas is to Malcolm X.

"I just don't get it," she said. She is a firm believer in seeing ourselves in role models, but feels "role models are not enough — all we are left with is players."

She was also struck by the fact that most of the reporters assigned to the senatorial beat during coverage of the trials were men. "The utter absence of women was relentless," said Williams.

Reflecting on a summary of the state of the law which came out after the Thomas hearings Williams said, "Even if the court had believed Hill, they probably wouldn't have had a course of action under any current laws."

Law professor Patricia A. Williams spoke at Hampshire College regarding the aftermath of the Thomas-Hill hearings.

According to a labor relation report released after the hearings, sexual harassment gets transformed to "a contrast between man and woman that is part of normal interaction," Williams said, suggesting that male-female relations and sexual harassment have little changed in the past 20 years. She said sexual harassment continues to be unrecognized and not dealt with.

Williams continued discussion of Thomas and quoted his "love for oppression" because "it brought Black people together," and recalling how he has a Confederate flag hanging up, because it reminds him of home.

She contrasted Thomas' "biggest appeal of standing up and speaking for all Black people," with the idea of him being "seen and not heard."

Searching for Alberteville in rural New Hampshire

Magnificent white-crested mountains spread before me on the television screen. The sky was clear blue and the slopes were covered with fresh snow for the men's downhill race. The newscaster seemed to speak directly to me with a sexy, French accent. His tanned face confirmed the perfect weather and ski conditions.

An arial view of the French Alps scanned over Alberteville, Les Saisies, Val D'Isere . . .Nestled in the vast mountainscape were quaint villages where Olympic fans were shown sunning themselves at outdoor cafes. Later on they were seen celebrating all night Piccard's silver medal victory.

Jen Naumes

I could taste the freshness of the mountain air as my mind wrestled with the books and papers scattered on my desk. The Olympic ski team has got it easy, I thought. The next morning I was inspired to search for an assimilated Alberteville in New Hampshire.

I arrived on the ski slopes unprepared for the -3 degree wind chill factor. Within moments my eyes were watering, coating a film of frozen tears over my face. My ski boots offered me no comfort and my skis, no balance. All I thought was I payed $35 to wake up early and freeze.

I slowly made my way over to the chairlift where I was welcomed by a "No Singles! Please Pair Up!" sign. Immediately I felt self-conscious and isolated. It was too early to be independent. I was rescued by a gallant skier whose moustache was dripping icicles. He pulled up next to me and said "I'm single, are you?"

Soon the chairlift whisked us away and carried us over ice-sheeted slopes. My companion took the opportunity to inform me of his knowledge of the area, naming each mountain peak and valley. I felt trapped and cold. As the time neared to descend, I wished only to ride the lift back down the mountain to the lodge and warm fire.

I was re-inspired by the announcement over the intercom. "Attention skiers! The slalom race will start at 1PM. Please sign up at the ski school desk. Your $1 entrance fee will be donated to the Boys Club." This is my chance I thought. I could hear the American anthem as a number was pinned onto my back.

My confidence dropped at the starting gate. I saw the French Alps before me and a crowd of cheering fans lining the slope. "Trois. . .Deux . . .Un . . ." and I was off. The Austrian ski team was racing beside me, urging me to go faster and faster until I was going 80 mph. I then found myself in a wet, white pile of snow halfway through the course. I felt defeated and the dream vanished as a group of Boys Club boys helped me onto my skis.

So I was not cut out for the Olympics, but neither were the many other skiers on the slopes. The show-offs made themselves airborne even on the flattest and smoothest of trails. The adventurers emerged from the woods in search of the alternative route. The sailers breezed down the mountain. Their expression was usually of fear and surprise as their outstretched arms failed to work like sails. Their enemy was the weaver who made his way slowly from one edge to the other, and of course the ski bunnies.

As I made my last run, I was wet, cold and exhausted and decided to save the skiing experience for the Olympic team.

I am woman - go pamper babies

I am writing in response to Seana Barnhill's Monday editorial in the Collegian. Frankly, I'm worried. Seana, I feel that attitudes like yours create fertile soil for seeds of oppression.

Yes, oppression.

I know this is a word which we hear all the time at UMass. Especially in terms of women. It seems as if there are always some of "those feminists" around to ruin it for the rest of you young "intelligent and feminine girls." Why is this? I think it's too bad that oppression is a word which has been used so much that its strength has been lost. Well, here's a reminder: oppression takes place when a powerful social group forces a less powerful social group to submit to their control. Who has the most power in our society? The young, white heterosexual man.

Why do I feel that people like yourself create the perfect environment in which oppression can flourish? By allowing yourself to be the kind of "girl" men want you to be. "Feminine, pampered. . ." and minimized.

"I could care less if someone referred to me as a girl." That's odd. Perhaps you don't recognize what this implies. A "girl" is someone who needs to be told how to do things, who needs guidance in her life. She's shy, small and cute. A "girl," according to Webster, is "a female servant." If I were a columnist in a major college newspaper, I sure wouldn't want to be called a girl! A girl has yet to learn things. A girl is at the mercy of those in authority. A woman is someone who knows. She is smart, mature and in control or her life. A woman is oppressed, but she is smart enough to fight it.

I suppose by your definition femininity is apathy towards the dehumanization of women. The fact that construction workers humiliate women as they walk by (or as we have read, fraternity brothers), that men view women as nothing more than objects and "chauvinism" is living well — these facts should all be ignored, right? Can you ignore that you make 65 cents to every White male dollar?

Don't tell me that women aren't dehumanized in our society. Even you, Seana, told us that you used to think that the pictures of half-naked women hung in dorm rooms were awful. What happened to change your mind? Did you just get used to and accept the fact that pictures of people were put up along side pictures of cool looking objects, such as cars? Did this repeated exposure to sexism and objectification numb your ability to see that it is wrong for women to be seen as objects and toys?

Wendy Johnson
Northampton

Leave a message after the tone

It sits in the corner by the phone, red eye glaring from across the room. I didn't want it, but now it's there looking at me, a reminder of social pressure.

Yes, I finally succumbed and got an answering machine. Having lived without a phone for a year, owning one at all seemed like a step up. I hadn't even considered buying an answering machine. Society immediately alerted me to my oversight.

"You don't have an answering machine!"

"You're never in! I've been trying to reach you for days!"

Kimberly Ladone

"When are you getting a machine? You're impossible to get a hold of."

When I first arrived in Edinburgh, Scotland, I asked for the phone to call home. "Phone?" my new flatmates queried, "Oh, we don't have a phone. No need for it, really. You can manage without one." Manage without one? Inconceivable. I come from a family with four people and five phones.

I wouldn't accept not having a phone. I would pay and get one installed. Several trips to British Telecom revealed that the phone would cost upwards of $300 plus a hefty monthly service charge and that the wait for installation exceeded a month. Apparently, I would indeed have to "manage without one."

At first, everything frustrated me. Most of my friends didn't have phones either. To make plans, I'd trek across town (usually in the rain) to Imke's house, only to find her out, at which point I'd leave a note. Sometimes this would go on for days before we actually saw each other.

Gradually, though, I adapted. Since students often met in pubs to chat instead of calling each other on the phone, I saw my friends more often. I became friendly with the travel agent, the hairdresser, and other people I'd normally call but now had to go see. Going everywhere on foot, I made the city my own and frequently passed people I knew on the street. I became an avid letter-writer. Best of all, no bill arrived at the end of the month.

When I needed to call my parents in the U.S., I'd first try the phone in the university laundry room — one pay phone for four buildings of students. More often than not, it didn't work, because the change box filled rapidly and days passed before someone from the phone company arrived to empty it. So I'd go across the street to The Green Line, sit on the barstool, and phone America, much to the delight of the men nursing pints at the bar.

I managed. When I got back to the U.S. and heard the phone ring, I jumped. It was for me — my first call in a year. And those who complained about my lack of answering machine haven't realized I've gotten one. The red light hasn't blinked yet.

Collegian cartoon's portrayal of Malcom X Center closing inaccurate

Thursday, Feb. 6, there was a cartoon on the editorial page featuring an administrator and a picture of Southwest. The administrator is saying, "We are not racist! The Malcolm X Center was closed due to fighting. . ." Next to the administrator is a picture of Southwest exploding.

My interpretation of this cartoon is that the Malcolm X Center was closed due to racially motivated violence that is occuring in Southwest and the administration is denying the problem.

There is racism in Southwest. I live in Southwest and see and hear it all the time. It's mostly White on Black, but also Black on White. There is no way to ignore this or deny it.

The scary part is that the University of Massachusetts is supposed to be composed of an educated cross-section of the country's entire population. People here are being educated to avoid the ignorance of racism.

When I hear a White student call a Black student "nigger", I know that not everyone that attends this school is educated. As I was informed by the Collegian, the violence that led to the closing of the Malcolm X Center was Black on Black, not White on Black (or Black on White) as the cartoon is suggesting.

The actual closing was ordered by a Black administrator, for the Black community, and has no connection to any racially motivated violence in Southwest. I feel that the cartoonist is confusing the issues that plague this school.

The focus of any positive energy towards making the situation at Malcolm X better should be on violence among the Black community, what causes it and how to stop it.

The focus of energy directed towards making this campus better on the whole, from a standpoint of racism, should be directed towards the racially motivated violence among the community here at the University of Massachusetts and how to stop it.

Shrinking budgets eliminating city jobs

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Public works projects put on hold because of tight city budgets are depriving the national economy of as many as 1.5 million jobs, the head of the U.S. Conference of Mayors said Tuesday.

Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn used a telephone book-sized survey to put a new spin on an old request: provide cities with more federal money. Making the latest in a series of trips to Capitol Hill seeking increased aid from Congress, Flynn said an immediate infusion of $8.6 billion to the cities could get these job-producing programs off the ground.

"We have a proposal that will get people back to work immediately," Flynn said. "The projects we present today are not 'make work' projects. They are 'must work' projects. These projects must go forward if we are to pull our country out of recession."

The proposal presented to the media and later to the House Budget Committee takes a new tack: that the cities can give the nation a fast economic boost by commencing these public works projects with federal help.

At the same time, the mayors continue to propose some $30 billion in other forms of federal aid for direct aid to cities, housing and business development, transportation and job training.

In conducting the survey, the Conference of Mayors asked cities if they had any public works projects approved and ready to go but for a lack of money. Of the 305 responses, representing about 20 percent of the nation's cities, three out of four said they had approved projects on hold because they were beyond the local budget.

In all, the cities reported 4,543 projects ranging from road resurfacing to sewage treatment to traffic light installation. The cities estimated that this year alone these projects represented 280,500 jobs. Flynn said the mayors conference estimates that once all the cities respond the job estimate will rise to about 1.5 million.

Court requires tests on DWI equipment

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — The state's highest court has ruled the results of breath tests cannot be used in drunken driving cases if the machines have not been tested periodically.

The Supreme Judicial Court's ruling Tuesday concluded it is the state's responsibility to prove the machines are tested annually as well as occasionally during the year. If the state is unable to prove testing has been done, results will be thrown out.

The justices ruled on six separate cases in which people were charged with drunken driving based on Breathalyzer tests. Those cases now return to Pittsfield District Court for jury trial, said attorney Leonard Cohen.

"Taking the Breathalyzer results out of the case makes it extremely more difficult to convict," Cohen said.

State officials were reviewing the decision and could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

Cohen argued the annual and periodic tests of the breath machines are crucial to ensuring accurate results.

Periodic tests are needed "to make sure the integrity of the machine is maintained during the ensuing year," he said.

"The defendants assert that the Commonwealth must establish the requirements of a periodic testing program and compliance with those requirements before the breathalyzer results may be admitted in evidence," the ruling states. "We agree."

as of now I have no reason to believe there will be a strike."

"I just hope the graduates know what a vigorous effort is being made to get the contract approved, and that they understand our frustration as well," he added.

$2.2 million, expecting to make up the money through a $500,000 open space grant from the state, $500,000 from selling part of the property and $1.2 million from course profits.

Kelley, who said the course has shown "nothing but losses," said he would attempt to "strike a deal" with Hite if he wins the Democratic nomination. The "deal" would mean Kelley would agree to drop out of the race if Hite agreed to file legislation asking the Legislature to forgive the $500,000 open space grant for the course and allowing the Town to sell the property.

Hite, however, said Kelley has the right to file legislation sponsored by the state representative from his district under the Free Petition Clause of the Massachusetts Constitution.

"Larry doesn't have to drop out of the race to get me to file the bill if I win — all he has to do is ask," Hite said. "I'd look forward to running against Larry Kelley."

Kelley said while the Democrats in the race talk about fighting budget cuts and working for higher state appropriations for the University of Massachusetts, they don't have viable plans for accomplishing these goals.

"The Democrats say let's give UMass more money — but where are you going to get that money?" Kelley said. "Ask the Democrats where they would make a cut."

Kelley, who received a degree in exercise science from the University in 1985, said he favored the idea of creating a more favorable climate for businesses in the area by such devices as giving tax credits for small business startups or expansions.

"I'm pro-business, but not in a cold-hearted way," Kelley said. "When I say business, I'm not talking about Exxon or IBM — I'm talking about places like [Amherst restaurants] Seasons and Twisters, places that hire people from the area."

Kelley also said he favors "toning down" some of the regulations on businesses to lower costs for small business owners and to expand the number of businesses in the area. He said this would create a larger tax base, lessening the district's property taxes. currently consists of 85

Kelley said he would try to find ways to operate the University more efficiently, looking for ways to implement "quality control" and make the University more responsive to consumer demand.

"The money that gets wasted at UMass takes away from people who could use it for other means," Kelley said. "I would certainly fight for UMass [as a legislator] — but if there is waste, I will advocate cutting it."

Kelley said he is in favor of Gov. Weld's plan to have the University retain 100 percent of the tuition money it takes in, an issue that has emerged as a source of contention among the four Democratic candidates.

"If you can get tuition retention off the ground, I think it would work," Kelley said, likening the proposal to a small business. "If you give it time, I think it could produce a consistent flow of revenue."

Kelley also said he believes Weld "cares about higher education," noting that the Wall Street Journal recently named him the nation's top governor on fiscal issues.

Plenty of movies to delight your dorm

BY JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Well, it's that time of the week again. . .these new movies appear on channel 7. This week, a lot of movies that we all know will be on tap. (NOTE: I did not say "know and love.") Yes, there are some movies on this time around that one must watch in complete and total disbelief. Why? Because it is incredulous that some of these movies managed to sucker in a producer to put up money. For each of these heinous movies, I will put a little sign to warn you (@@@) to KEEP AWAY AND TURN THE CHANNEL!!! Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, February 12.

Pretty in Pink —Molly Ringwald, Jon Cryer, Andrew McCarthy. Very realistic and credible story about a poor girl and a rich guy in high school who try to overcome the cliques to be together. The music is great. . .writer-producer John Hughes always manages to get low-publicity bands with huge talent. ***

Richard Pryor Live on Sunset Strip — Pryor jokes about sex, sex, more sex, his wife, Africa, more sex, freebasing, sex and sex. It's above average if you like Pryor's style, but only mildly amusing if you don't. 1/2

Housing Flicks

Satisfaction — Justine Bateman, Liam Neeson, Julia Roberts. Sigh. What a shame that Julia had to be in this one. Well, at least it didn't ruin her career. A four-girl and one guy band take it on the road to a summer resort. Too dumb a movie to even dwell on. Duh! No stars. (@@@)

Taking Care of Business — James Belushi, Charles Grodin. Separate, these guys are pretty good actors, but put them together and what have you got? If you said a lousy movie, you're right! Ex-con Belushi finds rich Grodin's wallet/appointment/ address book and assumes his identity. God, the PREMISE isn't even there. Give me a break. No stars. (@@@)

Winter People — Kurt Russell, Kelly McGillis, Lloyd Bridges. Despite the all-star cast, the movie is kind of bizarre, to say the least. Set in the 1930s, the film is about clans and feuds and McGillis having a baby with the wrong father. See if you can make sense of it. *1/2

Aliens — Sigourney Weaver, Michael Biehn, Paul Reiser. This movie is incredible, and much better than the original, though the original was nothing to sneeze at. Weaver is the lone survivor from a ship that has been floating in space for over twenty years, and she must embark on a journey to yet again deal with the evil aliens. Oscar-winning special effects are breathtaking. What a movie! ****

Arachnophobia — Jeff Daniels, Harley Jane Kozak, John Goodman. If you have even the most remote fear of spiders, I wouldn't recommend this film to you. Uck, I hate spiders, but this is my job. Despite the overwhelming urge to scream every five seconds, I enjoyed the movie immensely. It's a grade D premise, but the acting brought it way above par. Goodman is side-splitting comic relief as the exterminator. 1/2

Big Trouble in Little China — Kurt Russell, Kim Cattrall, Dennis Dunn. Eh, this film's kinda cute, kinda dumb, kinda trying to be like Indiana Jones, and kinda failing. Sorry Kurt, the John Wayne swagger and voice doesn't work for you. Good music, though! **

Black Widow — Debra Winger, Theresa Russell, Dennis Hopper. Intriguing story of a woman who seduces, marries and then subsequently murders rich men. "She mates, and she kills." Thus, the title. Russell and Winger are fantastic, but the film is just a tad bit lacking. Photography by Conrad Hall is wonderful. ***

'Have a Heart' benefit coming to NoHo

BY LOU COVE
Collegian Correspondent

Save your pennies boys and girls. Your money can't buy you anything better than a ticket to Sunday's third annual Have a Heart Benefit at Pearl St.

Not only will you get the pleasure of seeing nine bands and nine acoustic acts for $8 ($6 in advance), you'll also get the personal satisfaction of having contributed to one of the most worthwhile causes of this or any year. Eighty percent of the proceeds from the show go to the Housing Discrimination Project, the other twenty to the Homeless Program at the Hampshire Community Action Commission.

Although the line-up for Have a Heart is phenomenal, there is an issue behind the fanfare, and in light of the fact that so many benefits and "band-aid" performances tend to be largely unpolitical events that focus solely on the luminaries and not the causes, the issue of housing discrimination bears mentioning.

The Housing Discrimination Project, based in Holyoke, is the only fair housing "testing" program in Western Massachusetts. When an allegation of discrimination is filed against a landlord or realtor, HDP sends out "testers," perhaps a young African American woman and a white businessman. The two inquire separately about the same apartment and compare results. The findings are often surprising.

Racism can be a subtle thing, and the offenses are not always obvious. It's rare that a landlord will say, flat out, "We don't want your kind here." Far more likely, and far more common for the HDP testers, is this type of scenario: an African American woman returns from a test and says "Things seem fine. They have an apartment that will be ready in March. I had to fill out a credit check and a tenant application." It seems as though this woman is getting fair treatment until the white businessman returns and says: "They have five units available now. They asked me what my price range was."

Fifty percent of the cases brought to the attention of the Housing Discrimination Project are substantiated.

Because the presence of discrimination is so real, and because so few are aware of its ramifications on the quality of life for those discriminated against and its impact on their own quality of life, the Have a Heart benefit was created.

"It's a surprise for the folks in Amherst," says Kathy Fletcher, HDP's outreach adn development coordinator, "to see what's going on ten miles down the road in Holyoke. It's not about the eight dollars for the show — it's about awareness. People don't like to see brutality at their own back door, but it's there."

And brutality may be the only word to describe it.

Housing discrimination can drive families into homelessness, leaving them without the most basic of needs — a roof over their heads.

"Someone made the point that the people we're doing this for won't be at the benefit," says Fletcher, "but they will. We're doing it for people like you and me."

And you. Yes, you who are reading this now. You've made it this far down the page so you must have a bit of heart in there somewhere. Why don't you share it? Sunday promises to be a day of incredibly diverse musical acts including Who's Kiddin' Who, Rockin Dave and the Rent Party, The Ray Mason Band, The Herschler Brothers, the Dayna B. Kurtz Band, Bamidele Dancers and Drummers, One Love and more.

There'll be reggae, funk, folk and fun. It's a chance to dance and a chance to broaden your awareness, which should be ready and rarin' to go by now. The show begins at 4 p.m. and will continue until 1 a.m., enough to satisfy even the most die hard party fanatic and convert even the strongest disbeliever. Be there.

Christine — Keith Gordon, John Stockwell, Alexandre Paul. Bases on the bestselling novel by Stephen King about a '58 Plymouth that has evil powers, and is apparently alive. The book is better, but then again, books always are. Gordon is perfect in the role of Arnie. ***

Close Encounters of the Third Kind — Richard Dreyfuss, Francois Truffaut, Teri Garr. I went to see this movie when it came out in 1977, and since I was only six it went way over my head. But now I can truly see how intelligent this movie is; it's about our first contact as humans with aliens. Powerful beyond belief. ****

Exorcist III: Legion — George C. Scott, Jason Miller. The hype for this movie was so intense, I ran to see it. Then I ran way afterwards, vowing to never believe any more hype. Yecch! This movie is supposed to be horror, but I found it more comic than anything, especially the scene with the old person scurrying along the ceiling at a rabbit's pace. Okay, okay, the scene with those huge scissor-things made me jump, but that's about it. And George C. Scott got so fat, the best supporting actor should have been his belt! Sorry. . .nevermind! And I mean that for the movie as well. No stars.

The Hitcher — C. Thomas Howell, Rutger Hauer, Jennifer Jason Leigh. Goood movie! Hauer is a hitchhiker who brutally murders his rides. Howell manages to escape, but Hauer somehow keeps finding him, no matter where he goes. It's a VERY frustrating movie, but when it's over, you'll call your mom and tell her that you believe her advice to never pick up hitchikers. 1/2

Ironweed — Jack Nicholson, Meryl Streep, Carroll Baker. Based on William Kennedy's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel about an alcoholic man who is haunted by his past and his companion who is also an alcoholic. Streep and Nicholson are stupendous, but the movie is drawn-out and you can tell they were shooting for Oscars. **

Loose Cannons — Gene Hackman, Dan Aykroyd, Dom DeLuise. Somebody here is trying to make a buck, and not worrying about the type of role he is undertaking. Sad. It's a pointless, offensive movie about two D.C. cops. Tsk, tsk, Gene, Dan and Dom. Shoulda held out for a better movie. No stars.

Misery — James Caan, Kathy Bates. Thank God! I thought a good movie would never come! Oscar-winning Bates (Annie Wilkes) is the "number one fan" of novelist Paul Sheldon (Caan), and keeps him prisoner in her home as she "nurses" him back to health after a near-death car accident. You'll make that saarrccch noise when Bates "hobbles" Caan. Ouch! ****

Mr. Mom — Michael Keaton, Teri Garr, Martin Mull. Keaton is laid off from his job, so Garr goes to work in an advertising firm. She quickly climbs the corporate ladder while Keaton is washing dishes and changing diapers. Yes, yes, it's a typical plot and we've all seen it before, but Keaton is just so cute, especially in the Woobie scene. ***

The Naked Gun 2 1/2 — Leslie Nielsen, Priscilla Presley. It's not as good as the first one, but perhaps that's only because we always expect so much more. Still hilarious in parts, it's worth watching. It's just not as consistently funny as the original. Don't miss the State lobster dinner, though. 1/2

Handmaid's Tale movie on the way

by DONNA GILMAN
Collegian Correspondent

In The Handmaid's Tale, Margaret Atwood writes, "There is more than one type of freedom. Freedom to and freedom from. Don't underrate it." In the Republic of Gilead, where our heroine lives, women are able to walk the streets without a thought to their safety, they are free from the whistles of jeering men, and rape has been eliminated.

Such a scenario sounds too good to be true, and it is. This novel, The Handmaid's Tale, is Margaret Atwood's horrifying view of a future in which women are arranged by their function in society and no longer have the right to vote, to read or to choose their sexual partners. In effect, this novel is a woman's worst nightmare.

The story chronicles the life of a woman named Offred. Her name signifies that she is the property of Fred, one of the powerful Commanders in the society. In Gilead, a person's worth is measured by the job they do, which in turn determines their place in society. Offred is a handmaid, which means that she is a bearer of life.

Due to the poisoning of the environment, society's

Third World Affairs

Hypocrisy, Democracy and the Power of Faith

Recent events in Algeria can be seen as a vital signpost for the future of the Middle East, American imperial control of the region, and even the way in which the West constructs its own increasingly hollow and vapid rhetoric of "democracy."

The stunning success of the Islamic-based political movement in Algeria announces, if anyone had any remaining doubts, that Islam has re-emerged as the dominant political force in the Arab World. In a region dominated by pathetic, discredited, and thinly veiled Western puppet regimes, the future of government clearly has a Muslim face. Indeed, the modern political landscape of the Arab Nation has seldom been more unified with, in almost all states, reigning puppets of various stripes being confronted by a unified Islamic political opposition movement. Clearly this force is a deadly danger to the hands that pull the puppets strings.

The future of the Middle East would seem to hold forth nothing less than a violent confrontation between the forces of Islamic nationalism and Western imperialism. No one is more deluded than those who believe that these movements can be co-opted like the pseudo-Islamic "Wahabi" state of "Saudi Arabia." These movements are revolutionary and nationalistic, even though they are more concerned with domestic rather than international affairs. . .for now. The apoplectic reaction of the West and its servile Arab employees to the election in Algeria signals an understanding of this. The entire corrupt status quo is under long overdue threat.

Just as in the last time an Islamic society rose up en masse against a corrupt Western-controlled dictatorship, in Iran, events in Algeria took almost everyone in the West, except the banks, by surprise. Particularly shocking was the extent of the victory of the Muslim party, the Islamic Salvation Front (FIS), taking 188 seats as opposed to 26 for the runners up, and 15 for the FLN. This in spite of blatant gerrymandering and electoral fraud by the ruling FLN, and the jailing of FIS leaders on trumped-up treason charges.

Further, the army-controlled FLN had rigged the constitution, leaving almost all power in the hands of the FLN president Chadli Benjedid. The election results, however, lay the ground for an almost certain acquisition of a two-thirds majority for the FIS, allowing them to amend the rigged constitution. Before this could happen, the army launched the celebrated coup, smashed the nascent democracy, and blocked the mandate of the Algerian people.

Hysterical alarm registered in the West over the election. Amazing and bizzare rationalizations were constructed to explain away the will of the Algerians. It was a "protest vote," we were assured, a "no vote," as Time put it. Algerians, we were told, were simply fed up with corruption, not turning towards their Muslim identity. They were, it was repeatedly suggested, horrified by their own vote, and relieved at the coup that suppressed it. Never have we been treated to such unconvincing rubbish.

Delighted with the coup, and horrified by the results of Arab democracy, American journalists and thinkers began to construct rationales for the suppression of "undemocratic democracy." "It isn't enough to hold elections and achieve popular government," they said, more is required than "free elections and free prices." Democracy is rather "civil culture," "a strong legal tradition," "a way of life and a set of institutions and traditions," and "a thing of the mind and the spirit." The message of these fairly unanimous and pervasive reconsiderations is clear and unsubtle: democracy is only respectable when it takes place in the context of a particular way of life — the European cultural tradition. Otherwise, it doesn't count and is not to be respected. Only Europeans can really be democratic.

The unspoken subtext to this duplicitous discourse was the hidden fact that the need for the coup was somehow anticipated by Western banks, and that the army and elite of Algeria were literally blackmailed into smashing Algerian democracy.

As usual, the debt trap, that old imperial Trojan horse, was used to enforce neo-colonial rule. Algeria, a nation of some 25 million people, has an appalling estimated combined foreign debt of $26 billion, placing it squarely in the debt crisis camp. Algeria has been given new loans (the addict needed a fix) and generous restructuring terms by its Western creditors. However, they all insisted in the inclusion of "material adverse change" clauses, which in effect and intention meant that if the Muslims were elected, the contracts were canceled on that basis alone. Even if the rulers of Algeria didn't need it, they were pushed into the coup by the Western bankers who control their finances.

Western approval for the coup was signaled by the fact that the two days after their bidding had been done, Western interests reopened negotiations with the Algerian state oil company.

As far as "good government" is concerned, of course, it is taken for granted here that the United States is the model. Nonetheless, Algerians and other non-European peoples could be forgiven for viewing the American political process with some skepticism, since it is characterized by such fine qualities as an atomized and Darwinian social structure, low voter particpation, control by a tiny monied elite, professional lobbyists and agents of influence, and obsession with the unsavory antics of plasticine politicians and hairspray prostitutes. Others may understandably wish to seek a better way.

Obviously, the idea of functional democracy (i.e. popular government) in the Arab world is the greatest nightmare for the imperial West. Its colonial control over the strategic and oil-rich region is based on the denial of the interests of the great mass of Arab people. After all, the whole point is to "kick their ass and take their gas," as the charming Gulf War slogan had it. Plunder is the mission, and corrupt local lackeys the tool.

The Algerian elections, and the nature of oppostion in the rest of the Arab World, suggest that the Arab people have a very different vision. In the current Arab political climate, Islamic government may not mean "democracy," but democracy means Islamic government. And Islamic government means turning away from the imposed corruption of alien traditions seen in "Saudi" monarchy, Eygptian oligarchy, Syrian socialism, and the numerous other disguises of neo-colonial servitude. Even in occupied Palestine, all evidence indicates that on the West Bank and Gaza, the revolutionary, but secular, PLO has been steadily loosing ground to the hugely popular Islamic Hammas party which has increased its following by denouncing the outrageous "peace conference" fraud.

Quite clearly, Islam as a political movement is the one force capable of uniting the Arab people in opposition to foreign domination and the rule of corrupt neo-colonial tyrants. Herein lies its tremendous popularity for the Arabs, as evinced by the election results, and the sheer terror it holds for many in the West. In the post-cold war era, political Islam may replace "communism" as the premier American bugaboo, since obviously it threatens U.S. control of Arab oil resources, the central feature of the New World Order. Already there is talk of an Islamic "domino effect," with success in Algeria "threatening" Tunisia, Morocco, Jordan, Egypt and ultimately the whole region.

Arabs are returning to Islam because of the abject failure of the Western-oriented political structures that they have been living under since they gained nominal independence. All these have achieved is corruption and dependence, leaving the Arab World the most colonized area on earth. Hence, it is logical and appropriate that peoples should seek their political future in the recapturing of their own identity and traditions.

The decolonization of the mind is a fundamental prerequisite for true independence. The return to Islam suggests at the height of colonial control of the Arab world, the process of mental and spiritual decolonization has finally begun.

The Indian community: mentality in action

The recent past has witnessed dramatic shifts in global power relationships, with disastrous consequences for the nations in the South who now face the unbridled imperial might of the North.

Take Iraq for a start — crippled, devastated, and driven back into the pre-industrial age in a ruthless battle to retain control over the primary oil reserves of the world.

Or the Algerian popular vote, turning its back on essentially Western value systems, crushed by a military coup. And the brutal Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, ultimately sustained, ironically, by the "Peace Talks."

Moving on to India, the collapse of the Soviet Union and the oil crisis precipitated by the Gulf War have now left the Indian economy at the mercy of the World Bank-IMF consortium.

It is inevitable that the new generation of Indians will be cereal-eating, Pepsi-drinking, motorcycle-driving, CNN-watching colonized individuals whose mindset will be governed by the stupidest kind of Americanization.

To take an example, the Indian government, by recognizing and normalizing relations with the state of Israel, has demonstrated the lowliest disdain for the Palestinian struggle.

AP photo

SHOT IN MARKET — People look at the body of a man after he was shot by police for allegedly stealing a box of garlic. Haiti's armed forces have been accused by opposition and international human rights organizations of violating human rights.

The domestic front witnessed the undeniable growth of Hindu religious fascism (with the Hindu flag over predominantly Muslim Kashmir being raised by a Hindu physicist) and the increased presence of the Indian Army in Kashmir and Punjab.

South India, whose participation in the Indian national struggle is so minimal, witnessed harsh disputes over allocation of water reserves that displaced 15,000 impoverished peasants from their native states, many of whom lost their lives. Typically, when a nation undergoes turmoil, some of this suffering is reflected in anguish amongst its expatriates. Turbulent developments in China, South Africa, Cuba, and Haiti have elicited concerned responses amongst their communities here.

However, against the backdrop of gloom back in India, the lack of awareness or response among the Indian community, the largest Third World community on campus, is rather chilling.

It is frustrating that Indians who have come here in search of gold (the Columbus syndrome) have gone so numb that they do not realize that one day not just their own country, but their local communities will be in terrible jeopardy.

Even more frustratingly, they blissfully ignore all these events (or trust U.S. propaganda) and relish trashy Hindi movies and cricket in the appropriately-named ghettos of Presidential and Colonial Apartments. What could be more fascistic than the behavior of those for whom individualism, personal greed and selective amnesia is the preferred path to salvation?

The issues that currently plague them are employment in the U.S. and visa status, not realizing that this government does not give a damn about their grievances. Indeed, why should they?

Another popular reaction of some members of this community is coffee-table radicalism. Some have delved through tomes of literature, and are driven by the belief that they know it all and have easy solutions for India's progress. But, when confronted with the question of their personal commitment to that process, the answer is apt and simple: "I don't know."

For other well-meaning Indians, the Valley actually turns out to be a subtly corrupting environment, and they tend to become so politically correct that they loose the notion of reality.

Thus, the Indian community in the Valley is not just divided on the bases of ethnicity and class, but on belief systems, complete ignorance, chic radicalism, or political correctness. In fact, the simple and straightforward question about their role in struggle and sacrifice is completely ignored or not even posed.

Perhaps one expects too much from the expatriate Indians, just because they have opportunities. Maybe one feels that the extra knowledge and resource adds to a sense of responsibility. This raises an interesting question: how is this community treated at home? Most of them have had a very sheltered upbringing in elite institutions subsidized by the Indian government.

In effect, Indian taxpayers footed the bill and peasants toiled in the fields, in the hope that these people would then provide them with a good and healthy life. This hope of a reward for hard work and suffering has been totally disrespected. It is axiomatic that people rarely value things they get cheaply.

Look, for instance, at the performances presented at annual celebrations where every conceivable myth about India is perpetuated, but no mention is made of present day Indian struggles. Everything is nicely packaged and delivered with inhuman and self-congratulatory emotion. Criticism of the performance was responded to by personal slander and egotistical attitudes. Everybody waited — in vain — to see some new elements of thinking emerge from the community.

Even if we believe that people must choose where to live, this attitude has also shown abysmal results. Indian expatriates have not shown any inclination to understand and join other minorities in their struggle for equal rights. But when it comes to joining hands with the Left, they are often prompt. What can one say but to come to terms with a deep emotional crisis faced by Indians: in America they glorify India and in India they glorify America.

To see the devastation in India and the greedy behavior of the Indian community in America reminds us of a Sanskrit verse: For the family sacrifice the individual, for the community the family, for the country the community and for the Soul the whole World.

People have to make a choice, and the hope is that people will make choices rapidly because all we know is that time is running out in our subcontinent under the NEW WORLD ORDER.

Mojo Nixon to play at the Iron Horse

Show is a benefit for rock the vote

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Staff

"Rock 'n' roll is about sex and anarchy and pandemonium and sweating and drooling and skipping school...not all this whining power-ballad bullshit."
—Mojo Nixon

Okay, maybe these aren't the words you'd expect to hear from the man who's performing a benefit for Rock The Vote tonight, but, then again, the right to be a nonconformist is what democracy is all about. Mojo Nixon has never been one to play by the rules, which is a major reason why he has been able to charm and enlighten audiences from sea to shining sea.

Nixon is the misunderstood genius behind such classics as "Debbie Gibson is Having My Two—Headed Love Child", "Elvis Is Everywhere", and, of course, "Don Henley Must Die". His music is a self-described crossbeat of "Howlin' Wolf, the Velvet Underground, Dr. Hunter S. Thompson, Five Blind Boys from Alabama, and the prison work songs of my father."

With such an eclectic fusion of influences, the result is, on its worst day, interesting. Given the proper mood, Nixon will stimulate the emotions while tickling the funnybone as effectively as any rock 'n' roller can.

Ever since his explosion onto the national music scene a few years ago, critics have raved about the "Bo—daaay—shus" rocker but, most certainly, his greatest fan has been no other than himself.

"Raw, sexual, animalistic, stream of unconsciousness, blasting, supercharged, original rock 'n' roll", says Nixon, who couldn't have done a better job of describing his style, even if he had a dictionary handy.

"Songs that possess your soul are missing from rock 'n' roll today, and I'm here to rectify that situation."

"I want some 15 year-old to hear this and run away from home. I want some 25-year-old to hear this and drop out of law school. I want a 35-year-old to hear this and get in a car and goooo, baby," says Nixon.

And, just remember, as the legendary Dead Milkmen (and Greg Sukiennik) once said, "If you ain't got Mojo Nixon, then your store could use some fixin'!!!"

Mojo Nixon will perform tonight at 7 p.m. at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Tickets are $11 in advance, and the show will benefit Rock The Vote. Everyone at the Arts and Living page is in a state of utter disbelief that the show has not yet sold out, but there's no guaranteeing that it will last. Hop on the bus and pick them up in person upstairs at Thorne's Marketplace. It's definitely worth the effort, and, besides, you could buy me a drink once you get there.

Handmaid's Tale

growth has come to a stand-still. Most men and women can no longer conceive. The handmaids are women who, because they still may be able to conceive, are awarded to the powerful men in society in an attempt to produce children for the Commanders and their wives. Offred describes herself as "a womb with legs." A bizarre monthly mating ritual involving the Commander, his wife, and the handmaid is required by the state.

Offred explains, "Probably he thought about other things the whole time he was with me; with us, for of course, Serean Joy was there on those evenings also. He might have been thinking about what he did during the day, or about playing golf, or about what he'd had for dinner. The sexual act, although he performed it in a perfunctory way, must have been largely unconscious, for him, like scratching himself." This is probably not the average person's idea of procreation, but in the republic of Gilead, reproduction is serious business.

Despised by the wives, and gawked at by tourists, handmaids are supposed to be respected for the service they provide. Branded on the ankle, Offred is a national resource whose only break from the ordinary is the monthly ceremony or the excitement of a birth.

But Offred can remember a better time in the not too-distant past, when she lived with and loved her husband and daughter, when she had money, a job and access to an education. Offred's perpetual battle to regain her rights and the life she used to lead leaves the reader virtually breathless.

Although the future sounds dismal, Atwood manages never to resort to despair. Never preachy or contrite, this novel serves as a vehicle for Atwood's political and moral beliefs, and examines life after the extreme right has had its way. Through Offred's plight, the reader lives Atwood's fears for the future. This book will hit home with many Americans who take for granted the freedom's Offred lost. Read it while it's still legal.

Margaret Atwood was born in Ottawa. The Handmaid's Tale was begun in West Berlin and was finished in Alabama. Author of more than twenty books, Atwood is best known for her novels, The Edible Woman, Surfacing, Lady Oracle, Life Before Man, and Bodily Harm. Her work has been published in twenty countries.

It was Don King, who was convicted in the sixties of manslaughter for kicking a man to death, who brought out the worst in Tyson. By no means am I blaming King for Tyson's own ignorance, but the Tyson ride was a lot smoother with Cayton driving.

Now, King and his army of lawyers will play the appeals process to its death, and should Tyson be freed (which is very, very unlikely) we will have to hear King bellow, "Only in America," one more time.

Tyson excited the crowd in the ring by knocking people out, and intrigued them outside of it with his unpredictable behavior. But now this unpredictable behavior has landed Tyson in jail. I'm sure Tyson will find his prison squared circle a lot more confining than the boxing ring. He is now truly "Iron" Mike Tyson.

The heavyweight division will surely miss the spark which Tyson provided inside the ring. Champion Evander Holyfield can now choose from many a contender.

Maybe I should have used the word pretender in place of contender. With Larry Holmes actually considered a contender due to his victory over Ray Mercer, I'm really thinking about adding 50 pounds and invading the heavyweight division myself. The two best heavyweights out there right now are Riddick Bowe and Michael Moorer. One of them will be the next heavyweight champion.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Corporate types may be difficult to pin down today. Work on your own as much as possible. Home life offers a peaceful respite from your busy work schedule tonight. Turn in early.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A quick quip could cause trouble. Be careful not say anything that could be used against you later on. Returning telephone calls promptly prevents hurt feelings.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ingenuity helps you handle any job snags that arise today. Take your time when considering a new financial commitment. Impulsive decisions will backfire.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pay keen attention to all information your senses gather today. You will learn a lot! An exacting task will require all of your concentration. Be quiet about your career plans for now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A financial talk or shopping trip will benefit you. You are a magnet for money now and will make wise choices. A night of discovery lies ahead. Intellectual endeavors enjoy favorable influences.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Curb your tongue and cool your temper. Lashing out at someone who has disappointed you will create an even deeper. Try your hand at creative writing or plunge into the arts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not let tedious tasks put you in an irritable mood. You will get much further than you think. Listen to the voice of experience when it comes to money matters.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Good timing is the key to success. Join forces with someone who is eager to pursue a moneymaking project. Do not play tricks on your loved ones. Keep any promises you make.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Work hard to maintain your work schedule, despite frequent distractions. Steady progress is essential from success. Spend some time alone later today, but do not become anti-social.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be asked to mediate a feud today. Maintain your objectivity. Recycling project will let you make new business profits without incurring additional expense.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may feel at odds with someone who insists he has a cross to bear. Do not let a philosophical argument turn personal. Romance resembles a roller coaster now. Hold on tight to your mate!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stop twiddling your thumbs. Your creative genius can turn a dream into reality. Get better organized at work. Family members are looking to you for leadership.

Iron Mike to be behind iron bars?

Tyson's conviction: just another chapter in storied life

Feb. 10, 1990: "Iron" Mike Tyson is knocked out by Buster Douglas in 10 rounds and loses the heavyweight championship of the world.

Feb. 10, 1992: "Iron" Mike Tyson is convicted of rape and now faces sentencing on Mar. 6. Tyson may be going to jail.

I'm sure that these two dates will be the most memorable when Mike Tyson looks back on his life in retrospect. Ironically, both days of reckoning occurred on the same date. I've always followed Mike Tyson's story with great interest, and now it appears the story could be coming to an end.

Heavyweight boxing in the mid-80s was floundering; Larry Holmes was an excellent but boring champion, and every other heavyweight was either fat (see Tony Tubbs or Greg Page), one-dimensional (see Bonecrusher Smith or Frank Bruno) or both.

It was here where young Mike Tyson came along and cleaned up the division. Tyson, at 5 feet, 11 inches and 218 pounds, was knocking out heavyweights at an amazing clip. At the ripe age of 20, Tyson knocked out Trevor Berbick to become the youngest heavyweight champion ever.

Boxing aficionados were now crediting Tyson's trainer Cus D'Amato, and managers Jim Jacobs and Bill Cayton with saving Tyson from the streets of New York and turning him into the best fighter in the world.

Despite the death of D'Amato, Tyson was still a fabulous boxer. He moved in behind a solid jab, always bobbing his head, and throwing vicious punches aimed anywhere on his opponent's anatomy. New trainer and fellow D'Amato disciple Kevin Rooney made sure that Tyson was ready for every fight.

When Jim Jacobs died, so too did the relationship between Tyson, Rooney, and Cayton. Along came Don King, the eccentric boxing promoter, and he turned Tyson against the people who took him to the top.

Jeff Crofts

Romance soon set in for Tyson, as he married actress Robin Givens. This short-lived romance was shaky at best, with Tyson being accused of abusing Givens, and Givens being accused of gold-digging. The marriage ended in divorce with Givens getting a healthy settlement.

Inside the ring, Tyson was still able to take care of business, but his considerable ring talents were undeniably slipping. Tyson was no longer a great boxer, he was a brawler who used only intimidation and power to take care of his opponents.

These qualities were enough until Tyson ran into James "Buster" Douglas. Douglas managed to issue Tyson a beating and boxing lesson while taking his heavyweight crown.

King and Tyson were able to make an embarrassment of themselves when they disputed Douglas' victory. After their weak protest, they finally admitted Douglas was the better man.

Now Tyson would have to climb back to the top of the heavyweight mountain. Inside the ring, Tyson was able to do his business with victories over Henry Tillman, Alex Stewart, and Donovan "Razor" Ruddock (twice). It was his actions outside the ring which cost him his shot at regaining the heavyweight crown.

Tyson was accused by an 18-year old Miss Black America contestant of rape. Eventually Tyson was indicted on the charge, and his title shot against champ Evander Holyfield dissapeared.

On Jan. 27, Tyson started what clearly would be the fight of his life. After two weeks of testimony, the case went to the jury. The jury needed only 9 hours of deliberation to come up with a verdict; Mike Tyson was guilty of rape! Who would've guessed that Larry Holmes would be correct when he said in 1988, "Tyson will end up dead or in jail within 5 years."

It was in the courtroom where Tyson and his $5,000-a-day lawyer William Fuller were played with like Silly Putty by prosecuting attorney Greg Garrison. Looking back on Tyson's career, there was a time when things looked very good for him. When Tyson was with D'Amato, Jacobs and Cayton, he appeared to be a pleasant, smart, young man who was sorry for his past deeds.

• I've begun the spring tour on the road to the Pocket Billiards Hall of Fame. My breaks have been solid, my leaves exquisite and I've yet to scratch on the eight ball. The biggest victory thus far came against Tiparillo, a real bozo who let the cigar hang from his mouth on every shot.

• Here's the much anticipated horseback riding update: I rode Teddy on Monday, a wily veteran of track and arena who turns 25 this year. He knew I was a rookie. After the informal introductions, Teddy thought it would be funny to show me his teeth. He needs to brush.

Teddy adjusted to me quickly after I bribed him with carrots and caviar and along with Leigh-Ann, has become a front runner for Horse of the Year honors.

• I'll admit the Winter Olympics aren't as compelling as the Summer Games, but wouldn't it be nice to witness "Miracle on Ice, Part II?"

• We can hardly wait to see the Temple Towels finally get mopped up by Coach Cal's boys.

• Speaking of the Coach, well-placed sources have confirmed rumors that Calipari is hiding his best neckties for the A-10 and NCAA tournaments. Listen Cal, Brett "You're Still the One for Us" Morris and myself have been busting our butts all season trying to outdo each other with our neckwear and if you think you're going to sneak in under the wire with some Pierre Cardin deal, you're mistaken. The issue's under advisement by the Official Necktie Awards Committee (ONAC).

Scott's shots

Surprisingly, Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff made the only intelligent comment of the whole Jim Reid/football fiasco when he said, "At the University, nobody makes a decision."

Well, Dave-O, that's all about to change, because I'm making the decisions now. First on the list we'll cut your $96,000 salary down to a more workable size. Next we move to the other half of the "Dynamic Duo," Athletic Director Frank McInerney, where we have decided to reduce his princely annual take of $79,000.

After all The Bisher King did say, ". . .you have to cut someplace and somebody has to make a decision of where it has to be cut." Done deal, Bish-a-la.

David Scott

• Maybe it's my imagination but I'd swear McInerney looks like an inflated version of Governor Bill Weld. Separated at birth?

• I watched the post-fight, errrr post-trial news conferences from the Mike Tyson court circus and one thing struck me immediately. Isn't there a conflict of interest with this "Jury Foreman" guy? He's obviously related to George Foreman and who could benefit more from Tyson being incarcerated?

• Forty-two percent of readers surveyed said they always read the Collegian sports page. Someone better tell the other 58 percent what they're missing.

• Rosie Ruzicka elicited one of the greatest traditions in all of sports when he notched his hat-trick plus one on Sunday. Seeing all the hats sail to the Garden ice is quite a sight.

• Mark Nov. 7 on your calendar if Jim Reid accepts the job at Richmond. That's the day UMass visits the Spiders and rest assured if Coach Reid's there, he'll have his linebackers doing some heavy duty hitting. Perhaps McInerney and Bischoff could throw on the pads for the offense. Can you say "tackling dummies?"

• Here's the ultimate plan for NBA Commissioner David Stern: Magic Johnson officially retires with the Lakers, decides to make a comeback in March, signs with the Celtics (Red's always thinking) and Larry Bird and the Magic Man lead the Men in Green to banner 17.

He's the top candidate for assistant coaching job

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

University of Richmond football coach Jim Marshall reiterated yesterday that Jim Reid, the head coach at the University of Massachusetts for the past six years, is the front runner for an assistant coaching position.

"Without a doubt, he is the top candidate," Marshall said. "We have not offered him a job yet, but I would imagine that within the next few days, we will."

Reid told the Collegian late Monday night he will resign as head coach at UMass tomorrow, when he returns from Richmond. He verbally resigned Jan. 23 after learning the football budget was being cut $100,000.

The question now becomes, does Reid want the job at Richmond?

"Everything is going great down here," Reid said yesterday from Richmond. "I'm getting ready to go draw X's and O's on the chalkboard. Everybody has been really nice."

Reid spoke enthusiastically about Richmond as a school, pointing out the relatively inexpensive cost ($15,000 per year) to attend a private institution.

"Richmond is one of the top 10 endowed schools in the nation," Reid said. "They get a lot of money from corporations, so they can maintain a high budget.

"I met the President [Richard Morrill], he's from Hingham, Mass. He's a great guy.

"Richmond's got some other guys coming in for interviews," he said. "I think I'll be coming back [for another interview]."

Reid won three Yankee Conference Championships at UMass and compiled a 32-29 record. He was an assistant for the Minutemen the previous 13 years.

Student basketball ticket line may be handled differently

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team prepares to host Temple University on Sunday (4:30 p.m.), so does the Athletic Ticket Office as it may put into effect an alternate plan of handling students waiting for tickets.

The proposed plan, which depends on the time of the formation of lines and the weather, would permit students who decide to arrive at the Cage early to wait inside the Cage beginning at midnight.

Student tickets will still be handed out beginning tomorrow at 7 a.m. in the lobby of Curry Hicks Cage.

Thorr Bjorn, the University's coordinator of tickets and game operations, has expressed concern about students waiting outside the Cage early Thursday morning in inclement weather and has developed the contingency plan only for absolute necessity.

"Students have been talking about waiting in line as early as midnight," Bjorn said yesterday. "The Athletic Department is concerned with the cold weather. There's a possibility of opening the Cage up after midnight [Thursday morning] to accomodate the students."

Bjorn stressed that the doors to the Cage will only be opened before 7 a.m. if the line forms early.

"If it's 10 [degrees] below zero, we can't have them [the students] out there," UMass coach John Calipari said.

Students with valid undergraduate I.D. can pick up one general admission ticket.

All tickets will be handed out based on availability on a first-come, first-serve basis.

The Minutemen have never beaten the Temple Owls in the history of the matchup, losing 21 straight.

Men's track cruises at New England TAC

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

In what proved to be the University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team's final tune-up for next week's Eastern Conference Championship meet, the Minutemen headed to Brown University on Sunday for the New England TAC Invitational.

The meet, which showcased some 20 local colleges and track clubs, came at the midpoint in an almost perfect season for the Minutemen.

UMass enters their championship season with an unblemished 8-0 record.

"I think this meet is good for a couple of reasons," Coach Ken O'Brien said.

"First, it allows both the team and the individual to take some stress off before our championship season, and second, we also saw a higher level of competition that we wouldn't see otherwise."

The meet saw the Minutemen garner eight top five finishes, with the highest finish belonging to John Johnson in the long jump, and the distance medley team, who both placed third.

Other top five finishes for the Minutemen belonged to Nelson Simao in the shot put, Matt Simon in the 3000, Jeffrey White in the high hurdles, Keith Willis in the 5000, and both the 4x400 and the 4x800 relay teams.

"I think we had some positive things to hang our hats on," O'Brien said. "We had a good performance by our distance runners (3 top 7 finishes) and our jumping and sprinting looked a little stronger than usual."

Other bright spots for the Minutemen included the improved running and jumping of both Jerome Bledsoe and John Johnson, as well as the performance of Lionel Benjamin in both the 55 yard dash and the 200.

For some of the Minutemen, Sunday was not a day to hone their skills for next Saturday's Eastern's, but a day to rest and heal some nagging injuries leftover from the previous week's meet.

"We left some of our kids home, so they could heal some of their nagging injuries," O'Brien said. "People like Steve [Brown], Paul [Doyle], and Joe [Kourafas] are conference and New England level competitors, so we held them out more as a precaution than anything."

"We have three or four of the biggest weeks of the season ahead of us, and I think the team is still on an upswing," O'Brien said.

Winter Olympic highlights

ALBERTVILLE, France (AP) — Tuesday's highlights at the Winter Olympics:

MEDALS

Austria was shut out but still leads with seven medals overall. One behind was the Unified Team of former Soviet Republics which won four of the day's nine medals.

FIGURE SKATING

Natalia Mishkutienok and Artur Dmitriev won the eighth straight gold for the former Soviet Union in pairs' competition. It's the longest streak of golds in Olympic history.

ALPINE

Italy's Josef Polig won the men's combined when leader and defending champion Hubert Staolz of Austria was disqualified after missing a gate near the end of his second run in the slalom.

LUGE

American Cammy Myler was in sixth place with a shot at a medal in the first of two days of women's competition.

HOCKEY

The U.S. team raised its record to 2-0, its best start since 1960, with a 2-0 win over Germany as goalie Ray LeBlanc stopped 46 shots.

INJURIES

Two more women downhillers, including Austrian star Sabine Ginther, were hurt in training crashes. Ginther was picked to win the downhill and combined, but will miss the rest of the season with a back injury.

TODAY'S HIGHLIGHTS

Medals at stake in four events: women's luge and 1,500-meter speedskating, men's 10-kilometer biathlon and Nordic combined. Top American in action: Speedskater Bonnie Blair.

UM enrollment reaches lowest point in 20 years

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The number of undergraduate students attending the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has reached the lowest point in 20 years, according to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning.

Undergraduate enrollment reached a peak near 20,000 in 1975 and has gradually declined to roughly 17,000 today, primarily due to the economic climate in the state.

"As we've been cut, our public image and our academic reputation have suffered," said Timm Rinehart, director of undergraduate admissions.

Increases in tuition, decreased program offerings, faculty layoffs and negative publicity have all had a negative effect on enrollment levels, he said.

In fact, last year the state cut appropriations to the University by 12.5 percent while tuition and fees rise annually. The last year tuition and fees were not raised was 1965.

And for the third year in a row, Massachusetts had the biggest two-year drop in state support.

Another factor in declining enrollment is the large decrease in the number of high school graduates since the late seventies. "There are fewer kids out there," Rinehart said.

In 1989 and 1990, applications to the University fell by more than a third.

Although the percent of freshman applicants steadily dropped through most of the eighties, acceptance rates have risen sharply in the past three years — it is becoming less competitive to get accepted at UMass.

"With fewer students out there, we have open the doors wider," Rinehart said. "We're taking a wider range of students but also offering more access and opportunity."

As a result of this decline in selectivity, the mean high school percentile, seen as the best measure of college preparation, has dropped below 70 percent — the first time since 1980.

While projections estimate that enrollment will plunge even further, Rinehart hopes his admissions program, armed with a "substantial infusion" of new funding, can sell the merits of this University to potential candidates.

He said out-of-state recruiting efforts have intensified while campus visits, mailings and more attractive financial aid packages have improved.

Nevertheless, he said, UMass is still a good school. "There are lots of satisfied students on campus," Rinehart said. "It's still working."

Chancellor Richard O'Brien has established an "en-

Class of '95 shrinking, school, cost too large

Many freshman are not returning to the University of Massachusetts because it's not only too big, but also too expensive.

A survey of freshman who dropped out of UMass after the fall 1990 semester shows that 32 percent did not return to campus because they "did not like the size of UMass."

In addition, 20 percent indicated not having enough money to attend school as a reason for dropping out while others blamed "inadequate"

O'Brien hints at possible tuition, fee increase

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Richard O'Brien told the Undergraduate Student Senate last night that he sympathized with students' aversion to fee and tuition increases, but urged the senators to view the situation from his perspective.

"We're absolutely against a large increase in tuition and fees," he said. "But I think we'll have to ask for a small one, about a five percent increase."

"I hate to say it, but life is dominated these days by budgets," O'Brien continued. "Should we increase tuition and fees? If not, should we grind down every program in the University to make ends meet? Or should we cut out whole programs or departments or schools?"

O'Brien said the state government has reduced the University budget by one-third over the past three years, while tuition has subsequently increased "about 200 percent.

O'Brien conceded that conditions could worsen if Gov. Weld's 100 percent tuition retention proposal is passed. He said the University now retains 30 percent of student tuition as revenue. The Weld plan would allow the University to keep all tuition and fees, but state funding would be withdrawn by a corresponding amount. Thus, whenever the University sought to generate additional revenue, tuition and fees would likely have to be increased.

Many fear tuition retention will effectively privatize the University, denying access to affordable public education. Noting that enrollment has dropped from 20,000 to 17,000 in the last three years, O'Brien said tuition retention might result in an even more drastic decline.

"As we move into tuition retention in July, that drop of 3,000 is very big bucks," he said. "It's a $9 million question, since the difference between 17,000 and 20,000 students is $9 million. That's $9 million that could be spent adding faculty, or increasing the number of sections in courses, and those good things important to education."

But O'Brien, introduced by Speaker Bob Monaghan as "an honorable man, a man whose heart is definitely with the University," did have some positive thoughts to share. He said that while the University faces considerable fiscal difficulty, there is reason for optimism provided there is teamwork among administrators and students.

"We're all in this together, and this place is here for you," he told 46 student senators. "This place is designed to be the kind of university you want to be at."

O'Brien also stressed that the university has many positive features — among them, its athletic program.

"Firstly, thank God for basketball," he said. "There's a kind of thrill and spirit and enthusiasm there that's hard to generate in even the most interesting courses in English and history."

O'Brien said he believes enrollment hinges strongly on the quality of university athletics.

"We've got a system, for better or worse, in which the quality of the athletic program determines your enrollment," he said. "We've got to maintain excitement in athletics in order to keep our enrollment going. It's crazy, but that's how it works."

Page banking on gov't experience

Norman Page

By JASON GEORGE

Editor's note: This is the fifth in a six-part series profiling the candidates bidding for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Democrat Norman Page of Pelham says he feels his 25 years of experience in local government separate him from his opponents in the race for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Page, 42, is competing with Terry Franklin, Ellen Story and Jon Hite of Amherst for the Democratic nomination on Feb. 18 in the race to fill the Amherst-Pelham seat vacated by State Senator Stanley Rosenberg late last September. The general election will be March 17.

"I have a greater level of experience than any of the other candidates," Page said in a recent interview with the Collegian. "In terms of absolute experience, I know finances from the ground up — I've served at the state and county levels."

Page, who said he has attended Pelham Town Meeting since he was six years old, noted that he is the only one of the four Democrats to have served as both a selectman and school committee member. Page has chaired the Pelham Select Board for two years, the Pelham School Committee for three years and chaired the Amherst/Pelham Regional School Committee for three years.

Page said a tradition of public service has been handed down to him from his parents and grandparents. Page's uncle served as a member of the Pelham Select Board for 39 years, with Page winning the election to fill his seat.

"Everbody, if they volunteer, can give something back to the community they live in," Page said. Page has served on numerous other boards, including the Massachusetts Municipal Association, Massachusetts Selectman's Association and the Hampshire Regional Refuse Board.

Page, who advocates what a he calls a "common-sense" approach to government, stressing accountability and sound management principles, said he relies on the input of those around him to help in making decisions.

"I really try to gather a lot of input and

Campus Center short circuits

Compiled By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Campus Center was evacuated shortly before 10 p.m. Tuesday night due to a short circuit in an electrical panel which caused the eight and ninth floors to become filled with smoke. Damage was confined to the panel board and the building was reopened at approximately 10:30 p.m.

ARRESTS

• Joseph L. Rivera, 18, of Chicopee, was arrested Tuesday night by South Hadley Police after he was involved in an altercation. After checking his name through their computer, South Hadley Police found that there was an outstanding warrant for his arrest issued by the UMass Police Department. The warrant was issued for a liquor law violation, and he was subsequently turned over to University Police.

LARCENY

• A man reported Tuesday night the theft of a car stereo, valued at $500, from his vehicle in Lot 44. The dashboard of the vehicle received extensive damage during the break-in.

Prof serves on U.S. panel for higher ed

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor recently served as a panelist at a Washington, D.C. conference held by President Bush aimed at improving American education by the year 2000.

"President Bush is strongly committed to making education in the United States number-one in the year 2000," said Ronald K. Hambleton, professor of education and psychology. "I never had envisioned this."

The conference, part of the National Assessment of Educational Programs, was held Nov. 17 to Nov. 19. Hambleton was one of 100 educators, psychologists and curriculum specialists invited to attend the conference.

The director of the research and evaluation methods program at the School of Education, Hambleton specializes in educational assessment. He was one of the primary reviewers in the discussion of papers prepared for the conference, he said.

The conference considered methods for assessing "higher-order thinking skills" among university and college students.

"The conference's aim is to monitor American education and improve it," said Hambleton, "The feeling is we're doing too much testing."

One change anticipated in the future is a restructuring of the Scholastic Aptitude Test, he said.

"A lot of university professors don't promote individual thinking," said Hambleton, adding that professors must recognize this problem.

NAEP, which has been in operation for 22 years, had previously been involved with elementary and high school students, said Hambleton. The program is now called "NAEP goes to college."

Using NAEP, the government wants to extend beyond high schools and go to universities, Hambleton said.

"The federal government wants to get a handle on education so that kids will leave college with the proper skills, which include the ability to reason and communicate with each other after graduation," said Hambleton.

"The first step [in the program] is assessing the educational system and finding out if college students have the skills. In the second step, the committee will advise the federal government on general programs that might be researched," said Hambleton.

"The conference will not meet again, but the bulk of the people [at the conference] will play roles in NAEP in the next 10 years," said Hambleton.

Hambelton said he anticipates major changes in future testing. "Testing will move away from classical testing, and there will be a lot more performance testing," said Hambelton.

Hambelton, who is on sabbatical this semester in Canada, is currently involved with the assessment of the Law School Admissions Test and the National Literacy and Teacher's Committee.

In addition to NAEP, Hambelton recently presented the opening address at the Assessing Learning and Educational Achievement Conference sponsored by the American Psychological Association and the Johnson Foundation in Racine, Wis., and a paper at the International Conference on Modern Theories in Measurement held in Montebello, Quebec.

Story, Hite get endorsements

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Democratic candidates for the Amherst-Pelham district state representative seat Ellen Story and Jon Hite picked up some important last-minute endorsements this week as former Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy came out for Story, while the University's Physical Plant workers union threw its weight behind Hite.

The primary election, which will determine both parties' nominees for Stanley Rosenberg's former seat in the statehouse, is to be held next week on Feb. 18.

Before a group of approximately 15-20 supporters on the Amherst Town Common Monday, Ellen Story and members of her campaign announced Murphy's endorsement, as well as endorsements from the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus, Rosemary Dunn Dalton, board member of the Greater Boston Gay and Lesbian Alliance, Ann Jefferson of the UMass Graduate Employee's Organization and long-time Amherst resident Winifred Hilliker.

"All these endorsements are very significant," Story said. "I think my campaign is just humming along."

In addition to the AFSCME support, Democrat Jon Hite announced Monday an endorsement from the Amherst Citizens for Responsible Government, a group of local homeowners and taxpayers.

"I'm very proud to have Local 1776's support," Hite said. "The people in AFSCME do a lot for the University, and sometimes it isn't appreciated as much as it should be.

"I remember how hard people in Local 1776 worked to help fight for a larger budget with me in 1981, and this endorsement means they're ready to fight alongside me again," Hite said.

AFSCME's Local President Richard Coach, who works in the UMass public safety division, said the union considers Hite the campaign's most experienced and qualified candidate.

"[Hite] is the best qualified of the candidates running," Coach said. "I think he will represent the University as a whole." Coach said Hite "came across the best" on labor issues at a recent forum sponsored by the Northampton Labor Council.

"Ellen Story leads with values important to all of us in Massachusetts — pro-choice, human services for those in need of care and protection, good education for all youngsters and a safe environment," Murphy wrote in a statement read by Story's campaign manager, Jan Klausner-Wise. "She follows in the tradition of articulate, progressive representation of the Third Hampshire District."

Story said she coordinated Murphy's campaign in Amherst in 1982, when Murphy won Amherst but lost statewide in her bid to become Lt. Governor.

The Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus released a statement expressing its support for Story based largely on her 18-year record at the Western Massachusetts Family Planning Council.

"[Story's] longstanding commitment to human services — particularly services for women, infants and children — are strong recommendations for her candidacy," the statement said.

Hilliker, a long-time Amherst resident and former Town Meeting Member and President of the Ann Whalen House Tenants Association, wrote in a statement that "Ellen [Story] is a person who is an active achiever, as opposed to one of empty promises."

Unidentified man saves boy from frigid campus pond

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

An unidentified man made a daring rescue and saved a young boy from drowning in the campus pond shortly after 5 p.m. Tuesday evening.

According to the UMass police, 8-year-old Michael Wiggins of North Elm Street, Northampton, was walking near the campus pond with his mother and two brothers when he ran out onto ice newly formed due to the cold weather, and suddenly fell through.

Geraldine Phillip, 21, a junior zoology and legal studies major, witnessed the accident and subsequent rescue of Wiggins.

"I saw a man crawl out on the ice on his hands and knees, fish around in the water with his hands, and pull the boy up out of the water," said Phillip.

The unidentified man observed the young boy falling through the ice into the water and proceeded to crawl across the ice and pull the boy to safety, said the UMass police.

Wiggins apparently was not completely submerged in the water, but he was approximately 50 ft. from shore and immersed up to his neck in the water, according to the police.

After the boy was pulled from the frigid pond he was stripped of his saturated clothes and wrapped in blankets which enabled his body temperature to rise, said the police.

He was placed in a UMass police cruiser, and the Amherst Fire Department arrived shortly afterward to administer additional first aid.

The Amherst Fire Department determined that Wiggins's vital signs were good and he was turned over to his mother at the scene, said Amherst Fire Chief Victor Zumbruski.

The mother of Wiggins and the UMass police are requesting that the man who made this daring rescue contact the UMass police so he can be acknowledged and commended for the rescue of the boy.

Students visit UMass

BCP welcomes high school seniors

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

Nearly 100 minority students and parents from Springfield high schools visited the University of Massachusetts yesterday at the invitation of the Bilingual Collegiate Program.

Students from Commerce and Putnam High Schools visited the University to get an overview of the admissions and financial aid processes.

"The purpose was to familiarize them with the processes of admissions and financial aid, in addition to informing them of the different services and resources available to them at UMass," said Jose Bou, director of BCP. He rated the activity as "excellent."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jo-Anne Vanin, Associate Dean of Students Gladys Rodriguez, BCP staff and University students spoke to the high schoolers. Campus tours were offered, as well as lunch at the dining commons.

Both students and parents were satisfied with the day.

Dyanesa, a senior from Commerce High school who wants to major in history or psychology, said she likes UMass because it is "complete, has alternatives, the classes are small and because of the Five-College consortium."

Her mother said, "it is big, but not too big," and liked the overseas [study abroad] program, the work study program, the area and the transportation system.

David, a senior from Springfield, said, "it was really good to have [BCP] here to help us."

"I feel comfortable with everyone here," said Luz, a senior from Putnam about the attention she received during the activity.

Board of Trustees is out of control

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees is out of control.

Under the current power structure, the Board of Trustees is actually in charge of the University. This is standard procedure for most colleges and universities in the United States.

Unlike the Chancellor, the President or other University officials, the members of the Trustees are not directly involved with University policies and concerns on a day-to-day basis. Traditionally, the Trustees have been a rubber stamp for the administration's decisions for just that reason.

Greg Sukiennik

The Trustees have been asserting their power lately, however, and the University is paying the price for it. Their recent track record indicates this.

It was the Trustees who eliminated men's soccer and women's volleyball from the Athletic Department budget.

It was the Trustees who, according to Chancellor Richard O'Brien, on the recommendation of a four-member ad hoc committee of the Faculty Senate Athletic Committee, eliminated football scholarships.

It was the Trustees who rejected the agreement made between the Administration and the Graduate Employee Organization.

By acting in direct opposition to the will of the employees and students of the University, the Trustees have forfeited the right to govern. They are abusing power.

Everyone knows budget cuts are difficult, but the manner in which the Trustees have tried to save money — on the backs of students — is wrong-minded. Furthermore, students have not been involved in the decision making process. Tuition and fee increases and the dissolution of sports programs and scholarships have occurred either during breaks, when students are not on campus, or simply over their heads.

Now the Trustees are even ignoring faculty, staff and administrators. Did they ask ex-football coach Jim Reid about cutting money from the football budget? No, they went ahead and eliminated scholarships themselves. The now-defunct women's volleyball team found out their program was gone through the media, for God's sake. That is just plain wrong.

Who are these people, anyway? No one seems to know. Their names are not public knowledge. Yet they control the University from their meetings in Worcester or Lowell. Why Lowell, anyway? Are they so high and mighty they won't deign step foot in Amherst?

Maybe they wouldn't have so much control if somebody, anybody, was in a position of true leadership here in Amherst. Follow the saga of former football coach Jim Reid and you'll find a sea of "I don't know" answers and a paper trail eventually leading straight to the Trustees. In Lowell, of course.

Did Chancellor O'Brien know what was going on? At least he came clean and admitted eliminating football scholarships had been talked about by an "ad hoc committee" of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council and "interested Trustees." (Surprised?) He also admitted Reid should have been told what was happening. Given the amount of heat he takes on a daily basis, O'Brien deserves some credit for owning up.

What about other administrators involved in the Reid mess? Let them speak for themselves. The following quotes ran in a story on the cuts in Tuesday's Collegian regarding a meeting between University officials and concerned UMass alumni,

Dean of Physical Education David Bischoff said "At the University, no one makes a decision."

Frank McInerney, director of athletics, on the kinds of questions the alumni posed: "Their role was to find out as many facts as they could about the system, and you can't explain the system."

Besides being indicative of the chaos reigning in Boyden these days, these two quotes show something important we should have all realized eons ago. The Administration is not in control; the Trustees are. Of course Bischoff and McInerney, and probably other officials in the administration, can't really explain how decisions are made or how the system really works.

The word trust is inherently part of the concept of Trustees. We trust these people with the welfare of our University.

What do you do when you can't trust the Trustees?

Quiz answer wrong

In your black history quiz, (Black Affairs, Feb. 5), the answer to the question: "the number of blacks who have been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize," is given as two. This is not the correct answer to the question as phrased — it is true only for black Americans. Two black South Africans have also been awarded the prize: Albert Luthuli (1960) and Desmond Tutu (1984).

UMass short on cash, but athletic funding still important

In the wake of head football coach Jim Reid's resignation, I have heard criticism that the loss of a football coach, compared to the loss of faculty, has received exponentially more media attention than it should have, and the funding of the athletics program should be considered a luxury rather than a necessity at a financially strapped institution like UMass.

As far as athletic spending in general is concerned, there are those here who would argue that spending more than an absolute minimum on sports is "inappropriate" in a period of financial hardship. Some say it is wrong for UMass to spend a dime on athletics while the library's holdings deteriorate. While I agree that the library situation is abysmal and needs to be rectified, I wholeheartedly disagree that funding for athletics is wasted.

Aside from the fact that a broad and successful athletics program has a major impact on the overall attractiveness of the University for prospective students, it is the major outlet for school spirit and enthusiasm.

Kevin Newnan

Take, for example, the accomplishments of the men's basketball team. When the Minutemen broke the Associated Press Top 25 for the first time ever in January, calls started pouring into the SGA office from alumni who wanted to know if we could get them tickets. I went down to Philadelphia to see the game against St. Joseph's, and was amazed to find that nearly our entire section was filled with Philly-area UMass alumni. These are the people who will cough up when Telefund calls.

On a recent trip to the State House, SGA president Dave Gagne and I met individually with eight senators and State Reps. After relatively dry conversations about the need to fund public higher education, I handed them a UMass men's basketball schedule, which elicited the most positive responses of the day and started a brief chat along the lines of "How about that team?" As sad as it may be, I think there is a definite correlation between the success of a public university's sports program the commitment the state government has to the institution.

It's not just the big programs that are important. Men's and women's tennis, for example, have been eliminated due to budget shortfalls. Although one can urge that there are many more important things out there that need funding, these two sports cost a total of 16 thousand dollars! With the concept of tuition retention likely becoming an unfortunate reality next year, UMass will rely heavily on higher enrollments to sustain its budget. Once we start replacing state dollars with retained tuition, UMass will easily lose that money as soon as three or four tennis players decide not to come here because we don't have a team. This is hardly a cost-saving measure in the long run.

The moral of the story is this: the purpose of a strong athletic program goes far beyond that of a source of entertainment. Through scholarships, athletics are a means of access to talented individuals who may not have been able to afford an education otherwise. They are a means by which the University can increase its market value in a period when we will soon depend on higher enrollments for survival. They are a high-visibility way for the University to show its commitment to excellence. Perhaps most importantly, athletics are an easily identifiable source of pride in this institution, in an era when there isn't a lot to cheer about at UMass.

Kevin Newnan is the UMass student trustee.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

I miss writing for this rag — who has the time when you're an editor, for crying in yer beer? Anyway, "Notes" has become the sort of forum that has no regular author. Instead, our editor-in-chief is the official host, but his guests are plenty. This time it is me.

I figured I'd use the time that I spend every day on the Northampton bus (an obscene hour and a half each day) getting to and from campus to think of ideas for this. It's hard to get used to spending so much time of the day just sitting there, waiting to get somewhere not altogether that nice, and often I am an angry rider. Especially when new passengers board — if I don't even have a little room, a little privacy on these things, then my whole day is ruined. Like most others, I do what I can to discourage riders to choose me as sitting partner: I sneeze, scratch, babble softly to myself, when things get desperate, I have been known to drool . . . which reminds me of a story:

My Colorado mates Joe, Bill and myself were on an overnight train last spring, going from Krakow to Prague. We had the entire cabin to ourselves and were well aware that if even one more traveler were to join us, we would be unable to stretch out and would get no sleep.

Then one of us had an idea that was not only ingenious, but cheeky enough to live up to the heinous reputation that Americans already possess in Europe. We took off our shoes and quickly filled the cabin with a smell more odious, more deplorable than we were prepared for. Joe, I believe, also removed his shirt, making like he was bad news. Boy, were we proud and smug as passengers passed by without even sticking their sleepy heads into our space — something told them that this was a cabin not to mess around with.

Ari Vais

Finally, the joke was on us: after our giggles and high-fives subsided, we realized that we may as well have been riding in an outhouse — the smell was beyond obscene and we began to shout outraged noises. We howled and wailed and suffocated. We began to accuse each other, in all seriousness, of lousy personal hygiene. We ended up shivering all night with the window open as our train roared through the slumbering Polish countryside.

A great way to take up space . . . ramble, babble, digress! My favorite professors do this: there's nothing more charming or charismatic than some teacher going off on a completely irrelevant tangent, especially if the initial subject matter is dull and if the digressions are personal.

But every digression has to return to its original point — otherwise, it is the original point. So . . . back on the PVTA bus I go. I'm actually on a first name basis with a few of the drivers (hullo, Phil), but I generally banish myself to an anonymous corner and send off nasty vibes. But even when I do get a seat to myself for the entire ride, spread out and begin to ponder this and that, there always seems to be a party of two or three somewhere on the bus that insist on performing for the rest of us — you know who you are, suckers! The ones who tell their tales and laugh in a voice so deafening that neither the din of the bus nor a Sex Pistols tape will drown it out. It's like, these people are convinced that what they have to say is so witty or crucial that the rest of us shouldn't even have a choice of whether or not to listen. Maybe I'd like to just chill or think or something. Sorry, this is America! Subtlety in public behavior? Pinhead, this is America! Oh, I know, I know, 'love it or leave it!'; okay, I love it, I [expletive] adore it. But that is the reason that I had no actual notes from the basement of this place.

Now it is time for a cold beer with Brian Harrington. Be good.

Too much hate scrawl

Could someone please mail me a clue. I seem to be in a state of total confusion and I would appreciate being filled in on what exactly the big deal is to vandalize public property.

I remember a teacher I had in eighth grade. He thought it was really funny one time when he read, "Fuk you" on a wall in school. "If you're going to do it," he said, "at least spell correctly."

Entering high school I remember discussing the topic of vandalism at a student council meeting. Our school had a problem with writing on the bathroom walls, so one person suggested we tape up construction paper. That way if they had to write, at least it wouldn't destroy the walls.

Felice Cohen

I used to think people wrote on public property with the intention of defacing it. But when people continued to write, and on the paper, I figured at least the problem of destroying the bathroom walls was cleared up. But we didn't really solve the problem, we only made it neater.

So why do people write on walls? Is it an act of destruction or some people's way of anonymously stating their opinions by scribbling obscenities and hate mail to the world? If they continue to write on the paper, maybe they are not writing with the intention to destroy, but to be heard.

Entering college, I thought I would be in an environment with mature adults, capable of controlling themselves from such obnoxious habits.

Unfortunately my hopes were erased. Reading the walls can be done in any number of bathrooms on this campus. But what's the point? And who has the time? Fishing out a pen from the bottom of my backpack takes long enough at the beginning of each class, never mind spending that time while sitting on the john.

I guess it makes sense though. If people are going to clear their minds, that must be the place to do it.

However I do not want to limit this discussion to within the University stalls. And I really do not want to discuss what I recently heard to be the newest, ideal place for on-campus students to relieve themselves, but instead about what prompted me to write on this topic.

Studying recently in the Tower library, I was distracted by some written literature on my desk. Pushing aside my homework, I knew the comments etched in permanent ink would prove far more educational.

This one desk was rather repulsive and I decided to share it with you. (No need to thank me.) There was a title and everything. It went like this:

"I Want To Kill"
1. all pimps
2. all New Yorkers
3. all people who write shit like this on desks
4. you
5. all rich people
6. all tow truck drivers and people associated with towing companies
7. myself

. . . and much more raunchy topics, but I assume you get the picture. What is even more interesting or disturbing (depending on whether you're a sociology or psychology major), were the responses, also etched into the desk, highlighting the initial remarks. For example:

"I'd like to kill you for writing on my clean desk, you ass!"

I have to wonder, does the word hypocrite mean anything to these people? Of course there are some legitimate, level-headed responses, but honestly, couldn't they just leave a note on a piece of paper, instead of adding to the destruction?

My aim here is not to backlash and scold, for it's too late for punishment. If they have not grown up yet, all the yelling and screaming is useless. But I would like to offer one suggestion to these people:

The next time you feel the urge to pen your views for others to read, come down to the Collegian. We're always looking for creative writers.

Tips for the un-coupled

Oh! Here we are on the verge of yet another St. Valentine's Day. Time to mope about your room, stare hopelessly out the window with a glazed pathetic look and remember that your last Valentine's Day was just as sad as this one is going to be because you are not currently the "other" in the collective "significant other" relationship. Right? I think not.

Lorrie Cozzens

I am here to save this would-be treacherous holiday for all of those currently active in Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. (It is not required you play an instrument.) I am here to introduce the concept of "Make My Day." Granted, it is not a new phrase — but it suffices quite nicely for my own purposes. This is a concept that can be used not only to combat the commercial vices of Valentine's Day, but for everyday here on in.

For example, almost every morning that I rush off to class because I hit the snooze button just one too many times, there is Bruce, one of the really swell and friendly maintainers who works in my building. Bruce always has something pleasant to say despite the fact it's so death-defyingly early, and as I scuffle by in my hurries, he often calls out "Take your time and get there safely. That's the important thing." Voila! An instant smile has fallen upon my face, and that's no easy task.

Then there is Brian who is an RA on another floor from mine, yet he was still sweet enough to make me one of his very special, wicked cool, felt name tags for my door. On top of that we had a very humorously intellectual conversation while he was cutting out the rainbow letters of L-O-R-R-I-E. (Thanks, Brian!)

You may be thinking: "While all of this is well and good, what does it have to do with me, or Valentine's Day, or the "Make My Day" theme?" Patience! Patience! (Yeah, listen to the pot calling the kettle black, right?) Here it is:

You don't need a significant other in order makes someone else's day or Valentine's Day (Or your own day for that matter.) How do you do that? Well, there are literally tons o' ways, and just because I like you all so much I'm going to share some of these neat-o ideas with each and every one of you.

1. Buy yourself something really nice for Valentine's Day. Last year, I had the pleasure of accompanying the infamous Goose as he bought himself a mighty gorgeous ring just because he thought he deserved it.

2. You don't have that kind of serious cash to spend? Pick up all of the pennies from your floor, and buy a singular Lindt Chocolate Truffle. They run about 25 cents, and are very nearly one of the few thing I consider to be perfect. Frankly, perfection doesn't come any cheaper than that. George Bernard Shaw once said that "There is no love sincerer than the love of food." Chocolate is by no means an exception to that rule.

3. Buy a box of those ever popular Valentines's cards that we used to use in the third grade. Better yet, arm yourself with a gluestick and some scissors and make your own. Nothing would warm Mom's heart more than a Valentine that you made yourself, and maybe she'll even put it on the refrigerator. Give the rest of your cards to friends, floormates, your boss, or nauseatingly happy couples you know. If you want to make this really interesting, send one anonymously. If you choose to keep your masquerade, you can pride yourself in knowing that you really made someone's day. If you choose to reveal yourself, you've got one hell of a conversation starter!

4. There are other quick ideas too. You can always rely on the "Reach out and touch someone" adage. (I meant the phone! Get your mind out of the gutter.) Or a single rose (even to a friend) with a note. Even just showing up spontaneously with a video and a bag of microwave popcorn has a way of bringing happiness through the element of surprise. If all else fails, remember we are at UMass: sit back and have a beer.

While I have to agree with Plato when he said that "Love is a grave mental disease", I am, after all, a hopeless romantic in the same token. So, if you're single or hooked up with a significant other, have a Happy St. Valentine's Day either way.

Signing off..

UMass needs more Monty Python

It's time to lighten up, UMass. I mean, if the past couple of years of Collegian editorials is any indication of the humor level on this campus, we all need a major Monty Python injection or something.

A few groups in particular really need to loosen up a little. We'll put these people, for the sake of argument into the "militant" category. I mean militant anything. I don't care if you're crusading to save minority immigrant religious baby whales, or if you're fighting for the right to blow them up with depth charges. If you're marching in front of the Student Union threatening passers by or holding a blubber-in you aren't getting the point across, you're pissing people off.

If you haven't noticed, UMass is not the real world. The place is frustrating at times and it's a great place to make friends, but its nowhere near reality. People with lifestyles that would be too outrageous to have as guests on Donahue are considered normal. I'm not saying any of these people are not swell folks. Heaven forbid such a politically incorrect statement in this open and understanding community.

I am saying, however, that in the outside world these different and unique behaviors will not be so readily accepted. This may not be the way it should be; but what it, is. Not many Fortune 500 companies want to hire militants. If you want to work in an organic food cooperative, you may not see my point. But if that were the case you probably wouldn't have read this far. Chill.

Getting hyper because only 98 percent of the student body accepts and loves you for who you are is nuts. Enjoy the popularity while you're still in the UMass protective bubble. When you get out into the real world you'll be lucky if a few cool people give a rat's behind that you exist at all.

New film leaves out key detail

It's amazing how easily lesbian reality can just slip unnoticed by mainstream heterosexual consciousness. A recent, astonishing example is the way most reviewers described "Fried Green Tomatoes," a movie about women that focuses on the lives of a butch lesbian named Idgie and her lover Ruth. Most reviewers totally missed this lesbian relationship and simply described the movie as "just another flick about women's friendships."

I beg to differ: This film is unprecedented in the history of mainstream cinema. It is the first ever that chronicles the life and experiences of rural lesbians. It is incredibly ironic that, just as so many country lesbians go unnoticed in the real world, reviewers failed to accurately identify these powerful lesbian screen characters.

Trystan Skeigh

As a country dyke from Kansas who saw the film twice and read the book by Fannie Flagg, I know this is a story about my people. Idgie is a dyke, and she and Ruth share a lesbian relationship. Flagg clearly spells this out in her book, but I think only someone with extremely thick blinders could have failed to see this in the movie, which is packed with rich lesbian imagery and themes.

So, to all the straight folks who saw the movie and totally failed to recognize this — you're probably the same people who fail to see the myriads of real-life lesbians, gays and bisexuals who peacefully co-exist all around you. It means you're still operating under the erroneous heterosexist assumption that men and women, unless clearly labeled otherwise, are straight.

Idgie is a sweetly painted, uncannily accurate portrait of a rural dyke. This movie offers a humorous, yet sensitive portrayal of a lesbian's childhood. After I saw it I was so thrilled I called my mother and told her to go watch it because "it's a movie about me, mom." Fishing, overalls, mud and growing up a loner are common childhood experiences for many country lesbians.

Idgie, played by Mary Stewart Masterson, is beautiful, adventurous, athletic, nature-loving, tough, booze-belting, poker-playing and a staunch cross-dresser. Yet, because she is assigned the role of a powerful protagonist, many viewers and reviewers simply overlook her nonconformity, failing to admit the obvious even when Idgie refuses all male suitors and settles down with another woman.

I wonder if Fannie Flagg deliberately kept triggerwords associated with homosexuality out of the screenplay in order to introduce rich, powerful lesbian imagery into the mainstream without frightening away homophobic viewers or risking the pre-judgmental chop of a censor.

This reveals the power of language. A lesbian without the label ceases to exist in the minds of heterosexuals. She is assumed to be straight, even when she lives an openly different life.

The film contains some painfully poignant reflections of lesbian life. The best dramatic moment comes when Ruth is forced to defend her relationship with Idgie in court. I doubt a single lesbian, gay, or bisexual viewer failed to realize what "crime" the prosecutor was really attempting to lay at Ruth's door: "Why would you leave your husband to go off with this woman, madam?"

You can imagine all our collective sighs of relief when for once, a mainstream picture got the answer right: "Because she's my best friend and I love her."

For those seeking to understand the truth of lesbian existence, this scene tells it all. Many of us have been forced to defend our love for another woman. Some in a court of law, all of us in the court of public opinion. Our replies match Ruth's.

Some may argue it's safer to be invisible. I say there can be no safety as long as there is danger in discovery. The story of Idgie and Ruth is not unlike the story of thousands of rural lesbian couples today. Those of you who admired them, cried for them, cheered for them, need to understand you were supporting two lesbians. If you loved Idgie — you loved a dyke.

Britain's Billy Bragg socializing in Northampton

By Eric Poulin
Collegian Staff

Every now and then, a musical artist comes along who simply defies any conceivable classification. He'll be armed with the basics: usually only a guitar and amplifier, although he'll add just the right amount of musical accompaniment, when necessary. He'll have no glossy video, a $4 haircut, as opposed to the long, flowing locks that some rockers call hair, and he dresses just like you or I would.

His music generally deals with that ugly eight-letter word (p-o-l-i-t-i-c-s) that makes most of us shiver with fear, yet he'll charm his audiences with a wit and sense of humor that is unmatched among most musicians today. He'll do things strictly on his own terms, but he'll endear himself to innumerable listeners all over the world.

I'm speaking, of course, of Englishman Billy Bragg, who will be making his first Valley appearance of 1992, this Saturday evening. Show time at the Academy of Music in Northampton is 8:00, and early birds will be treated by Eye & I, a reggae band that Bragg brought along to open for him.

Not only will it be the first time this year that any of us have seen Bragg, it will be our initial opportunity to view his newly-formed backup band, the Red Stars. This new addition is a bit of a switch from his usual stage lineup (Bragg and Wiggy on guitar, with Cara Tivey on piano), and it will be very interesting to see how his show will be affected.

I tend to think that little change will be evident, if any, for Bragg's tremendous sense of musical integrity will prohibit him from making any wholesale changes.

Bragg never needs an excuse to tour, but, if you're looking for one, it would be to support his latest album, Don't Try This At Home. It's a significant work, if only because it's a further progression in his crusade of "mixing pop and politics". Whereas his earlier works were much harsher (as is evident on the Back to Basics album), they've progressively become more and more accessible to a much more vast audience. The hallmark of this great leap forward was his "Between the Wars" single, which proved that you don't need a hard sound to relay a heavy message, according to Bragg himself.

It all comes to a head on the Don't Try This etc. album, which is most clearly evident on the single and centerpiece, "Sexuality". "The most important" song on the album according to the artist, it's a study of relationships and human nature, and a song that I couldn't picture him writing or recording some nine years ago. It's unmistakably Billy Bragg, filled with many humorous and enlightening twists, and was written with and co-produced by Johnny Marr (formerly of the Smiths and the Electronic project).

Other stand-out tracks include "Tank Park Salute", a tribute to Bragg's late father, which makes "The Living Years" look like some Britny Fox song, and "Accident Waiting To Happen", which is a commentary on our current Vice-President. "North Sea Bubble" may wind up being the all-time classic from this release, however, as it has the potential to be the new anthem of the Socialist party. It just might replace "Waiting For The Great Leap Forward" as his set closer (but don't bet on it for this show).

If you've experienced a Billy Bragg show before, you know exactly what to expect. If you haven't, don't look for a two-and-a-half-hour set of music, jumps, screams, and sweat. Quite often, he spends half of his show conversing with the audience, making wisecracks on politicians, and providing words of wisdom in a well-read, intelligent, and articulate manner.

Every time he hits the stage, he proves what many of us have known all along—that he is, quite simply, the most important musician in the world, and should not be missed at any cost.

Billy Bragg will perform at the Academy of Music in Northampton at 8 p.m. on Saturday night. Tickets are available at the Northampton Box Office.

Ride the Lobster 'Copter with Gameboy

By DAVID WEIZEL
Special to the Collegian

Welcome back! This year promises to be a great one for gamers everywhere, and things will be especially UMASSive here at home. Watch this space for reviews of up-and-coming games on the Atari Lynx, SEGA GameGear, and of course, Nintendo GameBoy. Speaking of which . . . away we go. Ready, aim, KABOOM!

"TRAX" for Nintendo GameBoy
by HAL America, $30.

Newsflash: This just in! Neighboring nasties from the Republic of Akuda have stomped all over your (formerly) quiet hometown.

But what of the villa in the countryside? What of Aunt Millie's precious teakettle collection? There's just one hope. Remember that rusty old tank in the backyard, the one Grandpa's been meaning to fix up? Well, it does kinda run, even though the turret does only go clockwise, and it's got Goodyears where the treads used to be. But it's our only hope, friend, and, well, since you loved playing in it so much as a kid...

Yes, even at the helm of a rickety old bucket-of-bolts, "TRAX" is fun to watch, and a blast to play. The graphics are stylish, cartoonish and just plain cool.

There are four stages to plow through: Grassland, Desert, Cave, and the fortified Capital City, each with its own wacky mid-stage characters, and bizarre end bosses to defeat. (Not to spoil the fun, but one of my favorites I've dubbed "The Lobster 'Copter.")

The action scrolls top to bottom, and sometimes left to right, as you progress across the terrain, leaving traces of your wrath behind you. Watch out for mines, enemy tanks and shots being fired from all directions. No score is kept in "TRAX," the sole objective being hit 'em hard and don't look back. After all, they started it. So keep on tankin', and shoot the supply trucks to scoop up gas, bonus lives, and heavier weaponry, like double turrets and tri-bombs.

There are plenty of surprises along the way, and enough action to keep even the sturdiest soldier firmly entrenched.

Die-hards may wish this game had more levels to it, since there is a liberal provision of continues if you fail, but "TRAX" kind of wins you over with its gritty charm. For the nostalgic, there is a second, game-link option of a separate maze-game for up to four players (extra game carts and Gameboys necessary), just like the old black-and-white Atari coin-op, Tank Battle. Remember, back in the '70's the one with the handle-bar grips sticking up? Anyway, hunt down a copy of "TRAX" at your local retailer, it's definitely worth a shot.

Roadtrip to the candle factory

By LISA LAMADELEINE
Collegian Correspondent

Does your room reek of day-old pizza, beer cans, cigarettes, or some other college dorm odor? Well, I have a solution for you. No, you don't even have to pick up your trash, just pick out a scented candle from the nearby Yankee Candle Factory.

A scented candle of your choice is a college requirement, and going to the factory to pick it out is actually a lot of fun (which is more than you can say for picking out your required courses!)

You can smell the perfumes as soon as you pull into the driveway. The whole day could be spent sniffing the candles, whose scents range from popcorn to peaches, and from freshcut grass to autumn leaves.

Or, if that isn't enough excitement, you can dip your own! For a few dollars, you can design your own candle with any or all of the colors of the rainbow. This activity is guaranteed to bring back memories of grammar school art class. A must for any overworked college student.

Early New Englanders always dipped their own, but probably weren't concerned about fancy colors or perfumes. Candle making has technically and creatively advanced over the years.

In early years, bayberries or animal fats were used for candle wax. In recent years, man-made materials have been utilized. Today you can experiment with the added features of color and perfume, which make them a great decoration. These little decorations are useful too, when our wonderful technology fails and the lights go out!

WMUA offers live music every Tuesday

By DAVID DEMERJIAN
Collegian Staff

For music fans who love to go to live shows, these days are rough ones. The economy is tight, and few people have cash to spend at a club. The sub zero temperatures that have recently settled over the area also encourage people to stay indoors.

Well, for those of you who can't or don't feel like trudging through the snow to see a show, but love live music, the solution is as close as your FM radio dial.

Every Tuesday evening between 7 and 9:30 p.m., WMUA 91.1 FM, the University's student-run radio station, presents "The Live Music Project," a show dedicated to playing nothing but live music.

The Live Music Project was created in 1990 by WMUA to provide a low pressure, laid back performance atmosphere for both local and visiting performers. The Live Music Project caters to all genres of music: blues, folk, jazz, rap, rock and others.

Since its creation, the Project has featured a variety of performers, including The Canine Bastards, Nag Nag Nag, Guy Wallace, Synaptic Snap, and Yo La Tengo. Last December the Live Music Project hosted a performance with The Spin Doctors in the Campus Center. The Doctors performed to a crowd of more than 300 students.

Besides featuring bands, The Live Music Project also plays concert and live recordings of everyone from R.E.M. to Jefferson Airplane to The Clash.

The Live Music Project is always looking for musicians to perform. Whether you are a folk singer with nothing but a guitar, or part of a 12-member brass band, the Live Music Project would love to see you on the air. The Project also welcomes fans to come to the studio and watch their favorite bands perform.

The Live Music Project takes place every Tuesday nights between 7 and 9:30 p.m. on WMUA 91.1. Bands interested in performing should contact Aml Bennitt or Brian Hajjar at 545-2876.

Scatterbrain wins many fans with loud thrash

By PETER ROAF
Collegian Correspondent

Scatterbrain ain't pretty, but they sure are fun.

Sunday night's concert at the Vertex was a unique blend of heavy thrash and lighthearted frivolity, with the audience eating it up from beginning to end.

The band played a very tight set — the rhythm section was especially good — with Mike Boyko (drums) and Guy Brogna (bass) sounding better than they have on any album. Paul Nieder played his guitar aggressively, while Glen Cummings showed off his many talents by playing guitar, singing background vocals and selling T-shirts before the show.

It was a disappointment that Tommy Christ's vocals were drowned out by the instruments, but his stage antics really got the crowd into the show.

The set consisted of equal amounts of material from Here Comes Trouble and their new album, Scamboogery. The crowd went crazy for familiar songs like "Don't Call Me Dude" and "Here Comes Trouble," while embracing "Swiss Army Girl" and "Grandma's House of Babes" from Scamboogery. Christ apologized for giving in and writing a love song which turned out to be "Bartender," Scatterbrain's tribute to the "world's most noble profession."

"Tastes Just Like Chicken" made a statement about today's popular music — "Standardized, homogenized, sterilized. . . I've heard that song before." In the middle of that song, though, they cut to the Queen/Bowie riff from "Ice, Ice Baby."

Unlike most bands, the musicians in Scatterbrain didn't play lengthy solos to show off for the crowd. Instead, the band tastefully opted for an instrumental jam of famous classical pieces while Christ took a beer break. The dual lead guitar in their rendition of "The Barber of Seville," and the double bass drum in Mozart's Sonata #3 were enough to make any Music 100 professor cringe.

The highlight of the evening came when the band "Down With the Ship (Slight Return)," which is a song Cummings, Nieder and Christ performed when they were members of Ludichrist. Starting off with the intro to Jimi Hendrix's "Voodoo Chile," the song features familiar riffs copped from Aerosmith, Led Zeppelin, Phil Collins and Metallica, just to name a few.

While the crowd chanted for "Milk and Blood," the band reappeared for the encore dressed in women's clothing. The band complained that they were forced to change behind the stage because the manager wouldn't let them use the dressing room.

Tommy Christ was especially stunning in his nun's habit and falsies, but Paul Neider out did Christ with a slightly deformed male genitalia dangling out from under his dress. And what else could the band do but break into a parody of Motley "Crue's Girls, Girls, Girls?"

The show ended with "Drunken Milkman," a quasi-jazz spoof featuring the "Milk and Blood" lyrics. Neider did his best Hendrix impersonation by banging his irregular appendage on his guitar.

Scatterbrain definitely lived up to their lyrics: "Rock 'n' Roll ain't pretty, but it sure is fun."

Variety puts The Scream ahead of the rest

By A.C. FOSTER
Collegian Staff

Not every group finds the instant star-studded success that has been garnered in the past by debut albums from such groups as Guns n' Roses, Firehouse, and Slaughter. Furthermore, for some already established groups it can take multiple singles before an album is recognized.

With today's high production and video costs, as it has practically become universally accepted that you need a video for a single to sell, many groups, specifically new ones, are lucky to release more than a couple of singles. Also, unless those first couple releases find some kind of success it is more than probable that an album can be finished before it started.

New groups need radio and MTV air time considerably more than groups that have already established themselves with previous multiple selling albums on Top 40 hits. However, new groups, like The Scream, don't have these foundations, and while time can pay for some, it can destroy others.

The Scream is trying to become one of the groups that time pays off for, and it is looking like it might. Their debut album, Let It Scream, was actually released around September last year, and is just now starting to pick up steam. This can be credited to the release of their second single, "Father, Mother, Son," which was a multiple champion on WAAF's Rock Wars recently and has brought new life to an album that could have been shamefully last.

The release of The Scream's debut single, "I Believe in Me," gained some, but little, recognition on rock radio waves. However, they have received a helpful publicity push from their record label, Hollywood Records (Queen), as this debut single can still be found in record stores. Many singles are de-shelved following the release of another.

"Father, Mother, Son" is a very touching and melodic ballad. Many groups such as Tesla, Extreme, and Queensryche have discovered that a ballad is quite often just what the doctor ordered, and a successful one can keep an album going.

Vocalist John Corabi, guitarist Bruce Bovillet, bassist John Alderete and drummer Walt Woodward III should seem to be hoping for just that, as their album has other potential singles but may never get to release them unless they start making a mark with this one. "Father, Mother, Son" is definitely worth checking out if you're any sort of ballad or creativity fan.

Overall, the album has a lot to offer. While the majority is your basic straightforward hard rock it does feature some diversity. The fast tempo songs of "Catch Me If You Can," and "Give It Up," give the band their credibility while the aforementioned single "I Believe in Me" show the group's ability to write respectable music with a commercial appeal, without "selling out" to the radio. The ballads "Father, Mother, Son," and "You're All I Need," show the softer and more melodic side of the band, and the bluesy and entertaining song "Never Loved Her Anyway," gives Let It Scream another twist of variety. Innovative ideas, such as occasional uses of saxophones, clarinets, strings, and the entire Woodland Hills Toll Choir, are other examples of creative dashes thrown onto the album.

All of it consequently keeps Let It Scream from becoming an album with repetitive sounding songs, and keeps The Scream from becoming a group with a one-track style of music. Thus Let It Scream is a balanced album that still maintains the groups hard rock status, and should build its makers a foundation to stand on in the shaky music industry, and time should in fact pay off for The Scream.

'Have a Heart' offers smorgasbord of talent

BY BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

The best show in town this weekend is over at Pearl Street night club in Northampton where the "Have a Heart" Benefit Concert this Sunday will feature a smorgasbord of top local music entertainment.

This is perhaps the greatest collection of area musicians that you will ever see in one billing. The acts are all varied, ranging from the standard fare of folk, funk and rock to the exotic, such as African, Latin, Carribean and Native South American music.

There is a definite, if not deliberate, multicultural feel to this event. You will be able to boogie and sway to salsa, reggae, rap, zydeco, soca and calypso to name just a few of the styles and sounds that organizers have lined up. Don't forget your dancing shoes.

JABBERWOCKY

This is the third year of the Have a Heart Benefit Concert, the proceeds of which all go to benefit the Housing Discrimination Project and homelessness in Western Massachusetts. The event is extremely well organized and kudos must go to the volunteer workers, businesses, artists and particularly the musicians who have donated enormous amounts of their time and resources to put on this project.

This outpouring of goodwill and positive energy in every facet of organization is what makes this concert the premiere annual music event in the Valley. Featured performers include Who's Kiddin' Who, Quetzal, One Love, Ray Mason, the Sighs, Rockin' Dave and the Rent Party, Steel Wave, and the Barnidele Dancers and Drummers among many others.

One product of this banding together of the local music community has been a recording project to promote the concert and fight housing discrimination. Musicians particlpating in the concert got together last month to record a song titled "We the People" written

Mr. Lupo is ailed by Medicine Man

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

It's always a treat when a film surpasses its expectations. And it's never a surprise when one doesn't. Take the case of Medicine Man, a shallow and uninspired film that's mismatched with one of the most potentially charged premises around.

Sean Connery plays a scientist who has spent the last six years in the Amazon rain forest and Lorraine Bracco ("Goodfellas") portrays a recently arrived research assistant who's not welcome. When Bracco discovers Connery has stumbled on to a cure for cancer in a specific plant, she immediately wants to return to L.A. with the discovery. But Connery has lost the identity of a single compound vital to the cure. So now it's a race against time as the forest is being burned and bulldozed to make way for a road.

The plot looks like a fast-paced adventure, or at least a tense drama. "Medicine Man" is neither. It's frustrating because, of the many avenues and possibilities this film has, its does nothing but sit there.

Connery and Bracco square off and trade remarks at the outset, which made for a few laughs. But with Connery's Scottish accent and Bracco's Brooklynese, some may find it hard to understand what they're saying when not looking at the camera. They create limited characters, which fits the rest of this film.

The love story is so painfully predictable that the movie would have succeeded better if there was no romance. In a film that is ultimately a two character drama, their coupling seems like an afterthought.

Director John McTiernan ("Die Hard") never to captures the beauty of the rain forest. Except for a few panoramic views, the film stays grounded in a small patch of jungle, even to the point where the lab hut begins to resemble something from "Gilligan's Island." What McTiernan manages to do is make the predicament feel real. It takes the abstract destroying of the rain forest into an authentic dilemma.

What "Medicine Man" lacks is any semblance of pacing. In between a few tense moments lies a plodding, stilted film. It piques the audience's curiosity in a subplot about the tribe's real medicine man, only for it to be reduced to filler.

The search for the missing element results in the only powerful scene in the entire film. However, it is eclipsed by a dreadful ending proving that whatever a film's noble intentions, it can be as empty as a mindless teen comedy.

"Medicine Man" tries to be an independent statement, but its token love story and optimistic ending reek of Hollywood-preaching sentiment. This could all be forgiven if it was at least entertaining. It fails at that as well. Grade: C- especially for the event by Matthew Herschler.

The song was recorded at Wendell Recording Studio and it features a veritable who's who of area music figures. The studio donated their production facilities.

"We the People" is a powerful song featuring a gospel-like chorus and cameo vocal parts and instrument solos. It's a fantastic piece of work, considering the numbers of people involved and the logistics in orchestrating such a recording.

There are plans to sell the recording as a cassette single at the concert and at area retail outlets. Proceeds from sales will also benefit the Housing Discrimination Project. In the meantime, you can request "We the People" at area radio stations.

The concert kicks off at 4:00 p.m. and it's All Ages until 7:00 p.m.

ELLEN STORY
FOR STATE REPRESENTATIVE
A fresh voice for tough times

" On February 18th, I'm going to do something that my mother never had a chance to do: I'm going to vote for a woman to represent me in our State Legislature. I'm tired of politicians who promise everything and then don't come through. Ellen Story has been making positive changes in her community for almost twenty years. We have the opportunity to elect someone who won't just react but who will initiate fundamental changes that will make a difference for us all. I have been trying to make these kinds of changes and I see my future in Ellen. I know I'm voting for the best candidate and I'm so glad she's a woman."

listen to people and allow everyone to feel like they have a piece of the process," Page said. "After you get a program together, you evaluate it and see how you can make it better. By using evaluation, you can continue to assure the biggest value for the buck."

Page, who is currently the director of instrumentation at the University's polymer science center, graduated from UMass in 1971 with a degree in electrical engineering. A 1968 graduate of the Amherst-Pelham Regional High School, Page has worked at the University for 20 years.

Page, who said the total costs for a year at UMass were $1,000 when he attended, noted that the University underwent a period of great expansion during the early 1970s. He said this growth could form the basis for a strong support network among alumni who entered the University during this period.

"The University needs to reach out more to alumni," Page said. "People who graduate won't probably give for the first 15-20 years after they're out."

In a period when the University has undergone four straight years of cuts in state appropriations, Page said he favors finding a way of securing a more stable stream of revenue.

"The ultimate goal would be to take some power away from the legislature," Page said. "You need to work toward a guaranteed revenue stream that almost pays the costs of the University's programs."

Page has taken a middle ground on Gov. Weld's proposal for the University to retain 100 percent of the tuition money it brings in, a proposal that has emerged as a major issue among the four Democrats. Page said the University should retain between 10 and 20 percent of tuition money, using the money to create "a margin of excellence."

Hite strongly opposes tuition retention, Story wants to cap tuition money at one-third, with the state appropriating the other two-thirds of the University's budget. Franklin opposes the proposal, but says the University shouldn't give up the 30 percent of tuition it currently retains unless an alternative source of funding is found.

Page said if the University gets a steady stream of revenue, it will allow students, faculty and administrators to plan without the threat budgetary shortfalls.

"Not only could administrators plan, but students could plan on their tuition being at a stable level," Page said. "You've got to fight for [state money] — but I want to fight for it once."

Page, who said he will probably spend between $5-7,000 for his campaign, feels there is a strong need for less campaign spending. He said that less money sdhould be spent on this election because the high number of recent local elections and the fact that three of the four Democrats already have high name recognition as well as the fact that the district is served by the same media.

Page said he hopes it will soon become possible for someone to run for a state representative seat in the district for between $1-2,000.

Page said he believes he has wide enough support to win the campaign.

"I have a very grassroots campaign — with lots of volunteerism," said Page, who estimates he's had 120 people work on his campaign at one time or another.

"I can probably say I've disagreed with almost everyone at one time or another," Page said. "But a lot of people who've protested what I've done are working on my campaign — I think I'm going to win this race."

financial aid, lack of desired major and "too impersonal" faculty and staff.

Conducted by Student Affairs Research, Information and Systems, or SARIS, the survey contacted 103 out of the 202 first-year students who did not come back in the spring of last year.

Also, results said 90 percent of the students rated "racial/ethnic tensions" as "not at all important" in their decision not to return.

During most of the eighties, freshmen "attrition" — a failure to enroll one year later — was fairly stable, according to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning.

But nearly one in four of the freshmen who came to UMass in Fall 1990 failed to enroll in Fall 1991. This is a contributing factor to the lowest undergraduate enrollment level in two decades.

According to the New England Board of Higher Education, undergraduate enrollment in New England colleges is shrinking, although the board found in a recent study that state higher education is stronger than most of the rest of the country.

For example, New England colleges and universities have over 5 percent of the U.S. population and award 8 percent of all bachelor's degrees.

JIM'S JOURNAL By JIM

I rode the bus with Ruth today.
(She likes to take the bus sometimes instead of driving her car.)
We noticed that whenever another bus passed our bus, the two drivers always waved.
"I think that's nice," Ruth said.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Allies and competitors alike may prevent you from achieving a goal. Play a waiting game until the tide turns. Someone's toes are exceptionally sensitive now. Be careful not to tread on them!

CANCER (May 21-June 20): This is no time to shut out the world. Taking a more active role in your community will lead to valuable new friendships. Words of understanding encourage someone to make a fresh start.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Limits are placed on how much assistance you can command today. Why fight the tide? You need to swim with the stream to win now. Cast your cares aside tonight and party!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A day of twists and turns lies ahead. Refuse to be thrown off-balance by a change in plans. Losing your temper will only make a difficult situation worse. Look on the bright side!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Something wonderful happens today. Your balanced nature will impress someone in a position to help your career. Make your move with someone special.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your social life accelerates! Prominent people express new interest in your ideas. Be careful not to get carried away with your own cleverness!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Re-evaluate a recent decision; you could be repeating another person's mistakes. Taking a no-nonsense approach to business will help you avoid financial tangles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep a low profile today and stay out of reach of a rival. Loved ones will be supportive if storm clouds gather. Be grateful for their loyalty. Confide only in trusted pals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stay away from the stores today. An urge to splurge must be squelched if your savings are to grow. Find something interesting to do at home. A mystery book or movie holds appeal tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on your long-range plans. You learn a valuable lesson from someone else's mistakes. A loved one's habit of analyzing everything could grate on your nerves.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A journey or special arrangement with an older person is in the spotlight. It may be necessary to revise your plans. Keep your schedule as flexible as you can.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A marriage proposal is worthy of your serious consideration. Let loved one know the extent of your feelings. A voice from the past could upset your emotional applecart.

(57.25), 4x400 relay and the 200 dash (26.22).

However, U.R.I. was tough in the 20-pound weight event and the shot put taking the top three spots and top two respectively.

Freshman Tracie Marrow was impressive for UMass, though, qualifying for New England Championships with a throw of 38'11" in the shot, good enough for third place.

"Tracie is one of many on the team who qualified for New Englands," LaFreniere said. "I would say that about 90 percent of the team did qualify.".

Another standout for the Minutewomen was Meeks, also a freshman. In the triple jump, Meeks tied the UMass school record with a jump of 37',6-1/2". The record she tied was her own from earlier this season.

"Janey [Meeks] ran a great meet," LaFreniere said."Kelly Leljeblad also ran solidly, winning the mile run with a time of 4:59.7.

"Overall, I am very happy with our effort. This is our best team win so far this year. These girls really deserved this."

And this weekend's Valentine Invitational tournament?

"The Inivitational is non-scoring so it's a good chance for the girls to improve their qualifying times for New Englands and ECACs," LaFreniere said. "It's really a fun meet since we don't have to worry about scoring points, but of course I'd still like to do well as a team."

Is success enough to keep Calipari?

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

In the eyes of University of Massachusetts basketball fans, Coach John Calipari can do no wrong.

He is chic and charismatic, but above all, he's a winner.

At the end of this season, Calipari's original four-year contract, which now pays him upwards of $76,000 per year plus perks, will expire (although it does include a "roll-over" clause which automatically renews the contract for another four years).

If he leaves for greener pastures, he may be remembered in these parts as the man who took a once-dead basketball program to national prominence in just four years, then left.

Can you imagine the pressure to win the next coach who comes here would face?

"It would be one of the tougher jobs in the East," said UMass assistant coach Bill Bayno. "Whoever comes in is at an extreme disadvantage."

Calipari has set the standards for UMass. With nationally-televised games on ESPN and a brief stint in the Top 25 this season, anything less in the upcoming years just will not suffice.

At age 32, Calipari is recognized as one of the hottest young coaches in America. In addition, he is an excellent recruiter, as his record would indicate. He is on the verge of inking Donta Bright, one of the top high school prospects in the country, and he has already signed one of New York City's finest players, Dana Dingle, for next year.

Now the question is, will he be around to coach the players he is bringing in?

John Calipari is happy with his position on the UMass sidelines. . .

"I want to be here," Calipari said. "I want to be the coach here. I have no intentions of leaving. My family enjoys it here. I enjoy the students. I enjoy the atmosphere. I enjoy what we are being able to build from the ground up and I don't want to leave. But it's like anything else — decisions will be made that will make that decision for me."

Some of those decisions include how much the University can afford to pay him and whether it is really committed to building a Top 25 program.

On the surface, it appears UMass is indeed serious about basketball, as the building of Mullins Arena, a multi-sport complex scheduled to open in the spring of 1993, would indicate.

"The University will do everything in its power to keep him," said Athletic Director Frank McInerney. "I have no idea how much money we will have to pay him to keep him. I don't want to lose him. But he's one of the hottest young coaches in the nation and if a school (with a renowned basketball program) comes and offers him a job, we won't be able to do anything."

Calipari isn't asking to be paid what coaches from the Big East or Atlantic Coast Conference make per se. He only wants to be compared to coaches in the Atlantic 10.

Although Temple University officials would not disclose Coach John Chaney's contract, sources say the base salary is around $300,000 per year. Rutgers University's student newspaper, The Daily Targum, estimated Coach Bob Wentzel's base salary to be $100,000.

"There is no set dollar figure that I have in my mind," Calipari said. "You have to judge by what's being done in our league. I'm not saying let's look at what's happening at Syracuse, Boston College or Providence. I'm not competing against them. But let's look what's done at West Virginia, Rutgers, Temple and George Washington, because that is who I am competing against.

"There is no set. . . this is what I have to get," he said. "I'm not even worried about that. Let's just make sure we are on even footing with everybody, and if we are, then I'm happy."

"I think he will stay," McInerney said. "I think he's intrigued about what he can do with the new facility. The "roll-over" clause enables him to tell recruits that he's going to be around for the full four years."

Since his team was invited to the National Invitation Tournament in 1990, people have had Calipari abandoning ship and coaching everywhere from Syracuse to a Big 8 school. But after each season, he comes back, and the team gets better and plays beyond expectations.

In 1988-89, his first season at UMass, the Minutemen finished with a 10-18 record. What he most remembers about that year was an incident involving seniors David Brown and Duane Chase. The two were arrested and charged with the unarmed burglary of an Amherst home.

Immediately after that disruption, Calipari suspended them indefinitely and the team went on a five-game losing streak.

"The break-in was the major thing in my mind because it was a hard thing to swallow as a coach," Calipari said. "The image and perception of the program was on that. The Boston papers and television were here. We couldn't get them here for anything else. But they were here for that.

"Then at the end of the year, my biggest thing was our young kids fought and played and never quit," he said. "We won five league games when we shouldn't have won any."

In 1990, the Minutemen gelled at the end of the season, advancing to the finals of the A-10 tournament, where they fell to Temple, 53-51, three points shy of the

. . .but he may jump at a chance to leave.

Conference's automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

They ended the season 17-14 after a first round loss in the NIT to Maryland and people began speculating how long Calipari would stay in Amherst, not exactly a basketball haven.

Last year, the team went all the way to the Final Four of the NIT, before losing to Stanford University in the semifinals.

If this year's team does make the NCAA tournament, tempting new job offers may come Calipari's way.

"I can't see him staying here too long," Bayno said. "If a Big East school comes calling, it wouldn't be smart for him to stay. There is only so much UMass can pay him. I can't see him staying here the rest of his life."

If he leaves, Bayno may be the man to fill his shoes. He was an assistant to Larry Brown at Kansas in 1987 and began his coaching career as an assistant to P.J. Carlesimo at Seton Hall.

For now, Calipari appears happy in Amherst, but for how long?

UMass women's hoop travels to West Virginia

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team (4-16, 0-9 in the Atlantic 10) is in Morgantown, W. VA tonight to face the 19th-ranked West Virginia Mountaineers (17-2, 9-0).

It will be a difficult task, but the Minutewomen will be looking for a little payback after being blown out by the Mountaineers, 94-69, two weeks ago at the Curry Hicks Cage. UMass was in the game for the first 16 minutes before West Virginia's All-American candidate Rosemary Kosiorek took over, finishing with 31 points.

The score represented the highest point total the UMass defense has allowed, and also the highest output the offense has produced.

The Minutewomen are playing for the first time in a week, as their last game was a tough 72-65 loss to St. Bonaventure last Thursday.

"I think the week off was very beneficial," said UMass assistant coach Jill Rooney. "Trish [Riley] can get a little bit of rest and we had chance to do some conditioning."

Riley, a senior point guard, has been nursing a sore back throughout the season, but played a season-high 32 minutes against St. Bonaventure.

"West Virginia is very tough at home," Rooney said. "They have a very big fan backing. I don't think they're going to look beyond us. In the first game we didn't take good care of the ball. We made a lot of turnovers that they turned into uncontested layups.

The Mountaineers are so tough at home that a win tonight will give them their 15th consecutive home victory, tying the West Virginia school record. They are also going for their 15th straight overall win.

"We'll take better care of the ball," Rooney said. "We are playing better defense. In the first game we lost sight of [West Virginia's Rosemary] Kosiorek and she hit a couple of 3s. We'll try to pick everyone up this time."

Women's indoor track upsets Rhode Island

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Before last weekend's quad-meet at Rhode Island, University of Massachusetts women's indoor track coach Julie LaFreniere had her team matched dead even with arch rival University of Rhode Island.

For the first time in many years, LaFreniere thought the Minutewomen had a chance to come out of the competition with a victory if they ran a good meet.

Much to her delight, they ran a great meet, beating the Lady Rams, 61-55. The University of New Hampshire finished third with 55 points, followed by the Crusaders of Holy Cross, with 13.

"I am absolutely elated about this win," LaFreniere said. "We haven't beat Rhode Island in a long time. It's a sweet victory."

For most of this "heart-stopper of a meet" (as LaFreniere called it), UMass trailed. In fact, going into the last two events, it was behind U.R.I. by one point; that's when UMass stole the show.

Led by the team of Kerry Aker, Maureen Meldrim, Kim Liljebald and Lenice Johnson, the Minutewomen won the 4x800 relay in exciting fashion with a time of 9:34.0.

"Everyone was on their feet and cheering for that race," LaFreniere said. "U.R.I. took a quick 100-yard lead and maintained that for most of the race. Kim [Liljeblad] ran a great third leg and handed off to Becky [Johnson], who somehow caught up to the leader on the last turn and won the race."

UMass also took the 4x400 relay in a time of 4:09.48. Janey Meeks, Johnson, Leanne Swartz and Lee Ann Ambrose were the victors.

Ambrose had one of her best meets of the year, winning three events, the 400

Official word arrives on Reid resignation

Coach considering Richmond offer

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Jim Reid officially resigned as head football coach of the University of Massachusetts yesterday and now must consider whether he wants to be the assistant head coach and defensive coordinator at the University of Richmond.

Reid, who verbally resigned on Jan. 23 after learning the football budget was being cut $100,000, met with Chancellor Richard O'Brien yesterday morning to dot the i's and cross the t's on his letter of resignation.

"The only quote is, it's done and it's over," Reid said. "Now we move ahead quickly for the University to find a coach and for Jim Reid to find employment."

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney said the search for a new coach will begin as soon as Whitmore gives the authorization to do so.

"I kept hoping he would come back," McInerney said. "It's a great loss to the University."

Richmond football coach Jim Marshall confirmed yesterday, Reid has been offered a job as the assistant head coach and defensive coordinator.

It would appear the Richmond Department of Athletics may be planning on Reid taking over the football program in the near future, although they deny that.

"Nothing's been discussed about him taking over the head coaching job," said Richmond Athletic Director Chuck Boone. "I'm familiar with Jim Reid and I'd be happy to have him here. He's a class act."

Marshall, 44, has been at Richmond for three seasons and in those years, the Spiders are a woeful 4-29 (2-9 in 1991).

"Jim Marshall told me that if I come down there with him, he would extend my contract two years beyond his," Reid said. "We're good friends. My answer to him was that I would never even consider doing that. If I go down there, I would be tied into the contracts like all the other coaches and we'd fight it out to survive all together."

Reid also said Marshall was angry he would not accept the contract extension, but said, "there's no room for that [type of competition within a staff]."

"I've been told by people that football is a business, and I think they're right," Reid said. "But when I start thinking like that [about taking a friend's job], then I get out of the game. It's as simple as that.

"I've got to decide what's best for my family," Reid said. "I'm going to sit down with my wife after the Temple game and decide what to do."

Student found guilty

Threatened two with rape over phone

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

A 20-year-old sophomore history major was found guilty yesterday at the Northampton District Court on two counts of threat to commit a crime — calling two undergraduate women last semester on the phone and threatening them with rape.

Gregory S. Reitman, 20, of Kennedy Residence Hall, and New York City, made the calls to two separate women on two separate occasions on or about Dec. 5, said Phil Cavanaugh of the UMass Police Department.

Reitman allegedly used the University's phone system and left two messages on the the voice mail system. Police were able to trace the messages back to Reitman's room.

A show/cause hearing was heard in early January when a Clerk Magistrate ruled that there was sufficient evidence of guilt on the first complaint and insufficient evidence on the second complaint.

UMass Police and the District Attorney's office appealed the Clerk Magistrate's ruling on the insufficient evidence complaint, and a trial date was set for Feb. 13, said Cavanaugh.

Shortly before 1 pm yesterday, Reitman's lawyer apparently decided not to block the district attorney's office and UMass Police's decision to try and get an over-ruling of the clerk magistrate's earlier finding on the second complaint.

According to Cavanaugh, Judge Robert Kumor ruled that there was sufficient evidence presented by the Commonwealth to warrant a finding of guilty on both complaints, but continued each complaint without finding until Dec. 11, 1993.

"I am satisfied that the charges were an accurate reflection of the defendant's conduct," said Frederic Bartmon, the prosecuter in this case.

Reitman was placed on one year's probation and must pay a monthly probation fee of $30. He will undergo an evaluation to determine if alcohol or general counseling is warranted.

In addition he was ordered to write apologies to the two women as well as stay away from them.

He was also ordered to provide 40 hours of community service to a rape counseling program or similar service so he can see

Not all students take Valentine's Day to heart

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Valentine's Day is one of many holidays that causes more people to feel sad and angry instead of the supposed "cheerfulness" that it was intended to create.

Many UMass students have a differing opinion on this holiday which has been worked into the educational system of the United States, starting in elementary school.

"Valentine's Day means that a lot of people are spending money," said Theda Bronson, a senior English major.

"It is ridiculous for people to expect monetary gifts, because you cannot buy love," she said.

But not everyone shares these same feelings, including Bronson's friend Kim Lamon, also a senior majoring in English.

"The whole concept of Valentine's Day is that it's a romantic occasion, to spend time with your significant other," said Lamon.

If Lamon is correct in this definition of Valentine's Day, then what do people do that do not have a "significant other?"

"I think that it is over-rated because there are those who don't have someone to share it with," said Sharon Schachter, a senior psychology major.

Since it is a Friday night, refuge can be

Story aims to be independent voice

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the last installment in a six-part series profiling the candidates for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat.

Democrat Ellen Story of Amherst proudly points to her record of independent action and achievement to show that she will live up to her campaign slogan and be a "fresh voice for tough times," rather than a member of the "old boy network."

Story, who is on leave from her job of 18 years at the Western Massachusetts Family Planning Council, is competing with Terry Franklin and Jon Hite of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham for the Democratic nomination in the race for the Third Hampshire District's state representative's seat on Feb. 18. The general election will be held on March 17.

In 1978, Story coordinated a group of Democrats and Independents in support of Republican gubernatorial candidate Frank Hatch, who she said was much more liberal than eventual winner Ed King, a Democrat who Story described as "reactionary." Although Hatch lost statewide, he won in the three counties she coordinated.

Story, whose husband Ronald is a history professor at UMass, said her family has a long history of involvement in higher education. Her father and grandfather were both English professors while her brother and brother's wife are professors, all of whom have taught at public universities.

"I have a background that gives me a unique understanding of public higher education and makes me a perfect advocate for it," Story said.

Story, who said people tend to "respond to her in positive ways," said her success in working with people at the Family Planning Council could prove to be an asset if she is elected to the legislature.

Summer!

Summer in Boulder, Colorado. Who can describe it? You won't want to miss it. Here's your chance to make the summer of '92 one you'll always remember.

Think community. The Boulder campus takes on a special quality in the summer. Faculty come to class in shorts. Small discussion groups meet under the trees on the lawn. You find yourself part of a comfortable learning community—who work, study, or just relax together.

Think challenge. Choose from over 500 courses, including archaeological field study in Steamboat Springs, production with the Colorado Shakespeare Festival, an intensive Spanish institute, a biology field course on plants of Colorado, performance with the Colorado Lyric Theatre festival, and much more.

Think money. Tuition in the summer is lower than during the following academic year.

Think outdoors. Colorado has more than 1,000 spectacular peaks soaring above 10,000 feet and 53 peaks over 14,000 feet. Boulder has parks, open space, and hiking and biking trails galore. Boulder is the place to be outdoors

SGA urges voters to get out to polls

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association will sponsor a "Get out the Vote" drive next Tuesday to urge registered student voters to participate in the Democratic primary for State Representative.

SGA officials say volunteers will go door to door on campus, offering voters transportation to the polls. According to Public Policy Chair Matt Pavesi, this tactic has been used before with successful results.

"We did it in the Congressional primary last year, and we got 240 students to go vote," Pavesi said.

Since this election is so linked to student interests, SGA Treasurer Sharon Lang said, a project facilitating a student vote is essential to a successful turnout.

"We want them to have their voices heard, so we try to make it as easy as possible," she said.

Because residential areas are located in different voting precincts, the SGA has printed a flyer indicating where on-campus residents should go to vote.

Registered Southwest residents can vote at the Bangs Community Center on Kellogg Avenue. Students residing in Southwest South should inform election officials that they reside in district four, while those living in Southwest North should give notice that they reside in district ten.

Orchard Hill and Van Meter residents should vote at the North Fire Station on East Pleasant Street. All Northeast and Sylvan residents can vote at the Immanuel Lutheran Church Lounge located at 867 North Pleasant Street. Finally, Central residents can vote at the Wildwood School on Strong Street.

All registered students needing a ride to the polls or additional voting information should call the SGA office at 545-0341.

L.A. Law compared to reality

Discrimination said rampant in the world of law

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

The popular TV show L.A. Law is far from what it's really like in the legal profession, said a Legal Studies professor at Wednesday's brown bag lunch lecture.

Dianne Brooks, a graduate of Harvard Law School contrasted the glamorous lives seen on such hit TV series like L.A. Law with "how dread it can be in real life."

"Dealing with the socratic method of teaching is humiliating and particularly alienates women and people of color," Brooks said, describing the routine of many of her professors. "They would do blatant things as calling men by their last names and women as 'Miss so and so.'"

Brooks recalled the "chilled environment" in many law classes where "there was no room for non-traditional thinking. If you brought up an argument or an alternative perspective, the professor would humiliate you. There was an emphasis on power dynamics," she said.

"It's always really nice to tell people that your kids are lawyers," said Brooks, while adding that there is more dissatisfaction in the law profession than any other occupation.

There are no tenured women, people of color, or open lesbians, gays, or bisexuals in the field of law, Brooks said, and a "very small number" of women or people of color teaching.

"They steer women and people of color towards teaching neutral courses," said Brooks.

Remembering feeling intimidated in law school, she noticed a "freezing out of women's voices." One day, Brooks said she realized "I'm not the only women who feels her opinions don't matter."

Comparing the smart, decorative, glamorous women from L.A. Law who do everything to the reality of having a hard time getting a job in law if you're overweight, Blacks or Hispanics, for example. "You're more likely to get a job if you have Anne Taylor suits," Brooks said as she discussed what women have to go through to mirror the image of what a women lawyer is supposed to be.

Brooks discussed certain problems facing women. "Sexual harrassment goes on unreported, despite the pretty picture we get from L.A Law, although it is beginning to be talked about," said Brooks. "Women are unfortunately expected to be caretakers at home."

She then shared an experience when one of her professors asked her "Why aren't you at home, you have such a pretty face?" She also remembers during interviews being asked if she was married and if she had kids.

The problem of how to integrate women into the working profession was also touched upon by Brooks. "Women get shuffled off into more feminine parts of practice," said Brooks, adding there "are still some really old guys left with conservative views."

Brooks also brought up the problems of transitioning from school into a profession. She mentioned the way one is steered into Corporate Law and discouraged from Legal Studies.

Failing to maintain a quorum last night because a lack of member attendance, the University of Massachusetts Board of Governors had to adjourn before completing the evenings agenda.

The student organization, which oversees the management of the Campus Center building and its activities, had to go into a special quorum procedure at one point because a two-thirds quorum wasn't present.

This forced the board to move into a "special committee" allowing them to continue the meeting

Micah Levy, BOG Chair, expressed his disappointment with student activism concerning the BOG.

Iraq ravaged by war, experts say

Elizabeth Benjamin and Roger Normand, members of the Harvard Study Team who visited Iraq in April and September of 1991, presented their findings on the health and legal assessment of the Gulf War to a sparse audience at Hampshire College last night. The talk was part of the Five College Peace and World Security Studies Program's Spring Lecture Series.

Benjamin said that despite the ending of Operation Desert Storm, the suffering of the people of Iraq continues unabated. "In 1991, 100,000 children died in Iraq because of U.S.-imposed economic sanctions," she said.

Prior to the war, 90 per cent of the people of Iraq had free health care, Benjamin said. "But the destruction of plants for water purification, sewage treatment, and generation of electrical power, coupled with a stifling embargo on vaccines, antibiotics, and syringes, has led to hospital death rates increasing by up to three times," she said.

Benjamin said that more than 50 per cent of the drinking water in Iraq is contaminated with fecal matter. "In addition to cholera and typhoid, diseases like gastroenteritis are causing slow deaths by dehydration," she said.

"Sanitation is very poor — raw sewage was backed up in some wards, and there was no soap to wash the blood in maternity wards," Benjamin said. As for food supplies, more than one third of the children in Iraq, or one million children, are malnourished, she added.

"There is no doubt that the U.S. willfully wrought this catastrophe on the people of Iraq," Benjamin said. She also said that the U.S. was one of the few countries in the world which had not yet signed the UNICEF Declaration for Children's Rights.

"Countries on the Sanctions Committee, like India, condemn the sanctions on Iraq as absurd, but the U.S. consistently uses its veto on any proposal to lift sanctions," Benjamin said.

In fact, the administration says that they do not dispute reports on the food and health conditions in Iraq, but instead blame it all on Saddam Hussein, she said.

Roger Normand said not only the American media but also the legal profession completely bought the Administration line on the war. "Several legal journals claim that the U.S. conduct in the war was legal," he said.

Normand said the pattern of bombing ensured that it would be difficult for Iraqis to rebuild their nation. "A lot of the bombing did not have a military effect — it was clear that the agenda was long-term economic devastation," he said.

"If you take any six-week period after the war, more Iraqis died during that period than during the war," Normand said. Although international aid goes into Iraq, the aid is based solely on charity, he said. "But this amount is scarcely enough for a nation of 18 million which used to import 70 percent of its food," Normand said.

When asked about the response among U.S. citizens to the findings of their team which visited Iraq twice, Normand said the low turnout at his past presentations has been discouraging and disappointing. In fact, the talk at Hampshire College drew only about 25 people.

"The Gulf War is not an issue among Americans any more," said Normand. "People are now turning inward; even though the war is far from over for the people of Iraq, it is over for us now — so it doesn't matter," he said.

For the people of America, the Gulf War was "like a football game," with no attention being paid to the magnitude of the human suffering involved, Normand said.

Lecturer talks on oppressed women in Iran

By STACY MALONE
Collegian Correspondent

The years between 1905-1911 brought the ambiguity of the Persian word for woman and wife, the voting of women and the rise of women as people in Iran, said a visiting lecturer from the Islamic Studies department yesterday in The Middle East Lecture Series.

Entitled Women or Wives of the Nations: Discourses of Parity and Protection and the Iranian Constitution and presented by Afsaneh Najmabadi, the lecture provided a history of the women of Iran and the start of their revolution against oppression.

Even by the turn of the twentieth century it was almost impossible to determine in the Persian language whether someone was speaking of a woman or a wife, said Najmabadi, adding that there was a conflict between the ideas of women as people and women as man's subject.

Najmabadi mentioned how Iran's first Parliament on March 11, 1908 discussed the prohibition of women's associations and how the second Parliment in August of 1911 concentrated on the continuing trend of women not having the right to vote.

As Najmabadi lectured on the treatment of women during this Iranian time period, the reoccurring theme that "women are of the weak ones and men are in charge of them" was represented in every manner of the lives of the women in the nation.

The political language of the period was centered around the males, like the term "general public" did not include women nor children, said Najmabadi. The "act of salvation" was for men to achieve national sovereignty and display masculinity by protecting their wives, she said.

The coinciding relationship between women and wealth even allowed the Iranian men "to sell their daughters to pay their taxes," said Najmabadi, adding that the Iranian women were "brought up to only bare children" and satisfy the needs of society through the eyes of men.

It was not until the year 1906 that women began to write letters concerning the activities of women, form associations and challenge the politics of men in order to make women part of the nation of Iran, stated Najmabadi as she read several articles written by women of this time period.

Many of the letters were very satirical and challenged all aspects of the oppression they received from Iranian men and the Iranian government, she said.

The letters were exposed to the public in the Constitutional Press and the first women's journal in 1910. At first the letters were unsigned as they voiced opinions contrary to the time, but gradually the letters were signed in a context to the relationship of the men in their family, she said. As the women in the Iranian society began to form their own associations they acquired their own identities and their letters came attached with names.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Vote for Jon Hite

Next Tuesday is the Democratic primary in the special election to fill the Third Hampshire district's state representative seat.

After four straight years of declining state appropriations to the University, Gov. Weld proposes the University retain 100 percent of its tuition money. A recent Boston Globe editorial said "full retention would serve as an excuse for those members of the Legislature who fail to appreciate the importance of public higher education, and the governor, to reduce or end the state's responsiblity for maintaining a vital institution."

Among the four candidates, Amherst's Jon Hite, a UMass graduate who has served as the University's director of Alumni Affairs and helped lead the fight for increased funding for the University in the past, is the strongest opponent of the plan.

Ellen Story, who in her 18 years family planning has been a forceful advocate for the needs of low-income women and children, favors a plan where UMass retains one-third of tuition, with the state providing two-thirds of the University's budget.

Pelham's Norman Page, a UMass graduate who has worked at the University for 20 years and served on numerous boards and committees in the past 25 years, wants the University to keep tuition as a small percentage of the University's budget and have the Legislature provide a more stable flow of money.

Amherst's Terry Franklin, a strong environmentalist, opposes the plan, but wants the University to retain the 30 percent of tuition it currently keeps until another funding source is found.

All the candidates advocate a more progressive tax structure, a woman's freedom of choice and have promised to fight hard for the University.

However, Jon Hite has proven in the past that he is willing and able to fight for the University against the consensus on Beacon Hill.

We urge the endorsement of Jon Hite on Feb. 18. He will follow in the footsteps of this district's fine and articulate representation set by Jim Collins, John Olver and Stan Rosenberg.

Unsigned editorials represent the views and opinions of a majority of the Board of Editors.

University? It's all greek to me

One day as I was walking on campus, I began to think about how fortunate I am to be a part of the Greek area. It is kind of funny because I never really considered going through rush until one of my friends asked me to go to the orientation meeing with her. I never realized how involved the greek area in university life. I think it is a shame that our Greek area doesn't get more support because the sororities and fraternities at UMass do so many good things for the university and community. Last semester, the Greek area raised over $30,000 during the Newman Center Phone-a-Thon to benefit the Newman Center. We also take part in Boltwood Project which works with special needs individuals. During homecoming weekend, fraternities and sororities joined together to raise money for the general well being of the university. The members of the greek area were also responsible for manning the table selling cards to raise money for the tower library to keep campus resources up to date. Besides helping our university and community, it also opens you up to all kinds of opportunities that you never would have been able to participate in in the dorms. We have our own interfraternity inramural sports, workshops and guest speakers that come to talk to the Greek area. Although the university is so large, with so many sisters and brothers, it is impossible to feel alone. I would like to encourage more people to learn about the Greek area, I know it is the best thing I have ever done.

Paying for racial violence

Yesterday, Coach Jim Reid formally resigned as head football coach of the UMass Men's football team. After six years at the position, he's left behind quite an imprint on the University.

What kind of imprint? Well, for starters, one only has to ask the student population how they feel about the players he coaches. I did, and I found the responses to be quite surprising.

Martin F. Jones

On Wednesday, Feb. 5, the Collegian ran a story on a disturbance at the Malcolm X Cultural Center in which a brief reference was made to a violent incident involving members of the football team and a student fraternity. The article also indicated that the case was under investigation. Coach Reid called the Collegian, saying that he was never notified of the incident. I spoke to the student who was involved in the incident. He is a member of a Black fraternity and has claimed charges of assault and battery against specified members of the football team. He has also identified these players by name to the Dean of Students. This incident occurred last December. Yet on Wednesday, Feb. 5, Coach Reid was still totally in the dark about the incident.

The reports of violence are lengthy. The famous Southwest "race riot" of 1986 involved members of the football team attacking members of Iota Phi Theta, a Black fraternity on campus. The incident that occurred last semester at the Hampden Student Center has resulted in assault and battery charges being brought up on the team for attacking a member of another Black fraternity.

Why is there a pattern of violence against the Black fraternities by members of the football team? One theory implicates Coach Jim Reid himself. One person said that, "Coach Reid doesn't like the Black fraternities." According to this person, Coach Reid banned them from pledging in the fraternities, calling them "Black Hate groups." This player also testified that Coach Reid discouraged them from participating in any of the Black student organizations, even during the off season. Did I believe my own ears? Well, in doing a survey among the Black student organizations and fraternities, I found there to be practically zero support from the athletes, even after the season had finished.

Is it possible that the antagonism that exists between athletes and students could be perpetuated by the athletic department? Is it in any way conceivable that those White members of the football team who chased and beat Black fraternity members could have been motivated to attack an organization that Coach Jim Reid described as a "Black Hate group?" The Southwest race riot was written off as a "general racial incident." As a result the entire student population was held responsible for the racism surrounding the incident and classes on cultural diversity were implemented into the general curriculum as a remedy. If the theory about Coach Reid's role in the Southwest incident is true, it would stand then that the White students of the university have become scapegoats for the racist activities of Coach Jim Reid and the rest of the athletic department.

In interviewing students across the campus on the issue of violence, the story has basically been the same: the athletes at the university are committing acts of violence against the students on campus. The biggest grievance that the students had was that there is nothing they can do to protect themselves. They all felt that the athletes were being protected by the University and cited the campus and local police as active participants. They also believed that any attempt to press charges against the athletes would prove to be futile.

Regardless of your race or gender, you might very well become the next victim of these so called "gangs" whose next assault could result in a student getting killed. What is so ironic is that you are paying for their education. You are also cheering for them at the athletic events. The saddest part of all is that the university doesn't even care enough for your well being to protect your safety and rights as a human being. The University does, however, have a vested interest in protecting their athletes, for they are the ones who bring revenue and publicity to the University.

Any University that values its athletes over its students is a disgrace to public higher education. Don't ever forget who pays for the operating expenses for the athletic department and the rest of the University. I have no intention of paying over $10,000 a year for my very own beating courtesy of the UMass Minutemen. It's not worth it. Based on the existing state of affairs at UMass, you, myself and the rest of the student population can and should hold the athletic department and the university administration liable for gross negligence based on their refusal to deal with the violence that continues to plague this campus. Students should also consider calling for an investigation into the widespread campus racism in which the athletic department could very well be a major player.

It's your school, your tuition, your education, your safety, and your life. You can accept this sad state of affairs at UMass/Amherst or you can make a conscious decision to stop the violence, the racism and the corruption that is hurting us all.

Martin F. Jones is a UMass student

The greatest American hero: Mr. Walter Elias Disney

If someone were to ask me who would be on my list of great Americans if I were to compile one, I would list a lot of political and sports heroes, and some artists and religious men as well. But way up at the top of my list, I would put a man who was as influential as any other on American culture in the twentieth century: Walter Elias Disney.

While I don't want to get bogged down in specifics (If you want specifics, you're obviously reading the wrong guy), I will say what I appreciate about the life of Walt Disney.

The only thing that Disney wanted to do was create cartoons that would entertain people. Along with the help of his brother, Walt was able to scrape up enough money for years while handling rejection after rejection pursuing his dream.

That is why I admire Disney so much. Like another great American, Abraham Lincoln, Disney took hundreds of rejections before he finally succeeded. Disney believed in the American dream, that any man can make a success of himself if he works hard enough (Are all of you Marxists out there reading this?), and his sketches of Mickey Mouse finally broke through in the cartoon "Steamboat Willie," which propelled him to success.

Most thought that Disney's amusement park in Anaheim, California was a risky venture, but its success was only a preview of Disney's ultimate legacy.

As usual, the naysayers and doomsdayers came out in full force when Disney bought the land in Florida, and even negotiated a "sovereignty" clause, which entitled the locals to lay off, and allowed Disney to rule how he wanted to.

It's mind-boggling to think that one man could turn 27,000 acres of swampland, which most thought he was crazy to buy, into America's playground. More importantly, the world's playground, because Disney World bridges the communication gap and has been the country's biggest tourist attraction.

Michael Morrissey

One of the unfortunate things about Disney's life is that he never saw the fruition of his biggest challenge: a theme park called EPCOT. Disney died in 1966, but EPCOT was built the way Walt wanted it, and has pleased millions of people.

Walt Disney fought tirelessly for what he believed in, and didn't compromise. He was a man of high ideals and huge dreams who made a better life for himself and millions of others. One could say he even built a city (Orlando), but more importantly, he made his dreams come true.

I will never forget the first time that my family went to Disney World, and the first impressions that I had.

I saw Cinderella's Castle and I was absolutely awe-struck. The architecture of the Castle and other buildings at Disney World is impeccable, it conveys an image of everything that's good in the United States. The rides are able to take young and old alike through a gamut of emotions, from fear to glee, and everything in between.

It wasn't just the rides and stores that amazed me as a 10-year old, but the atmosphere. Disney advocated cleanliness to the nth degree, and Disney World and Disneyland certainly are clean. You get the feeling of, "What if the United States could be like this?"

Being the nationalist young tyke I was (and am), EPCOT certainly gave me a jolt of something different. The different cultures that I learned about from a theme park gave me a slightly new way to look at my place in the world. From the moment I saw it, I wanted to climb at the top of the geosphere and just look down on the world.

With Spring Break on the horizon, I look forward to the possibility of going to Disney World, EPCOT, and the relatively new kid, MGM Studios. I suggest to those that are going to booze and have sex on the beaches in Florida, take a one-day excursion and relive your childhood.

Better yet, visit the old theater on Main Street that shows "The Walt Disney Story" and appreciate one of the finest Americans who ever lived.

■ Story

"I'm good at bridging the gap between parents and teenagers and being popular with both groups," Story said. "I can explain to the university community what it is like in the legislature and I can talk to legislators who resent professors making more money than they do — I'm very qualified to talk to both groups about the other."

Story said she is very concerned about the rising costs of tuition at the University, noting that rising costs provide a real danger to the future quality of the institution.

"People understand the consequences if tuition goes any higher — we'll have to lower standards and take people who no one else wants," Story said.

Story, a University of Texas graduate, said she believes there is the potential to build a coalition in the Legislature which is supportive of higher education. She noted roughly half the legislators in Texas are graduates of the University of Texas system, providing a powerful lobby for higher education.

Story said there is currently a group of roughly 32 legislators who she feels she can work with on higher education issues. She said there is the potential for a "labor-liberal" alliance, along the lines of Pennsylvania, using partnership between the public and private sector to work together on higher education issues.

One of the major issues among the four Democrats is Gov. Weld's proposal for the University to move toward retaining 100 percent of the tuition money it takes in. The University currently retains approximately 30 percent of tuition money, with the remainder going into the state's general fund.

Story said members of the University community need to concentrate more on gaining higher state appropriations rather than attempting to roll back tuition retention.

"The real fight can't be to roll back tuition retention, because that would have devastating consequences and it would fail," Story said. "The real fight has to be to restore state appropriations so we can hold the line on tuition increases."

Hite favors a total rollback of tuition retention while Page wants the University to retain 10-20 percent of tuition to create a "margin of excellence." Though Franklin opposes retention, he wants the University to retain the current 30 percent it keeps until an alternative source of funding can be found.

Story, who has been considered the favorite for much of the race, said she doesn't mind the role of front-runner and the pressure it brings.

■ BOG

"In the past few months there has been complete student apathy, there isn't enough people on the board to fill committees so things don't get done," Levy said

Saying that dedicated BOG members are hard to find, Levy also said graduate students have also contributed to the apathy because of their lack of support.

"Graduates use this building and graduates deserve to have a voice on this board," he said.

Levy said the Student Government Association publicly defends the Board but behind the scenes gives little if any support.

"We have common goals, but there's still a lot of belief in the SGA that the board doesn't do anything..." Levy said.

Claiming that collective apathy has created the current situation, Levy said that the board has only 5% of the influence that it once had ten years ago.

In addition, Levy fears the administration will take over the BOG's operations if it disintegrates.

Mr. Lupo gives his own Final Analysis

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Slickness and atmosphere have reached new heights (or lows, depending on your taste for this stuff) in Final Analysis, a slippery thriller that borrows elements from Vertigo and is the latest attempt at Hitchcockian suspense.

Two beautiful sisters are playing a rather deadly mind game with Dr. Isaac Barr (Richard Gere). One sister, Diana (Uma Thurman), is being treated for her dreams and gamely offers her sister Heather to the doctor for possible clues to their past family. Heather (Kim Basinger) is all too willing to help. But she has problems of her own, namely a crooked, mean husband (Eric Roberts) and a nagging case of 'pathological intolerance'—meaning she's prone to violence with just a sip of alcohol (didn't she play that same character in Blind Date?).

Soon, the law of movie sex comes in (that is, the two sexy leads must have sex at least once, regardless of husbands or ethics) and Gere beds down with Basinger. When Roberts is murdered, things start getting very, very tricky. With a premise like this, it better really pay off. The result is an over-calculated who's-crossing-who that's all plot and movie tricks and no drama.

The Box Office

Unlike Dead Again which seemed to revel in its own absurdity, Final Analysis is far too stagey to be any fun. When the denoument begins, the audience is shown how ridiculously intricate the plot is. Like the recently overrated Hand that Rocks the Cradle, everything having to do with the ending is put on display in the first hour — even down to the bumps in the road. It was if screenwriter Wesely Strick (Cape Fear) has painstakingly provided a logical or prestated reason for every surprise. But now, with all the evidence put out before us, it becomes predictable nonsense.

Final Analysis is better than your average thriller garbage. It does contain some clever, if not new, twists. Stylish and moody, director Phil Joanou (State of Grace) bathes the characters in darkness and Strick has scripted well-paced scenes, but it's no "Cape Fear." Fans of Vertigo will notice the many homages, but that just shows how un-original this film is.

In between his intense roles in An Officer and a Gentleman and Internal Affairs, Richard Gere has had a way of floating through his other characters. He's not bad here, but he's just here. Kim Basinger (once and for all, its BAY-singer) uses her overt sexuality to the limit in Final Analysis but she's just there, going through the motions.

The most interesting performance came from Uma Thurman (Dangerous Liaisons) as Diana, the sister on the couch. She makes the best out of a truly underwritten role.

Final Analysis is the perfect example of how thrillers, as a genre, play with us. The better ones inject other elements and play off our own fears, rather than creating it. Final Analysis offers no validity or anything new. It reminded me of one of those Grade Z USA Cable Network thrillers, except this one had a bigger name cast and budget. Stick to the real thing and rent Vertigo.

Elvin Jones plays the Horse

Iron Horse finally garners Jones after six years

By SEMAJ SELOM
Collegian Correspondent

On Monday, Feb. 17, Northampton will play host to one of the biggest gigs to come through the Valley in quite a while. Elvin Jones and his Jazz Machine will be appearing at the Iron Horse, a date which brings to fruition over 6 years of offers from the popular Northampton music venue.

JAZZ SCENE

The group features Sonny Fortune on alto saxophone and flute, Ravi Coltrane (John Coltrane's son) on tenor, Willie Pickens on piano and Chip Jackson (of Jack Walrath's Holy Trinity) on bass violin.

Elvin Ray Jones, the brother of trumpeter Thad and pianist Hank, was born in 1927 in Pontiac, Michigan. A self-taught musician, Jones played in his high school band, moving to the Army's military band in 1946. After leaving the service in 1949 he spent three years at the famed Bluebird club in Detroit, logging time on the bandstand with brother Thad, Billy Mitchell and others.

He appeared at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1955 with Charles Mingus and Teddy Charles, eventually moving to New York in the Spring of 1956 as a member of the Bud Powell trio. During the remainder of the 1950's and early 1960, Jones spent time with many of the top players on the scene including Pepper Adams, Donald Byrd, Tyree Glenn, and Harry Edison.

In 1961 Jones joined up with John Coltrane on the now classic Atlantic date, "My Favorite Things," which was to begin a musical association that would produce some of the most influential music of the last fifty years. Jones was soon joined by pianist McCoy Tyner and bassist Jimmy Garrison to form the rhythm section for the famed John Coltrane Quartet which would last for the next several years.

As part of the Coltrane Quartet, Jones' sound was unmistakable, and provided the constant flood of rhythm that helped to push Coltranes's improvisations. His use of the cymbals to keep a hypnotic melody contrasted with his complex cross rhythms have been as influential to modern day percussionists as Coltrane's sound has been to modern day saxophonists.

The Jazz Machine is an explosive musical force, as Jones has miraculously been able to keep the energy level that he had thirty years ago. He has surrounded himself with some of the most intriguing artists today. Chip Jackson's bass is full and swinging, drawing on the styles of Garrison and Paul Chambers.

His time in Jack Walrath's trio has given him the the space to stretch out and form his own distinct sound. Sonny Fortune, who has been likened to Pharoah Sanders, can unleash a John Gilmore-like squeal, a barrage of notes and a few bars of slow blues all together in a logical, well placed solo.

Willie Pickens tastefully fills out what space is left with his strong lines, and Ravi Coltane's tenor only heightens the overall energy level of the group.

The Elvin Jones Jazz Machine may very well be be a once in a lifetime gig here in the Valley, so unless you travel regularly to Europe or Japan, this is the best time to catch them. If you're unfortunate enough to miss the show, you can at least check out the Machine' latest release on Enja records, "Live in Europe."

The Elvin Jones Jazz Machine will be in concert Monday, Feb. 17 at the IronHorse music club in Northampton. Show time is 7 p.m. Call 584-0610 for tickets and information.

UM men's swimming to defend championship

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team will attempt to defend its New England Championship for the sixth consecutive season this weekend at Bowdoin College.

Having beaten every team that it will face in this meet in the regular season, (with the exception of the University of Connecticut, who they lost to because of a technicality) the Minutemen are entering the meet with a great deal of confidence.

"Our chances at the New Englands are really good," said senior co-captain Bill Chouinard. "UConn has a good team and they're a force to be reckoned with, but our depth will be too much for them to compete with. We have four to five people in every event and most of them can finish in the top 16 [of their event]."

Head coach Russ Yarworth echoed Chouinard's sentiments.

"Connecticut, Providence College and Boston College are all good teams, especially Providence who we only beat by four," Yarworth said. "But when you go into a championship meet you only worry about your own team."

The Minutemen's depth will play a key role in every event, but especially in the relay races. The meet is structured so that qualifying races are held in the morning and the final races are held in the evening.

UMass' depth will enable Yarworth to use two teams in every relay event, saving the top swimmers for the finals. Other teams that lack the Minutemen's depth will be forced to use their best swimmers in both the qualifying and final races.

To prepare for the championship meet, the team has shaved and tapered off the amount of yardage that they usually swim for the past week so that each swimmer will be able to swim his fastest time of the season.

Yarworth said if UMass is going to win, it will have to be a total team effort.

"The whole team has to perform well and swim up to their potential," Yarworth said. "If we go to the meet and everyone scores points, that is all we can ask for. We have trained well and performed well all season and right now we are all tuned up and ready to crank."

Minuteman track team seeks Eastern victory

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Looking to improve upon last year's third place finish, the University of Massachusetts men's track team heads to South Kingston, R.I. tomorrow hoping to knock off defending champion University of Rhode Island at the Eastern Conference Championships.

Last year's contest, in New Haven, Conn., saw URI run away to a 62-point win, with the real contest being the second place battle between host Southern Connecticut and the Minutemen.

The Minutemen would lose that final event, dropping 7 points behind Southern Connecticut and settling for a third place finish.

This year will be much of the same, as the Minutemen will again do battle with So. Conn. and URI for the top three spots, with URI apparently the front runner again.

"Rhode Island is probably the favorite again this year," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "Although I'd have to say that between us, New Hampshire, Maine, and Southern Conn, it'll be a good fight."

The Minutemen enter the meet with a perfect 8-0 record and with a balanced team that can score in just about every event, anything is possible.

"I think that if we expect to win, we have to score at least 100 points," O'Brien said. "If we can break our team down into four groups, and each of those groups can score at least 25-30 points, I think we'll be all right."

Much like the Minutemen, URI also possesses great depth and balance. And with the meet being on the Rhode Island campus, UMass will look to some of the other schools for help.

"It's the kind of meet where we're going to have to score a lot of points ourselves," O'Brien said. "But we also need some of the other teams to maybe knock one or two of URI's big guns out of the top spot."

Although O'Brien expects the Minutemen to look to all corners of their roster for points, the big point events should continue to be the jumping and sprinting, with Joe Kourafas, Kevin Walters and Jeff White leading the way.

"Joe [Kourafas] should be a solid bet to place in two events [High and long jump]," O'Brien said. "And it should be the same crew of sprinters and hurdlers we looked at all year, namely Kevin [Walters] and Jeff [White] that score a lot of points for us."

Men's gymnastics at Temple

Minutemen look to remain unbeaten against rivals

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team is not the only team on campus that sees Temple University as a long time foe. The men's gymnastics team sees them that way also and on Sunday, while the basketball players are battling it out on the court, the premiere gymnasts from both schools will be competing in the gymnasium of Temple's Pearson Hall.

The rivalry between the gymnasts from defending Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Champion Temple and the gymnasts from the undefeated UMass team is immense. UMass has beaten Temple only nine times in the 31-meet history of the two teams, but the meets are always very close and exciting.

Temple is led this year by two extremely talented gymnasts, Billy Roth and Domenique Minicuchi. Roth was the No. 1 ranked gymnast in the country last year until suffering an injury at the mid-way point of the season. Minicuchi was a member of the United States Olympic team and competed at the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, South Korea.

UMass is ranked 21st in the nation and carries a perfect 5-0 record into the meet on Sunday.

UMass head coach Roy Johnson is depending on solid performances from the team's three all-around leaders; juniors Steve Christensen and Calvin Booker, and sophomore Joe Haran.

"Our all-arounds are ready, and if they can hit somewhere around 54.0 points we should be in a good position to beat [Temple]," Johnson said.

Even if both teams get strong performances from their top gymnasts, Temple may still struggle to beat UMass, as Temple is a team currently plagued by injury. Johnson hopes to capitalize on this.

"If there's a chance to beat Temple this season, now is the time," Johnson said. "They are weak right now due to injuries and we plan to use that to our advantage."

Johnson has spent several weeks preparing his team for the tough schedule that lies ahead of it in the second half of the season. He is hoping for a win at Temple as a means of setting the tone.

"A strong showing against Temple, especially a win, will give us a mental edge going into the next two or three weeks," Johnson said. "We will give it our best."

things," Grady said. "From what I've seen, these girls have looked absolutely great. I think we're going to do very well at this meet."

Last year, the Minutewomen scored an impressive victory at So. Conn., 183.45 - 179.65. With much of last year's squad back this season, UMass' chances of winning Saturday look very good.

"Tammy [Marshall], Margaret [Furtado], Erin [Klier], and freshman Gina [Demeo] will be our key performers," Grady said. "If we get good performances from them all-around, [So. Conn.] will have have a very difficult time beating us.

UMass head coach Alfie Mitchell agreed with Grady that after a strong two weeks of practicing and also resting, he is confident the team will perform well.

"We have a very strong team so we're able to bounce back quickly," Mitchell said.

"It's really great to be home, though," Mitchell said. "We'll finally be able to use our own equipment and perform in front of our fans. I'm really looking forward to this meet."

"This weekend will also be a good time to start a winning streak. If we get some momentum going with a victory, hopefully we'll be able to make a run for the Atlantic 10 title and also the Regionals."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Something that has been hidden comes to light. You benefit from taking the advice of trusted friends and family members. Be more discreet about a personal relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A project you guided to completion is widely applauded. Do not forget your New Year's resolutions: Get some exercise every day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Slip into top gear and make your pitch to a prospective client. Originality counts big with those in authority. Romance takes a serious turn when you reveal your intentions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are lucky to have more time to spend on personal projects now. Take an unconventional approach when dealing with a difficult person. Patch up any differences with your loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Success comes when you discuss your long-term plans with professionals. Hold down spending by purchasing only the essentials. News from loved ones at a distance cheers you up.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Teamwork will lead to higher profits. Remember, two heads are better than one. Use any confidential information judiciously. Spending more time with a lonely older person will do you both good.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A secret admirer joins your social circle. A quiet tete-a-tete may hold more appeal than attending a party — it is your choice. Cupid has a lovely surprise in store for you!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Learning new skills will boost both your earning potential and your self-confidence. Do not expect everyone to go along with all your ideas. Romance requires careful thought tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friend or relative offers help if you find yourself in a financial bind. Clear your desk of important papers before leaving work today. A secret wish will soon come true.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Bridge the miles by discussing your ideas on the phone; a wonderful agreement could result. You are lucky in love as well as friendship. Nurture your relationships.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A personal project may hit a snag today. Do not despair! Other people will come to the rescue. Show your appreciation for their help and generosity. Repay favors as soon as possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spending time with a co-worker or casual friend could give you fresh insights. Be careful not to reveal information that should be kept secret. Romance enjoys favorable influences.

Gymnastics to host rival Southern CT

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team is finally home.

After compiling a 2-3 record on the road to start the season, the team is more than ready to take on Southern Connecticut State University at 1 p.m. tomorrow at Boyden Gymnasium.

"I think everyone on this team is happy to be home," senior Kim Grady said. "It will be good to finally perform in front of our fans."

Grady, who in an early-season practice fractured a bone in her foot, will not be able to perform in Saturday's meet and is out for an indefinite amount of time.

Although she is disappointed with her injury, she is optimistic her teammates will step up and perform well.

"We have had two weeks to practice since our last meet so we've had a lot of time to improve a few

Women's hoop at Duquesne

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The women's basketball team at the University of Massachusetts is on the home stretch of its season, and if it does not win another game, it will tie a dubious record: 0-16 in Atlantic 10 Conference play. Last year, it was 0-18 as a result of two losses to Penn State, which have since left the conference.

Last night, the Minutewomen were demolished at West Virginia, 100-58. Rosemary Kosiorek scored 26 points for the Mountaineers, while Kim Kristofik amassed 20 points for the Minutewomen.

The team travels to Pittsburgh, Pa. to play the Lady Dukes of Duquesne, Saturday at 6 p.m. Duquesne was 4-16 with a 2-7 record in the A-10, and defeated the Minutewomen 70-59 in the first meeting between the two.

"We didn't play well in our first game against them," UMass assitant coach Jill Rooney said. "We'll definitely play them tougher in Pittsburgh."

If the season ended today, the two teams would be the eighth and ninth seeds in the postseason A-10 tournament. Therefore, they would face off in the first round. Needless to say, UMass will be looking at Duquesne's tendencies very carefully, and vice versa.

The Lady Dukes are not without a marquee player, however. Senior guard Darcie Vincent is fourth in the A-10 in scoring, with 17.8 points per game. Vincent is fourth in the league in assists (5.6), and fifth in the league in steals, with 56.

The other senior of the group is center Carina Hoffman, who leads the team with 7.9 rebounds per game. Hoffman crashed the boards in the first game versus UMass, grabbing a team-leading 11 rebounds. Hoffman is also a top scholar, as she was nominated to the GTE Academic All-American and Atlantic-10 All-Academic teams.

The key to stopping the Lady Dukes revolves around the same two things: keeping turnovers down and getting the ball to the two Minutewomen offensive threats, Kristofik and Jenny Moran.

Kristofik continues to lead the team in both points (12.9), and rebounds (8.3), while Moran is second in both catagories (11 ppg, 6.3 rpg).

Every win will help the team's confidence down the stretch, and Saturday's game may be UMass' best chance to salvage a victory.

Cage hosts hoop ticket seekers

By DAN WETZEL
and DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

What do the Grateful Dead and the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team have in common?

The answer: Tickets to see both groups of men play are somewhat of a rarity and both have a leader who inspires a dedicated following.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the Curry Hicks Cage early yesterday morning as UMass' own Jerry Garcia, Coach John Calipari and his staff entertained a throng of true "Minuteheads" as they awaited distribution of nearly 2,500 tickets for Sunday's 4:30 showdown with the Temple Owls.

"It was a lot of fun and I got my picture taken with Coach Cal," said senior Julie Goldstein, who along with almost 1,500 other students packed into the Cage starting at 1 a.m. to ensure a seat for the game.

"Coach Cal really earned my respect," said sophomore Matt Tryder. "The whole thing ran smoothly and he had a great attitude."

"I never saw anything like that before," said UMass forward Kennard Robinson, who decided to show up at the Cage to see what was happening. "There were a lot of people here for a late night. I thought everyone would be sleeping."

"It was almost like a Midnight Madness II," said Bill Keene, an undergraduate assistant in the ticket office. "The crowd was really well-behaved for the amount of people in [the Cage]."

Tickets were originally scheduled to be distributed at 7 a.m., but plans changed when Calipari and ticket officials saw no need to make the assembled crowd wait an additional five hours and began handing out general admission tickets at 2 a.m.

"We figured if the people were already here, why make them wait?" said Keene. "They're going to be first anyway so why not?"

By 6:40 a.m., empty pizza boxes were strewn throughout the Cage and at 6:42 a.m. the final ticket was being handed to junior Christy Lee, while her friend Dyann Morimoto stood in the cold praying for just one more ticket.

"It makes me kind of sick," Morimoto laughed.

But Lee tried to ease her friends dejection and said, "Well, I don't know, maybe she can have my ticket."

When other students began gathering in the bitter cold just before 7 a.m., they were greeted by a "Sold-Out" sign.

"This is ridiculous," said junior Adam Moskow. "I've been a fan for three years. I've been to every game this year and now I can't get a ticket?"

But Moskow hasn't given up all hope and said he plans to try and use an unused ticket from a previous game to get into Sunday's game.

Seniors Darren Stone and Andy Jacobs were also surprised to discover all the tickets were gone before 7 a.m.

"It's typical of the Athletic Department," said Jacobs, who earlier this year made the journey to watch the Minutemen play in Kentucky. "We got up at 4 and just hung out, we didn't think it would be a problem."

Despite Jacobs' obvious frustration, he remained a true "Minutehead" when asked if Coach Cal's boys are going to win on Sunday.

"[Expletive] yeah," Jacobs said. "And you can quote me on that."

University of Massachusetts basketball coach John Calipari does his best to control students waiting for hoop tickets Thursday morning in Curry Hicks Cage.

Flint helps Brown with transition

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

During the off-season, University of Massachusetts assistant basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint and senior point guard Anton Brown play one-on-one basketball against each other.

Who wins more often? "We're about even," Flint says.

This is indicative of the relationship between Flint, a former point guard himself at St. Joseph's University, and Brown, whose steady play at the point has helped bring UMass to the brink of an NCAA tournament berth. While Flint is Brown's coach, he is also a friend to Brown, an education major from Columbia, S.C.

"He's easy to go to with problems, and that's important for someone far from home," Brown said.

Flint was considered one of the best point guards in the Atlantic 10 Conference during his career at St. Joseph's. He knows, both from experience and from a coaching standpoint, what qualities make for a steady point guard.

"[Brown] is a much improved point guard than he was when he came here four years ago," Flint said. "If every guy on this team worked like him we'd be undefeated this year."

When Flint arrived at UMass three years ago, Brown was coming off a promising freshman season. Brown and teammate Jim McCoy, both shooting guards playing out of position, carried the scoring load for the 1988-89 Minutemen, finishing 10-17.

Brown was, by his own admission, a shooting guard playing point in his first year. The Minutemen were nowhere near as talented then as they are now, and Brown's scoring was needed more than his playmaking. Brown made the A-10 All-Freshman team in 1989, averaging nearly 13 points per game.

"My first year I was more of a shooting guard," Brown, a senior education major, recalls. "Coach Flint helped me become more of a point guard."

Flint's first task upon arrival at UMass was to help Brown make the transition from scorer to floor leader. According to Flint, it wasn't an easy change.

"He was a shooting guard playing point, which is a tough adjustment," Flint remembers. "It's a tough position to play. You have to know where players' positions are. You have to be able to think for and do things for other players, and he wasn't used to doing that."

Two seasons later, Flint describes Brown as "the best pure shooter on the team" and a solid passer and defender, despite nagging injuries which sidelined him much of the past two years.

The two credit each other for Brown's growth at the point.

"[Flint] helped me develop a crossover dribble, which I didn't have, and got me penetrating to the basket," Brown notes.

A crossover dribble may seem small in comparison to other point guard skills. But, as Flint notes, it's the fundamentals of the game which open up scoring and assist opportunities and ultimately win ball games.

Last Meeting
Temple 83, Massachusetts 61
Temple's zone defense shut down UMass' inside game. Temple got very balanced scoring, as Eddie Jones led all scorers with 22 points. The Minutemen shot a dreadful 33 percent from the floor and tossed up 24 3-pointers. Temple also outrebounded the Minutemen 41-30.

Keys to the Game
UMass must solve the Owls' 2-3 zone defense and stop Aaron McKie, Mik Kilgore and Eddie Jones to win their first over Temple. Kilgore is a likely key for Temple. When he scores more than 20, the Owls are 5-0. When he scores under 10, Temple is 0-4. UMass needs good perimeter shooting and a strong showing by Jim McCoy to open up the inside game for Harper Williams. Depth will be another factor for both teams. UMass needs to stay out of foul trouble, a difficult task against a physical, defensive team like Temple. The Owls, who suit up only 9 players, face a similar problem against UMass' man-to-man pressure.

Streaks
Temple has won 5 of 6 since losing to 14th-ranked Tulane Jan. 25 and has won five consecutive A-10 games. UMass has won three straight since failing at Temple and 8 of 9 since losing to West Virginia at the Cage Jan. 8. The Minutemen are 8-1 at the Cage.

UMass wins first-ever against Temple

One win and 21 losses never looked this good.

The University of Massachusetts basketball team did something Sunday afternoon it had never done before — beat Temple University, 67-52 — for its 20th win of the season.

"This is something I was dreaming about when I first got here," said forward William Herndon. "I'm just happy it happened with this team. We've got a special team."

It took 10 years and there were some heart-breaking losses (see 1990's triple overtime thriller) but the Minutemen (20-4, 8-3 in the Atlantic 10) finally climbed the hump, snapping a 21-game losing streak to the Owls (12-9, 8-5) in convincing fashion.

When the game ended, the 4,058 Curry Hicks Cage fans (some of whom waited in line for hours in the Cage early Thursday morning for tickets) rushed onto the court to mob the Minutemen, chanting, "We beat Temple."

"It's unbelievable right now," said UMass forward Jim McCoy, who led all scorers with 18 points. "I can't believe it.

"Our game plan coming in [to the season], was to win 20 games," McCoy said. "I think we're in the NCAA tournament now. This game did it."

Leading 47-42, guard Anton Brown hit a trey with the shot clock running down. It gave UMass a 50-42 lead with 6:42 left, but more than giving UMass an 8-point advantage, it seemed to signify that this day was different than the other 21 times the two teams have met.

The Cage, which erupted after Brown's bomb, was silenced seconds later, when Vic Carstarphen hit the kind of 3-pointer which made you think, "Well, maybe

State rep primary decided today

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Amherst and Pelham voters will nominate today a Democratic candidate for state representative in the special election to fill the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat, continuing the domino effect caused by the death of Rep. Silvio Conte last spring.

Democrats Ellen Story, Terry Franklin and Jon Hite of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham are competing in the Democratic primary to fill the seat vacated when former state Rep. Stanley Rosenberg was elected to the state senate last fall. Republican Mark Enoch is running unopposed, with the general election to be held on March 17.

Story and Hite, who have been perceived by many to be the front-runners in the race, have been gathering endorsements in the past few weeks.

Last week, Story, 49, was endorsed by the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus, former Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy and a small group of educators from the Amherst-Pelham district. Earlier in the campaign, Story was endorsed by the Hampshire County branch of the National Organization of Women.

Hite, 36, on leave from his job as deputy director of the Northampton Housing Authority, picked up the endorsements of the Amherst Citizens for Responsible Government, a group of local taxpayers and property owners and the Local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

In previous weeks, Hite picked up the endorsements of the University's Undergraduate Student Senate, the Graduate Employee Organization and the local branch of the AFL-CIO.

Although the candidates have agreed on a woman's right to free choice in abortions, the need for a more progressive tax structure and the importance of the University to the district, Gov. Weld's proposal for the University to retain all of its tuition money has emerged as a major source of contention.

Hite strongly opposes the plan, while Story seeks a formula with the University retaining one-third of its tuition and state appropriations making up the other two-thirds of the University's budget.

Page wants the University to keep tuition a small percentage of the total budget as a means of providing a "margin of excellence" for the University and allow students and administrators to plan better. Franklin opposes the plan, but says he believes the University should not give up the 30 percent of tuition it currently retains until another source of funding is found.

Orchard Hill and Van Meter residents who are registered to vote should vote at the North Fire Station on East Pleasant Street. Northeast and Sylvan residents will be able to vote at the Immanuel Lutheran Church Lounge at 867 North Pleasant Street. The voting location for Central residents is the Wildwood School on Strong Street.

Finally, registered Southwest residents can vote at the Bangs Community Center on Kellogg Avenue. Southwest North residents are considered part of District 10, while Southwest South residents are officially part of District 4.

Dems woo undecideds

President Bush campaigns by phone

By WALTER R. MEARS
Associated Press

MANCHESTER, N.H. — Democratic presidential rivals roamed southern New Hampshire on Monday in a holiday hunt for votes, while President Bush phoned in a White House defense against his conservative challenger.

The political traffic was heavy on the eve of Tuesday's New Hampshire presidential primary election, the first balloting of 1992.

While Bush was being interviewed by telephone on radio station WFEA in Manchester, Patrick Buchanan, his GOP challenger, was waiting on hold.

The polls begin opening at 6 a.m. Tuesday.

The pollsters rated Paul Tsongas, the former senator from Massachusetts, the late leader in the five-man Democratic field, with Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton running second.

Bush held a hefty lead in GOP polling. Both sides said he'd win, but Buchanan sought to come close enough to send the White House and the party a message of conservative rebellion.

"I'd love to win," Democrat Tsongas said.

"I'm going to force the Democratic Party to once and for all take all that useless rhetoric, cast it aside. . . and let's have a partnership of labor and management and government so the average person in this country can have a job, provide for their family and look to a future that's viable," he said in Portsmouth.

Clinton staged a dozen stops in his final sprint of a race in which he'd been rated the leader before the controversies over a woman's claims of an illicit affair with him and over his Vietnam-era draft status.

"The president has finished his mission," Clinton said. "He is yesterday's man.

High tech displayed for Kennedy

By DANIEL J. LYONS
Collegian Staff

The Department of Computer and Information Science demonstrated several new technologies being researched at UMass to an audience on Friday that included Sen. Edward Kennedy.

The professors in the department invited Kennedy to learn about their research and its benefits for the future of the economy, education and health care. They showed the Massachusetts Democrat tutorial programs, "smart vehicles" being developed for the military and information retrieval systems.

After the presentation, Kennedy expressed pride in the University's place on the cutting edge of new technologies.

"They are doing a great deal of research as well that will have a very important commercial value," Kennedy said, "which, transferred, means new jobs, new opportunities for families. Not for the families of only Western Massachusetts, but all over Massachusetts, New England and the country."

"This is still a dangerous world," Kennedy said. "It's naive not to think that we are going to have to have a defense which is going to be adequate to those particular challenges."

These challenges reflect the recent changes in the current world order and will inspire new and innovative technological developments, Kennedy said.

"Those kinds of developments take imagination and creativity. There is no reason that Massachusetts and New England can't be on the cutting edge of those technologies," Kennedy said.

One of the many research projects the Computer and Information Science Department is involved in is a computer-controlled intelligent vehicle being developed for the U.S. Army.

This project is being jointly conducted with Carnegie Mellon University, which plans to transfer a prototype of the vehicle to the Amherst campus this summer, according to Professor Edward Riseman.

The prototype vision system, using a three-level integrated recognition technology, will eventually be installed in Army ambulances and other vehicles to eliminate the need for human drivers in dangerous situations.

Riseman also stressed possible domestic uses for this technology, such as automated transport convoys to transport goods over long distances at high speeds with no need for human help.

Along with the automated convoys, this technology could be used to update the interstate highway system. This new system would have sensors to monitor and control traffic flow and could eliminate travel delays.

Professor W. Bruce Croft demonstrated an intelligent information retrieval system developed here at the University. The prototype program contains a small data base including 120,000 articles from The Wall Street Journal.

During computer vision research at the University, the Image Understanding Architecture was developed to cope with the vast amount of information relayed in computer vision.

According to Charles Weems, this so-called "Fifth Generation" of computer technology lacks the capability to process this amount of input. IUA, using heterogeneous parallel processors, is able to process the information. Weems said this technology is "a prologue to the sixth generation of computer hardware."

The UMass computer department is also working on projects to improve the educational system, which is widely believed to be lagging behind the rest of the industrialized world.

An intelligent computer tutor has been developed to cope with students' varying abilities by making real-time judgements from the students' questions and answers, officials said.

This ability is far superior to pre-determined computer tutors because of its ability to adapt differently to each student, said Professor Beverly Woolf.

"In order to retain our status as an industrial nation, we must reform and update our education system," said Woolf. The present system of narrative learning is inefficient when compared to what the intelligent tutor could do.

A recent survey showed that pre-supplied narrative learning is soon forgotten by workers who must then relearn the information on the job, said Woolf.

However, if an intelligent tutor was supplied to the employee on the job, the worker could forgo the pre-supplied narrative learning and learn his or her job on location, retaining more information for a longer period of time.

McFerrin's magic draws in audience

By DERIC BLAIRE
Collegian Correspondent

Bobby McFerrin and Voicestra performed Thursday evening at the Fine Arts Center and accompanied by Voicestra led the audience in song, chant and dance — and evoked a standing ovation.

McFerrin and Voicestra astounded the sold-out crowd with luscious, luxurious vocals, inspiring stage presence and even a bit of acting, eliciting hilarious laughter.

In the end McFerrin invited the audience on stage to join him and the Voicestra. "Sing for your lives," McFerrin instructed as the crowd danced in delight.

McFerrin said he refused to consider Voicestra a back-up group, crying, "They are not a back-up group."

All the members of Voicestra soloed at least once, others several times. During a number of songs McFerrin sat behind Voicestra, grooving to their sound.

The show started with "Sweet In The Morning." McFerrin dressed in dungarees and blue sandals with a loose, striped, yellow shirt, halfway unbuttoned. There were sweet and sensuous sounds reverberating through the rafters as Voicestra chanted "sweet in the morning" and birds chirped over head.

The song ended and the theater nearly exploded. McFerrin had to hush the applause to start the next song.

McFerrin conducted the group like an orchestra as they played in a circle of improvisation. They took turns soloing, round and round, in a frenzy of improvisational a cappella.

A box was stuffed with audience members' ideas for improvisation. The group picked two and acted them out. The first was "interfering parents" which the three men of Voicestra performed, inducing the audience to laughter. McFerrin, with his female partner, performed "connection." After writhing, rolling and hard breathing all over, McFerrin ended up on top, at front center stage, connected to his partner by the butt. He said, swaggering his head, "I'm connected," and the crowd roared.

McFerrin did sing one song alone. As he did he coaxed the crowd to sing along with him, flashing his thumbs up and down, to which the crowd responded.

The man who said he would be "100 years old in March" brought the crowd up and then cut them down, as Fiedler used to when he conducted the Pops. The crowd, amateurs making beautiful music, was under his spell.

As the group left the stage, almost immediately after the first bows, the crowd gave them a standing ovation which shook the rafters until the returned.

McFerrin later explained his concept of chanting for peace. Every New Year's Eve in San Francisco they chant 24 hours straight for peace a song called: "Sing For Your Life."

McFerrin said this song would be a part of him for a long time. He explained to the audience the peace they were singing about wasn't necessarily peace outside yourself but also within. As he slapped his chest he told them they were singing about "the center peace, the peace inside."

They then went off stage. But the chanting did not stop. Eventually McFerrin and Voicestra returned to the stage continuing their chant. McFerrin lifted a young boy up to join him and Voicestra on stage, inviting others to follow.

This brought a deluge of dancers onto the stage in a circle of chanting, dancing and singing for life. Then the crowd stood behind the group before they bowed and exited for the last time. The chanting ended with the crowd now on stage peering after the group in hopes of more song.

New tuition plan discussed at Fac Senate

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

Expecting full tuition retention to sweep the Statehouse this year, Chancellor Richard O'Brien said Thursday at Faculty Senate that unless the Legislature guarantees continued funding he will oppose the measure.

Gov. William Weld has proposed that the Commonwealth's universities and colleges retain 100 percent of their tuition money. The University currently retains approximately 30 percent of tuition money, with the remainder going into the state's general fund.

Tuition retention is one of the key issues in the state representative race. Only Democrats Ellen Story and Norman Page and Independent Larry Kelley support forms of tuition retention.

O'Brien said he sees a good side and a bad side to the issue but does not support it unless the Legislature will promise continued funding.

"The good side is that state dollars will be brought to us directly," he said. "The bad side is there is no promised contract.

"There are lots of problems connected with tuition retention," he said, adding if things go well a 5 percent increase in tuition will be approved.

In other Faculty Senate business, O'Brien said he feels "extremely optimistic" about negotiations with the Graduate Employee Organization.

"I'm delighted they're showing appropriate restraint," he said, alluding to the week-long strike graduate students conducted against the University last semester.

O'Brien said the terms of the contract involving issues of health benefits, an official procedure for grievances, parity in budget cuts and tuition and curriculum fee waivers have been accurately de-

DVP announces speakers

Spring lineup includes Chuck D of Public Enemy

By KARA SCHMIDT
Collegian Correspondent

Ever get the feeling that what you're learning in the lecture hall will hardly help you in real life? Interested in what those people who have been around have to say?

The Distinguished Visitors Program, a student-run organization, brings lecturers and entertainers to the University of Massachusetts campus, including writers, politicians and musicians. These people, according to DVP member Danuta Forbes, talk about experiences that extend far beyond the classroom.

In the past they've hosted Stephen King, John Waters, Hunter S. Thompson and John Updike. John Densmore, the drummer for the Doors, and consumer activist and presidential candidate Ralph Nader have also been speakers from previous semesters.

Forbes said this semester's lineup promises to be DVP's best.

"We have decided on three speakers for this semester so far. Perhaps the most well-known of our lecturers is rapper Chuck D of Public Enemy," she said. "We are also sponsoring Rabbi Harold Kushner, who is speaking on spirituality and religion in contemporary society."

The third speaker is Leon Bing, a journalist who has written a book on experiences with Los Angeles gangs. Bing will lecture accompanied by a gang member.

Forbes said participation in DVP involves many benefits and there are various avenues of involvement. The meetings are easy going and each member has a say in what goes on, Forbes said.

The group votes on potential speakers, decides who will pick the speakers up from the airport, take them out to dinner, escort the celebrity to the event and announce them. Potential members have to attend three consecutive meetings in order to become a voting member.

Attessa Bagherpour, publicity coordinator, spent a day last fall with Doors drummer John Densmore, who she described as "very exciting."

"It's like rubbing elbows with famous people," Bagherpour said.

"You're taking a part in UMass. This group has a lot of power in bringing these speakers to the campus," said Forbes. "When you join a group like this it gives you even more power. Plus, it's great preparation for the real world."

The Distinguished Visitors Program is looking for new members. There is a new members meeting today in campus center room 911 at 6 p.m., or interested people can stop by their office, room 415 in the Student Union.

"Why not enhance your resume?" said Forbes. "With such a big school as UMass, joining a group like DVP can really be a rewarding experience."

Prof, author finds happiness in Judaism

By DAVID MOHEBAN
Collegian Correspondent
and JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

For Julius Lester, the decision to become a Jew was what he described as his "life's journey."

Lester, a professor currently on leave from the Judaic and Near Eastern Studies and author of Lovesong: Becoming a Jew, discussed his reasons for converting to Judaism and his interpretation of how to be a Jew last night at Smith College's Neilson Library Browsing Room.

"For most of my life I had been looking for religion," Lester said. He researched various religions, taking pieces from each that made sense to him in an effort to tailor a religion that suited him.

When Lester discovered Judaism he found it to comprise everything he had been searching. He praised Judaism for the fact that it does not emphasize guilt, it is centered around the home, and it praises God.

Converting to Judaism in 1982, Lester discussed his philosophy for "doing Jewish."

The first thing Lester took upon himself as a new Jew was to learn Hebrew, "an important first step to feeling that I have a place," he said. Learning Hebrew also enabled Lester to feel comfortable in synagogue, he said.

Attending services and joining a synagogue were ways Lester was able to make a statement of his commitment to the Jewish community, while also giving him a sense of belonging, he said.

scribed in the press. He said the Board of Trustees is implementing all that it can within its jurisdiction, but the contract couldn't be signed because of legal problems.

On Jan. 31, the GEO membership unanimously ratified a contract proposal after a full year of negotiations with the University administration. Last Wednesday the contract was unexpectedly denied full approval by the Board of Trustees.

A special meeting of the Board of Trustees is scheduled for Feb. 28 and the contract is expected to be approved then.

In other business, O'Brien said he was not sure where the source of money supporting the maintenance of the William D. Mullins Memorial Center, currently under construction, would come from.

O'Brien said he was "extremely sorry" about the resignation of football head coach Jim Reid. He also shared some ideas for changes that could be made in the coming years such as "strengthening the personal connection in the department with proposals received from NCAA."

He offers us no real hope and vision for the future."

Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska said he expects to do well because New Hampshire voters are beginning to realize that he's not a single issue candidate despite his emphasis on national health insurance. "National health insurance for me is a beginning, a beginning of fundamental change in the United States," he told a health care forum in Concord.

He and Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa were ranked well behind Tsongas and Clinton in the polls. The loser between them may have trouble raising the funds and gaining backing to go on into the most costly campaign states to come.

"We are ready to go national better than any other candidate," Harkin told campaign workers at his campaign headquarters. At the Allenstown town hall, he said he's the Democrat who would break with current economic policy, not just fine tune it. "We won't wait for any tax breaks for the rich to trickle down," he said.

way of saying to myself that I am Jewish. . . eating ceases to become automatic and eating becomes an act of consciousness. Much of Judaism is to make us conscious about what we are doing," he said.

Becoming kosher also brought him closer to other Jews in the community, and helped to reinforce his identity, he said.

Another aspect of Judaism that initially attracted Lester was the music. In Judaism each Jew has his own relationship to God, a relationship that exists in the form of prayer and singing.

Lester explained that to him melodies enable us to express our mood in prayer and new melodies can open up new experiences within our lives. Lester said most Jews use the same melodies over and over again with out trying anything different.

"In Judaism, sin is not a heavy, guilt-laden thing," Lester said, comparing sinning to "missing the mark."

University of Massachusetts over Temple — that is the sweetest upset of the year. What could be better?

It feels so good to win. Almost 11 years of domination by the high priests of Temple basketball has ended. The ball is in our court now. We are free from the legacy of losing; or as Jim McCoy put it to the Boston Globe, the monkey is off our back. The Cage is no longer a cage; it is a cannon, a loud one, and it is going to launch UMass to the NCAA tournament and for players like McCoy, maybe beyond.

But what about that "monkey"? The most important part of the victory over Temple was what it can do to the malaise that has hung over our school. Until the Minutemen stepped up and grabbed our attention, our school spirit had been on a losing streak. For the last decade, there has been one team, besides Temple, that that has proven to be arch-rivals of UMass. That team has been Reagan and Bush.

The link between school sports and national politics might seem to be a stretch until you consider that just recently our football coach, Jim Reid, resigned over the withdrawal of scholarship money he needed to keep his program competitive. I don't know who Jim Reid would blame. I don't know whether he's a Democrat, Republican or Independent. But I know he's gone. And so is the money. Ultimately, the person who writes the checks in this country is the president, and since UMass is writhing like a malnourished child, I blame the man who mixes the economic formula: President Bush.

Up in New Hampshire, the residents are saying the same things that Coach Reid has expressed. The money is running out and ends are not being met. Today is the New Hampshire presidential primary, the first place in the nation that gets the chance to tell the president how he's doing. Like the crowd at the Cage on Sunday, the national political community is watching every move. Everyone in Manchester is giddy with excitement, awaiting the results and wondering what kind of message New Hampshire is going to send to President Bush and the nation. The numbers are not so good for Bush: 67-55. UMass wins in an upset. This could be the year that the Democrats do the same.

Other margins indicate that former Massachusetts Sen. Paul Tsongas will win by a big margin in the field of five Democrats. Battling for second place are Clinton and Kerrey. Regardless, Kerrey will eventually get the party's nomination. He's like Ivory soap, 99 percent pure and slowly rising to the top.

In Bush's own party, Buchanan will probably take half of Bush's supporters away from him. Not enough to clinch but enough to scare. It is going to be a good game. Hopefully, by this time next year, Temple will have lost to UMass again and Bush will be a visiting professor at Temple.

Nick Nyhan is a UMass student.

Wrong education methods used

Trystan Skeigh's critique of Fried Green Tomatoes [Feb. 13] had about the same impact on my positive attitude as a no-frills flight to Siberia.

If you will forgive me, I am a heterosexual woman. I know that may be hard to take, but it is a fact and I am quite comfortable with that. I also tend to believe that I am a person capable of tolerance of others.

I have just about had it with your consistent, derisive comments about heterosexuals and their ignorance regarding the superior lifestyles of the lesbians. I fully support the rights of gays, lesbians and bisexuals. However, you run the grave risk of kicking the ground out from under yourself by sneering at the very target population you wish to educate.

I don't disagree with your goals, but with the unfortunate methods of education you have chosen.

What are you trying to accomplish?

Who is Yatin Marathe angry at?

A brilliant article! Man, this guy has got it all figured out. Don't eat cereal. Don't drink Pepsi. Don't drive motorcycles and don't watch CNN! Simple, isn't it? Sounds awfully like Idi Amin Dada though, what?

Damn South India (what the heck is that?), right? Hey you Madrasis, you didn't fight for independence, and you don't deserve to fight over water rights! This guy obviously never took history in high school and he probably thinks that Tippu Sultan belongs to the Hohenzollern dynasty. Or that Rajaji and Radhakrishnan were Sikhs.

Trashy Indian (either one would do, what?) movies? Cricket? Ghettos? Relax, man. Ever heard of something called hypertension? Or self-righteousness? You don't suppose you are Big Brother, do you?

Individualism? Personal greed? Selective amnesia? Better known as Originality, Ambition and Diplomacy! Bull's eye, dude.

Coffee-table radicalism! So what is your commitment to the same process? Other than impotent, incoherent rambling? What are you trying to do towards providing the Indian tax payers and peasants with a good and healthy life?

Let's get it straight. You know why I am here. And I know why you are here (well, almost!) So why this hypocritical, pedantic, self-righteous, pseudo-intellectual, punditic tone? Take it easy.

"Indian bashing" not appreciated

It is rather disturbing to find the Third World Affairs page dominated by a few select Indians. It makes me wonder if these are the only people who can write amongst the students from the so-called Third World countries. "The Indian Community: Mentality in action," by Yatin Marathe, reminded me of the writings of Pratip Dastidar (thank God he doesn't write for the Collegian anymore). It is unfortunate that bashing of Indians still continues in the Third World Affairs page of the Collegian.

It is rather farfetched to assume that Indians on campus lack political awareness. Most of the Indians who have come here have come in a quest for higher learning. It is indeed credible to find so many competent Indians at a prestigious place like the University of Massachusetts.

I am hurt when I listen to the BBC and hear of the disturbances in India. I have, in the past, expressed my disappointment with the correspondents of the BBC. Most of us students are left with little time to talk politics, or for that matter, organize a political rally. I would watch an Indian movie because they are fun to watch, and the music is dearer to me than rock and roll on MTV. Cricket to me is what baseball is to Americans. Watching a cricket match on television brings fond memories.

Political correctness is a subjective matter. I, for one, believe that the standard of intellect in politics is so low that men of moderate mental capacity have to stoop to reach it.

I firmly believe that Indian students in the U.S. are ambassadors of India to the U.S. I would like to read of the wonderful things India has to offer to the world in the Third World Affairs page rather than some bashing trash that would look good in a supermarket tabloid.

Thank you, Building Operations

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Building Operations and their staff for all of the support and assistance you have given us at Union Video Center.

Thad Dabrowski is helping to get our studio wall painted with funds from Auxiliary Services; Joe Rupo is always helpful in giving advice on equipment repairs to our engineers; Jap VanHeerden has several times assisted our audio needs in a production; Richard Strycharz helps with cable repairs; Charles LeHane helped out on basketball game coverage. Also, the carpentry staff have always come through for us when we needed wood cut or a tool to borrow. These are just a few of the people we would like to thank for all of their help and support.

Bilingual Collegiate Program advisor should stay out of campus politics

On Feb. 6, the Bilingual Collegiate Program's financial aid/ Latin American Cultural Center Advisor published in the Collegian a defaming article, attacking a Puerto Rican student. The article, titled "Pirate runs with wrong crowd," seemed to establish some very discriminatory statements, which may have been purposely targeting the Black/African community.

While institutionalized prejudice is not uncommon, the Puerto Rican leadership on campus should neither permit, condone or participate in these dynamics.

If working with ALANA or LBG RA Matters Committees to abolish the oppressive conditions of residential life on campus or being part of the brotherhood of Iota Phi Theta (a traditionally Black/African American fraternity) can be defined as the wrong crowd, or "a very select group of people. . . born with silver spoons in their mouths", then I deserve to be attacked in the public sphere by any University representative.

It must be clear to the members of the "minority" communities that our arguments criticize the lack of cooperation and prevalent animosity between the "paid" official leadership of the "people of color." I am criticizing the BCP's misappropriation of student money for expenses that are alien to the student community. I am criticizing the inefficiency of the BCP, in relation to its role within the University and in comparison with other entities on campus. I am criticizing the irresponsibility of the BCP leadership in promoting institutionalized oppression and assimilation to the "American Heritage."

We are demanding that the BCP-backed cultural center dictators incorporate the Latino students into a democratic and coherent process of progressive support and solidarity, contingent to the problems facing us. We are criticizing the exclusion of the Black/African American community from developing a collective agenda in political movements such as the cultural center protests.

We feel that any University official who attempts to debate about trivial issues should focus on real dilemmas and not on defaming individuals. Moreover, we should begin to recognize that oppression can no longer be conceived as a single issue such as racism or classism, but as a complexity of issues. We should begin to seek a collective agenda of responsibility, an Umoja, by supporting each other in working in a common direction, determined by students.

Sell the Buick: A real lemon

By SCOTT KESNER
Collegian Correspondent

I went to Amherst College Thursday night to check out the future of music. The band I saw, Sell the Buick, will probably not be in it.

These five guys, four of them Amherst College students, reminded me of a band that would finish second to a juggling clown in a junior high talent show — the clown winning of course because his art is simple, clear and carefully focused. It is carried out with precision and accuracy.

Because of aimless, often meandering song writing and sloppy playing, Sell the Buick came off as merely second rate. Their caustic wit and esoteric premise seem to have attracted a somewhat loyal following, but whatever humor or whimsical qualities the band possesses is corroded by their playing.

During "Air-o-plane," the second number performed from their mock thematic, "American Sex is Dead," segment, the rhythm section attempts to undergo labyrinth time changes.

The Sell the Buick rhythm section has serious trouble just keeping straight forward 4/4 time. In fact, it is obvious to me that neither the drummer nor the bass player have ever practiced with a metronome (a device for marking time by means of a series of clicks at precise intervals), never mind each other. They need to master the Go Go's, "We've Got the Beat," before they attempt stuff like Genesis' "Apocalypse in 9/8."

Between the odd time meters and the drummer's all too frequent adjustment of pace, the dancing fans turned spastic and some became frustrated enough to sit.

The Sell the Buick show wasn't altogether without merit. It opened opportunely enough with the lead singer and guitar player, who looked like a young Bob Dylan, coughing out a pretty damn funny spoof of Extreme's "More Than Words."

During "Please Don't Call Me Reg, That's not my Name," the lead singer nervously cavorted about the stage while the band effectively combined elements of funk, rock, rap and progressive into a schizophrenic cauldron.

The second installment of the show, "American Rock is Dead," featured a ska backing while veering off into some amusing snippets of Led Zeppelin's "Kashmir," "Tom Sawyer," by Rush, U2's "New Year's Day" and I think "Bohemian Rhapsody" by Queen was somewhere in there as well. Unfortunately, clips of overplayed radio tunes (except for "Kashmir," which deserves every bit of air play it gets) aren't enough to redeem a show of this caliber.

If you enjoy innocuous experimental bands, I would highly recommend Sell the Buick. But, if you want progressive quality, eclectic song writing and dry wit: Rent a Genesis video from the 70s, buy a Robyn Hitchcock album, and go see Richard Thompson.

Billy Bragg tools on everyone during Academy performance

By DAVE DEMERJIAN
Collegian Staff

To no one's surprise, Billy Bragg astounded his audience at his Academy of Music show on Saturday night. Bragg treated his audience to both classic acoustic material and to newer songs featuring his tight, four-piece backup band. The incredible songs, along with Bragg's humorous commentary, made for an unforgettable evening.

The audience was treated to material spanning Bragg's entire career. He began the set alone on stage, wowing the audience with his guitar and vocal gifts. As Bragg sang, members of his four-piece backup band began to filter onto the stage one at a time and join him. Just as the band finished assembling on stage, Bragg launched into his classic "Greetings to the New Brunette," unleashing the full power of the band.

The show just kept getting better and better, and reached its high point with Bragg's final three songs. "Sexuality" got the crowd off its feet, and the quiet, reflective "Hold the Line" again highlighted the versatility and quality of Bragg and his band. For the final encore, Bragg launched into The Specials' classic, "A Message to You, Rudy." The tune lasted for a good 10 minutes, and by the time it ended almost the entire audience was out of their seats and dancing.

Bragg calls himself "The Spokesman for his Generation," a role that he definitely attempted to fill during the show. Between tunes, he lectured (sometimes to the point of boredom) on racism ("if you don't fight against racism, then you are a part of it"), safe sex ("safe sex doesn't mean no sex, it just means use your imagination"), and the benefits of a mixed market economy.

He also found time to take jibes at Nirvana, Bryan Adams and the British pop charts. While Bragg's commentary was hilarious, at times it became annoying, and I left the show thinking that Bragg probably considers himself to be the coolest guy in the world.

Opening the show on Saturday were Eye and I, a New York based band who are also members of the Black Rock Coalition. Eye and I, headed by female vocalist D.K. Dyson, played a loud, guitar-based set, which sounded much like Living Color.

While Eye and I played a good set, they were performing for the wrong crowd. The audience did not want to hear funk-rock, they wanted to hear Billy Bragg. The band seemed to feel this lack of audience response, and their performance got worse as it progressed. Head singer Dyson also did not seem to win any fans by repeatedly rolling around on the floor semi-naked. Nor did the crowd seem impressed when she announced to them all that she was suffering from a case of diarrhea.

While Bragg suffered from an inappropriate opening act and a bit of an attitude problem, his music more than made up for it. The show was well paced, exciting and fun. The tunes were great and the band was tight. Bragg's commentary, while a bit excessive at times, was hilarious nonetheless.

Billy Bragg delivered exactly what was expected of him on Saturday night: quality music, political discussion and a good time for all.

Big Band jazz on new album by Connick

By DONNA GILMAN
Collegian Correspondent

"Can you imagine the thrill of writing your own songs, thinking of a crazy arrangement, and then hearing it played by the hardest swinging musicians in the world? WOW! I am one lucky guy." So writes Harry Connick, Jr. in his latest Columbia release, Blue Light, Red Light. And who can disagree?

Rocketing to fame with the soundtrack to 1989's When Harry Met Sally, Connick has since appeared in the 1991 film Little Man Tate, with Jodie Foster, and on an episode of the comedy "Cheers."

In the space of four years, Connick has gone from playing gigs in New Orleans to doing guest appearances on the "Arsenio Hall Show" and many other nationally-syndicated talk shows.

Connick's success comes as a surprise to the world of popular music, as well as to Connick himself. He writes, "I am so fortunate people out there are giving my kind of music a chance... and a big chance at that."

Nonetheless, the American public has embraced Connick's type of off-the-beaten-track music. Connick has been favorable compared to crooner Frank Sinatra, and applauded for his gutsy return to the sounds of the Big Band Era. Connick has deftly brought us another winning effort in the jazz and swing arena. Backed by such notable musicians as bassist Benjamin Jonah Wolfe, guitarist Russell Malone and saxophonist Will Campbell, this album offers a blend of jazz and big band swing which show off Connick's New Orleans' roots to perfection.

The first track on the album is characteristic of Connick's style of arrangement. Starting out softly and gradually building to a thundering finish, the song orchestrates Connick's mastery of the jazz beat. Infused with catchy verses, such as "I live in a tiny closet, a lukewarm cold water flat, with room for a couple of cinders, a mouse, a hole and a trap," this song will have you toe tapping and humming in no time.

The third track, "You Didn't Know Me When" is a swingier song with a plethora of trumpets and drums. Connick takes his time with a song, allowing ample time for instrumentals. My favorite track is a short song entitled "He Is, They Are." The verse is simple but the tune is addictive, with a strongly Southern harmony. There are also ballads on the album, such as "Jill" and "Sonny Cried," which serve as relaxing background music for studying.

I must admit I went into this album a non-believer. Could there be more to Connick than hype and moussed up hair? The answer is a resounding YES! And now, I'm whistling Dixie. "It may be hard to believe, hard to comprehend, but baby, you didn't know me when . . ." Great stuff.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The idea that "bigger is always better" has been discredited. Remain true to your high ideals. More and more people are coming to share your views. Work up a healthy sweat by exercising.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The emphasis is on protecting your hard-earned funds. Your mate will cooperate with any well-thought-out plan. Career progress depends on your ability to move quickly when opportunity knocks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Staying put could prove more profitable than accepting a new job offer. Romance is fulfilling. Forget old grievances if you want to restore harmony within the family circle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Remain patient even when a project seems to be stalled. Trying to rush things would be a mistake. Postpone travel if you can. Consolidate recent gains.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Short trips can produce excellent results. Take a tip from a co-worker and find way through a financial maze. Refuse to be distracted from completing important deadline. An unnatural attraction to large animals will hinder your progress.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not let a casual relationship jeopardize your career. Compartmentalize your personal and professional lives. Financial experts can help you make the most of what you have.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lay the foundation for long-term financial security. A conversation with a close friend is a real confidence-builder. In romance, take your cue from your partner. Avoid pressing for an immediate commitment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Play your cards daringly and you will win every hand. Planetary blessings come in a downpour! Hard work and patience will pay rich dividends. Be persistent.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 22): Go ahead and ask an influential friend for help. People in positions of power can furnish valuable employment leads. A confident, good-humored approach will let you get your foot in the door.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Follow the path indicated by recent events. Success beckons! Your sense of humor serves you well so long as you do not get carried away. Avoid telling jokes that could cause offense.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Duty comes first. Do what must be done even if you would prefer to look the other way. New faces and places will make your evening memorable. Dress to impress those who count.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Today brings good news regarding settlement of a claim or legacy. Certain delays or complications may remain. Keep your nose to the grindstone until you have completed vital tasks.

U.S. hockey team earns 3-3 tie with Sweden

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

MERIBEL, France (AP) — The U.S. hockey team gained the top medal-round seed in its Olympic group Monday night despite blowing a 3-0 third-period lead to world champion Sweden and settling for a 3-3 tie.

Ray LeBlanc stopped 45 shots but not even he could save the United States' dream of becoming the country's first unbeaten, united Olympic champion since 1960. The 4-01 start mirrors the record that the Miracle on Ice club brought into the 1980 medal round.

The Americans, who hadn't allowed any third-period goals in their first four games, meet France (2-3) in a Tuesday quarterfinal.

With the goalie pulled and a sixth attacker on the ice, Mikael Johansson scored with 21 seconds to play to give the Swedes (3-0-2) the tie and let them stay in second place in Pool A.

Johansson tried a wraparound from LeBlanc's left and the puck deflected off the right skate of U.S. defenseman Dave Tretowicz and into the net.

The Swedes will face Czechoslovakia in a Wednesday quarterfinal. A loss would have let Finland (3-1-1) jump past Sweden; instead, the third-place Finns must play the formidable Unified Team on Wednesday.

The Swedes seemed determined to avenge "the Shame in Chamonix" — a Feb. 5 pre-Olympic loss to the United States, after which Swedish players and coaches accused American players of overly physical play.

Sweden did more than make accusations Monday.

Just 2:04 into the game, Mats Naslund, who once won an NHL trophy for gentlemanly behavior, bloodied the face of U.S. defenseman Greg Brown with a vicious hit along the boards. The hit might have been counterproductive; Naslund, one of Sweden's best players, was ejected and the United States appeared to gain emotionally.

The Americans were emotionally charged well before the hit. It took only 36 seconds for Clark Donatelli to tip Tim Sweeney's feed past Sweden goalie Roger Nordstrom.

LeBlanc continually bailed out a U.S. defense that played well in spots but gave up several excellent scoring chances. LeBlanc stopped three breakaways and at least 20 other dead-on shots.

He has played every minute of the tournament and has allowed only seven goals. He had a scoreless string of 136 minutes, 39 seconds snapped by Tommy Sjodin at 6:21 of the third period. Hakan Loob made it 3-2 with a power-play goal at 13:25.

By the time Sjodin scored, the Americans had a three-goal lead. Ted Donato got loose for a breakaway and slid the puck between Nordstrom's pads at 7:18 of the second period. At 2:42 of the third, Donato set up Marty McInnis for a shot over Nordstrom.

Hard hits were exchanged all game, starting with Naslund's flagrant charge.

Naslund went the entire length of the U.S. defensive zone, left his feet and slammed Brown face-first into the boards behind the U.S. goal line.

Brown stayed on the ice for several minutes before leaving with a cut above his right eye and across the bridge of his nose. U.S. coach Dave Peterson told CBS-TV that Brown had suffered a concussion and asked that Naslund be thrown out of the tournament for "a very dirty shot."

Naslund isn't automatically barred from future Olympic play but a suspension can be imposed by the International Ice Hockey Federation.

minutes remaining in the contest.

But, the Minutewomen never took the lead, and the Lady Dukes went on a 14-3 run thanks to two more Vincent 3-pointers, giving Duquesne a 55-44 lead with 10 minutes left.

But like the villain in the horror movie that keeps coming back from the dead, UMass broke the lead down and had a chance after Riley hit a 3-pointer with 48 seconds left to cut a Lady Duke lead to three, 71-68.

Again, Vincent broke UMass' back by hitting both ends of a 1-and-1 from the foul line as the Lady Dukes scored the last five points for the final margin of 76-68.

The Minutewomen (4-18, 0-11 in the Atlantic 10) turned the ball over five times less than the Lady Dukes (5-18, 3-8 in the A-10). Riley and Moran scored season highs in points (19 and 23 respectively), but the Duquesne backcourt of Vincent and Kris Sebastian combined for 40 points.

Vincent was 5-for-10 from 3-point range, and scored 24 points.

For UMass, the game represented another contrast with last season. The Minutewomen would have packed it in after the first half last year, but this year they kept fighting until the final buzzer.

Still, it also represents another missed opportunity, and like last year, the Minutewomen are in danger of going winless in A-10 play.

Women's basketball

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The resilient University of Massachusetts women's basketball team kept bouncing back from large deficits, including one of 13 points in the first half, but still fell in its 11th consecutive Atlantic 10 game Saturday to Duquesne University, 76-68.

In the first half, the Lady Dukes broke away from an early 14-12 deficit by going on a 19-4 run to take a 31-18 lead with 3:34 left.

Senior guard Darcie Vincent keyed the run with two treys, one which started the run and gave Duquesne a 15-14 lead, and another 3-pointer to end it at 31-18, at which point UMass called a timeout to regroup.

But in the second half, UMass scraped and clawed its way back from a 37-28 halftime deficit and eventually tied the game at 41 when Trish Riley hit a 3-pointer at the top of the key with 14

Player of the game

Harper Williams
6'7" Jr. F/C
Bridgeport,CT

University of Massachusetts center Harper Williams scored 15 points, grabbed 9 rebounds and blocked 5 shots in only 26 minutes. He scored 13 of his points in the second half, when the Minutemen made their run. He hit 5 of 6 shots, and when the opposition brought the ball inside, he swatted it away.

Why UMass won

The Minutemen went on a 12-0 run early in the second half, to take a 42-34 lead, which they never relinquished. Anton Brown hit a big 3-pointer with the shot clock running down, which demoralized Temple and UMass' defense was so tough, the Owls were able to hit only 32 percent of their shots, and only 25 percent in the second half. Harper Williams chipped in 13 points in the deciding half, while Jim McCoy shut down Aaron McKie, holding him to 8 points and scoring 18 himself. UMass dominated the glass, outrebounding Temple 45-30.

UMass' next opponent

The University of Massachusetts is in Piscataway, N.J. tonight (8 p.m., WMUA 91.1 FM, WHMP 99.3 FM) for a bout with Rutgers University. The Scarlet Knights are 12-10, 4-7 in the A-10 and have won three straight. In the first meeting of the year, the Minutemen won by 11, 77-66. Harper Williams led UMass with 17 points while Donnel Lumpkin led Rutgers with 19.

UMass isn't going to win."

From there, Harper Williams (15 points, 9 rebounds, 5 blocked shots) hit a jumper in the paint, then McCoy and Williams each hit two free throws, to give the Minutemen their largest lead of the afternoon, 56-45.

Carstarphen made a foul shot with 2:12 remaining in the game to cut the lead to 56-46 and then Temple proceeded to commit foul after foul. However, the Minutemen made 10 of 16 free throws down the stretch and the Owls continued to misfire.

Harper Williams and Lou Roe were immense on the boards for the Minutemen, who out-rebounded the Owls 45-30. Roe, who UMass coach John Calipari called the "A-10 Freshman of the Year" after the game, grabbed nine rebounds in 21 minutes.

"This kind of win gives us the confidence that there's no one in our league that we can't beat," Calipari said. "I think there's about ten teams in the nation that we can't play with, but I think anybody else, I'd say 'let's play.'"

After a little skirmish in the locker room at the half involving Mike Williams, Roe and McCoy, the Minutemen redirected their punches at the Owls.

Temple center Frazier Johnson, who scored 10 points but spent much of the game on the bench because of foul trouble, hit a turnaround jumper to give the Owls a 34-30 lead with 19:50 to go. Then Temple went cold and UMass delivered the knockout punch.

"I did not anticipate that we would shoot as bad as we did," said Temple coach John Chaney. "We shot the ball very poorly and did not get very good use out of our big players in this game."

Anton Brown's 3-pointer in the midst of a 12-0 UMass run with 18:04 remaining in the game put UMass ahead for good, 37-34. In the meantime, Temple could not buy a bucket. In the second half, the Owls shot just 25 percent (32 for the game), helping UMass build a 42-34 lead with 12:25 remaining.

Mike Williams, who came out after the intermission holding his hand to his eye, said after the game, "The team was kind of yelling at each other [at halftime], pointing fingers at each other. It was just a little altercation, that's all."

McCoy said, "Nothing really happened. It's a team thing. It was nothing personal. I think something positive came out of what happened at halftime, we won the game. We were down two. We came in at halftime, talked to each other, got our feelings out, went out, played the game and won."

Temple's Eddie Jones (13 points) hit a trey, Mik Kilgore a bank shot and Jones another three, to cut the lead to 44-42, midway through the half. But UMass just would not falter.

"It was a real good win for our program and for our University," Harper Williams said. "With all the bad stuff going on, like the budget cuts, this can make somebody smile up in the Senate and everywhere else."

McCoy said after the game it was his best game of the year. He shut down Temple's big guns, specifically Aaron McKie (8 points, zero in the second half).

McCoy steps up game down the final stretch

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

It's that time of year again.

The groundhog has made his decision, classes start to become a nuisance and Spring Break is only a month away.

And for the last four years something else happens on the University of Massachusetts campus in February: the Minutemen's Jim McCoy takes his game one step higher.

McCoy, UMass' all-time leading scorer, has officially turned it up an extra notch of late. After a dismal 7-point performance against Rutgers University in late January, McCoy kicked off February with 21 points at St. Bonaventure, followed by a season-high 25 against St. Joseph's.

And then, the senior from Pittsburgh, Pa., may have played his best game to date Sunday in the Minutemen's 67-52 win over Temple University.

"This was probably my best offensive and defensive game of the season," McCoy said after UMass' first-ever win against Temple, 67-52. "It was the biggest game of my career."

McCoy led all scorers with 18 points, pulled down four rebounds and added one steal, but it was McCoy's hustle on the defensive end of the floor that made the highlight films.

McCoy held the Owls' Aaron McKie, who entered the game averaging 14 points per game, to an ineffective eight points on 3-for-15 shooting, including zero second half points.

"I went in there tonight and said I'm going to shut [McKie] down," McCoy said after recalling the sophomore's 13-point, five-rebound effort in their first matchup earlier in the season in Philadelphia.

"[McCoy] was outstanding," UMass coach John Calipari said. "He rebounded. He played strong. He was great offensively. He made some big shots, big rebounds and tough plays."

UMass basketball fans have come to expect great things from the team's "go-to man" down the stretch, as the Minutemen have only five regular season contests remaining.

Last season, McCoy averaged 24.8 points in UMass' last five games and in his career, the senior is averaging 22 points prior to the post-season Atlantic 10 tournament.

"Jim McCoy is making that stretch run," Calipari said. "He's made it every year he's been here. He gets in the middle of the season and struggles a bit and then kicks it in the last four or five games."

Bush pulls out win; Tsongas takes lead

By WALTER S. MEARS
Associated Press

MANCHESTER, N.H. — President Bush gained grudging victory Tuesday night in the New Hampshire presidential primary, with Challenger Patrick J. Buchanan claiming more than 40 percent of the Republican vote to fuel his conservative rebellion.

Former Sen. Paul E. Tsongas of Massachusetts won the five-way Democratic race, ratifying the frontrunner status even he called improbable. Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton ran second and pronounced himself "the comeback kid."

New Hampshire's blighted economy was the consuming issue in both parties' campaigns, and Bush said he got the message of discontent.

"This election was far closer than many had predicted," he said in a statement." I think the opponents on both sides reaped the harvest of discontent with the pace of New Hampshire's economy.

He vowed to "take my case to the voters in the next eight-and-a-half months," and said he was confident of beating Buchanan to win the GOP nomination. "Now," said Bush, "on to the South."

Angela Bay Buchanan, manager of the challenger, claimed a major victory on her brother's behalf. "This is a victory. Protest votes don't run this high. We're going against a president in his own party in the state that put him in office."

"New Hampshire is Pat Buchanan's best shot," said Gov. Judd Gregg, a Bush partisan like the rest of the Republican establishment. Yet the results were sobering to the Bush camp, coming in the state where primary victory saved the president's 1988 nomination.

The Republican vote, with 51 percent of the precincts counted: Bush 34,767 or 57 percent. He led for 14 of New Hampshire's 23 convention delegates.

Buchanan 25,384 or 42 percent and 9 delegates.

Polls of voters leaving their polling places showed that the economy and jobs were the issues that mattered most to both Republicans and Democrats. Early exit polls reported by ADC found that 52 percent of Buchanan voters said they voted for him to send a message, compared to 47 percent who said he would make the best president. More than half said they would not vote for Bush if he was the choice in November.

Buchanan campaigned to the end, declaring at one point Tuesday, "We're going into Georgia and Super Tuesday with enormous steam." Those Southern primaries are on March 3 and 10.

In the Democratic primary, with 38 percent of the precincts reporting, Tsongas

Story wins race by a slim margin

The candidates' faces told the story better than any election returns could have.

A somber-looking Jon Hite entered the Amherst Community Cable Television studios shortly after 9 p.m. last night to concede the results of the Democratic primary in the Third Hampshire District's state representative's race to winner Ellen Story.

First district Democratic primary winner Ellen Story.

Story, an Amherst resident, edged Hite by 89 votes in a race that was as close as many observers expected. Unofficial results showed Story with 1,587 votes to Hite's 1,498, with absentee results not yet in.

Norman Page of Pelham finished with 989 votes, while Amherst's Terry Franklin, considered by most to be a long-shot, tallied 80 votes.

Republican Mark Enoch of Amherst ran unopposed in the Republican primary, moving on to the Mar. 17 general election.

The Amherst-Pelham seat opened last fall when three-term representative Stanley Rosenberg was elected to the State Senate on September 24, filling the seat vacated by state Sen. John Olver.

A beaming Story, who came to the television studio at approximately 9:30 p.m., said the final results were a testament to her campaign's strategy of providing accessibility to the citizens of Amherst and Pelham.

"The reason I'd thought I'd win was because I had so many people working on my campaign," Story said. "It seemed to me that any campaign that had as many people working on

UMass students discuss Democratic hopefuls

By BROOKE C. WHEELER

Although not registered New Hampshire voters, University students have their own ideas about how the contenders for the presidential Democratic candidacy stack up.

"Tom Harkin is probably the one I would vote for," said junior political science major Jeremy Pease. "He's a man of the people, and he stands for basic democratic views."

Senior English major Edward Ashton said, "Definitely [Bill] Clinton. He seems to have the best chance of beating George Bush, and that is my major concern."

Marjorie Decker, a sophomore STPEC and women's studies major, said, "I would vote for [Tom] Harkin, because he seems more consistent than any other candidate in trying to improve the quality of life."

"I guess I would vote for [Jerry] Brown," said Matthew Lawrence, a junior history major. "He has the most interesting history. But if Ralph Nader was in the running, I'd vote for him."

"I think Clinton is the only one who can get us out of the recession," said Greg Oginz, a junior marketing major. "As far as the Gennifer Flowers scandal is concerned, we all make mistakes."

Arthur Jemison, a senior STEPC major, is not decided on which candidate he prefers.

Elizabeth Caruso, a senior sociology major, said, "I'd vote Clinton. I think he handled the affair scandal well, not denying it and lying to the public."

Several students remain unimpressed by any of the contenders for the Democratic candidacy.

"I probably would abstain if I were a registered voter," said Marc Rie, a sophomore political science major. "I'm not real thrilled with any of the candidates."

Erika Higgins, a junior BDIC major, said, "Actually, I'm really glad I'm not voting, because I am so unimpressed with all the candidates. It worries me that these are our only choices."

"If I had to choose, it would be between Tsongas and Harkin," said senior STPEC major Arthur Jemison. "Harkin has the strong social policies, while Tsongas has more of a sound economic plan.

"On the down side, neither has any civil rights stand or innovative proposals for urban problems," he continued. "But we can't get a true picture of any real issues because all we hear on T.V. are catchy soundbites that pass for national policy."

Vigil marks anniversary of death

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

Thirty-five people gathered at Amherst Common yesterday to remember Gregory D. Levey, the Amherst resident who one year ago this week immolated himself in protest of the Persian Gulf War.

Amherst residents and peace activists from around the area took part in a Buddhist ceremony in memory of Levey who set himself on fire on a Monday afternoon in the center of Amherst Common.

Charles Carrol, an Amherst resident and UMass graduate student, knew Levey for over ten years and spoke about his action one year later.

"It was a very selfless act," Carrol said of his friend, "The most important thing was that his death was an act of principle."

Campus reaction varied one year ago. Both students and faculty were shaken by Levey's death.

Jennifer Cannon, a UMass senior, took part in remembering Levey and the act in which he gave his life.

"I'm grateful for the inspirational sacrifice that took place here," Cannon said, "But the peace movement isn't just about what's going on here today, because wars continue and it's our responsibility to work for change," she said.

Amidst the drumming and chanting of two Buddhist monks from the Levertt Peace Pagoda, people took turns paying tribute to Levey.

Participants, some of whom were emotionally overcome by the memory of the event, read poetry and spoke of personal events that they have experienced since Levey's death.

Diane Westfall, an Amherst resident and one of the ceremony's organizers, said that the community and particularly the Common will never be the same because of Levey's sacrifice.

"For me, it [the Common one year ago] was a place where I could bare my grief," Westfall said, "I think the common is now a special place where a young man gave his life," she said.

Westfall also expressed hope that a tree could be planted as a more permanent memorial.

In addition to the ceremony, a three volume collection documenting the effects and gifts left at the vigil site last year will be given to both Levey's family and the UMass library.

Arron Fincke, a junior at Hampshire College, said he felt compelled to create the volumes because of the community's reaction to Levey's death.

"I was affected by the intensity of the community's reaction," Fincke said, "It was an unprecedented moment in Amherst history and I felt I should be documented."

Levey was the son of Boston Globe restaurant reviewer Robert Levey and Pulitzer Prize winning columnist Ellen Goodman, both whom have kept in touch with several members of the vigil.

Candles and incense circled by a ring of pine branches yesterday marked the spot where Levey died and many at the scene were silent, keeping their thoughts to themselves.

In a bizarre moment for all in attendance, two military fighter jets flew directly overhead several times causing participants to shake their heads in disgust.

and Clinton both were splitting New Hampshire's 18 convention delegates. The vote was: Tsongas 19,634 or 33 percent; Clinton 16,440 or 28 percent.

For Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska and Tom Harkin of Iowa, the challenge was to defeat the other and emerge as the more liberal alternative to Tsongas or Clinton. Kerrey had 12 percent and Harkin 11. Former California Gov. Jerry Brown had 9 percent.

"Bronze ain't bad," said Kerrey, claiming third place with the vote still being counted.

Democratic National Chairman Ronald H. Brown said the New Hampshire results put Bush "in incredible peril."

someone's behalf as mine couldn't lose."

Story, who said nearly 250 people ranging in age from six to 89 years old worked for her campaign, said she wasn't surprised by the close final result.

"The only thing that would have surprised me was if Terry Franklin had won," Story said. "I could have envisioned any of the other three candidates winning — in my imagination, I could have seen it being closer than 89 votes."

Story and Enoch will be joined in the general election by Amherst businessman Larry Kelley, an Independent. Kelley has said in the past he is running because he feels Story is not qualified to represent the district.

Early returns showed Hite with a slight edge over Story, with Hite leading 1,216 to 1,170 with returns from seven of the 10 precints.

A turning point in the election, however, was Pelham, where Story grabbed approximately 100 more votes than Hite. Although Page, a Pelham native who has been active in local politics for the past 25 years, took 285 of the town's 482 votes, he didn't receive the margin there that many observers expected him to.

"I don't know if we could have done anything differently," Hite said. "I know we took an esoteric issue like tuition retention and made it something people could understand and care about."

Student volunteer program reaches out

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

"Be part of a campus that serves," is the slogan for the recently established Community Service Program that has college students entering surrounding communities in the role as a volunteer.

"It is exciting that the University is supporting a campus program that will serve the community," said Diane Huebner, a graduate student in the school of education and the coordinator for the program.

The Community Service program offers a wide variety of options for the prospective college volunteer. These include working with at risk youth and with the physically challenged as well as problems such as homelessness, the environment and substance abuse, or many other causes, said Huebner.

The program is sponsored by the Mather Career Center and has established three goals: to place interested students in volunteer positions, to promote community service among campus groups, and to serve as a clearing house for volunteer information on campus.

"We are trying to unite groups in order to share information among other campus groups, so that people on campus are informed of what they are doing as well as collaborating information," said Huebner.

"We want to support those individuals and groups that are already doing community service and make it simple for others to get involved," she said.

To become a volunteer you must attend a workshop at Curry Hicks, entitled "Introduction to Public Service," which is offered every Thursday at 11 a.m.

In addition to the workshops, the Mather Career Center is also sponsoring a Volunteer Fair today in the Campus Center, room 163, between 1 p.m. and 4 p.m. The fair will consist of approximately 35 community and campus non-profit agencies. These range from MADD to UMass's own Residential Recycling Program.

"We have received a very positive reception from everybody," said Huebner.

Hampshire County Home Care Services Inc. of Northampton, is one agency that is seeking student volunteers from UMass, to provide respite care to Alzheimer's patients and their families.

In a prepared statement, Carol Conrad, executive director of the Northhampton organization said she likes the intergenerational focus of the program.

"Students can learn from older people, and older people can learn from young people who bring a fresh perspective to life," said Conrad.

Chancellor O'Brien will speak at a luncheon today to kick off the Community Service Program and will announce his appointments to the Community Service Program Advisory Board. The advisory board will be made up of key figures who have established experience in community service and volunteer work.

Jewish vote changing

Professor discusses conservative shift

By JOE O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

How will the Jewish people vote in the upcoming election?

This issue was addressed by David Dalin at the center for Jewish Studies yesterday afternoon. Dalin, the associate professor of American Jewish History at the University of Hartford, is the author of From Marxism to Judaism: The Collected Essays of Will Herberg."

"Generally, the Jewish vote was once considered politically liberal and democratic," Professor Dalin said.

Two former Presidents, Theodore Roosevelt and Franklin Delano Roosevelt, established that, according to Dalin. It was F.D.R.'s "New Deal" that gave many learned Jews jobs during and after the Great Depression. Teddy Roosevelt was the first President to appoint Jews to Cabinet and White House staff positions.

"Both Presidents," Dalin added, "were sympathetic to the severe anti-Semitism in Russia and Eastern Europe."

"However, the Jewish vote has been slowly changing since the late sixties. This was seen especially in the election of 1980," Dalin said.

In his bid for re-election, then-president Jimmy Carter received forty-five percent of the Jewish vote. This was the first time in over half a century the Democratic candidate had received less than fifty percent of the Jewish vote.

In contrast, former President Reagan received thirty-seven percent of the vote. Professor Dalin attributed this to the supportive stance the Republicans had for Israel.

The Jewish vote had been Republican at the turn of the century. The mass immigration of German Jews between 1840 and 1850 coincided with the founding of the Republican Party in 1854.

Dalin said the new arrivals identified with the party, especially on the issue of slavery. Republicans were often abolitionists, while Southern Democrats staunchly supported slavery.

Preschool serving the special needs of disabled youngsters

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The Walden Learning Center, an alternative preschool for children at the University of Massachusetts, now offers expanded services after joining forces with the private, non-profit May Institute.

"In the past, the May Institute served only autistic children, but it now serves all special needs and developmental disabilities," said Kathleen Dyer, the new director of the center and adjunct professor in the psychology department.

The May Institute has "doubled its number of students [at the Center]" added Dyer.

The Center, developed by the UMass psychology department in 1985, serves typically developing children and children with developmental disabilities, such as autism from the ages of 2.9 to 6 years.

"The main focus is to enhance communication and social skills. The next focus is to teach the children kindergarten survival skills and self-care skills," said Dyer.

"The typical children are sensitized at an early age to challenging conditions other people might face, and the special needs children are provided with opportunities for social and language interactions that they may not receive in a segregated setting," said Dyer.

"There are not enough services in western Massachusetts for autism," said Dyer. She said the only other center [in western Massachusetts] is located in Pittsfield.

Dyer said as a result, families must move to be closer to these centers. "Children come to the Center from a 50-mile radius," said Dyer.

"The Center, which runs year-round, currently serves 16 students, but there are still openings," said Dyer.

The six hour school day runs from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. with the help of 13 teachers and ten research assistants.

Dyer said if autistic children do not receive treatment, then they may end up in a state hospital. She said there is a 50 per cent chance of integrating autistic children into the normal system.

"If we get the children early, we can change their whole life," said Dyer. "Since the Center started in 1985, eleven out of fourteen kids have been mainstreamed," added Dyer.

Dyer has also been working with psychology Professor Robert Feldman to further develop the center as a research and training site for UMass.

The psychology department is "very much" involved with the Center, Dyer said.

"The research assistants all come from the psychology department," said Dyer. "The Center is a laboratory training site for students to do projects with the children," she added.

Dyer, Feldman and Professor Sulzer-Azaroff of the psychology department, recently submitted a grant to the Office of Special Education in Washington D.C.

"The proposal prepares doctorate level personnel to work with children with disabilities," said Dyer.

Dyer said she is also involved with writing grants to facilitate a child's involvement with the family and community.

The May Institute, which assumed operation of the Center last year, was founded in 1955.

It operates a comprehensive network of services in Massachusetts for individuals with developmental disabilities, mental illness, or behavior disorders.

The May Institute is currently affiliated with over 30 universities and medical centers throughout the United States and Europe and has been recognized as one of the nation's Schools of Excellence by the U.S. Department of Education.

About 25 students from Fitchburg and Gardner High Schools attended yesterday's "UMass Bilingual Collegiate Program and United Asian Learning Resource Center Reach-Out Recruitment Day." This activity was sponsored by The New England Farm Workers' Council, BCP and UALRC. The objectives of this activity were to provide students with useful information about obtaining a career at UMass and to increase the student's motivation to continue an education beyond high school."

These bilingual high school students from Hispanic and Asian background were given information about financial aid and admissions, and also received the reassurance that they would be helped with their courses through the BCP and UALRC if they attend UMass.

All of the students, who participated in the program, were from a disadvantaged economic position. Many of them had an extremely poor academic background.

"See that girl, I happened to be looking through one of her books. The book was written for someone who is in eighth grade, she is a junior in high school," said Phil Moore from the New England Farm Worker's Council.

This example demonstrates why many of these students are falling through the cracks of the Classes help bridge gap in language

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Correspondent

Imagine that you're a cafeteria worker. You're Chinese and have been in the United States for only six months. You're having difficulty understanding directions that you are given at work because of the language barrier. Upset and discouraged about your experience in this new country, you desperately look for help.

Enter the Labor/Management Workplace Education Program.

The program, pegged LMWEP for short, has been in existence since 1987. Its creation was a combined effort on the part of UMass and AFSCME Local 1776, an organization of union workers.

LMWED is a program which offers many courses and workshops to blue-collar workers (and, as of late, clerical and technical workers) for no charge. Most of the courses are taught by graduate students, who normally would be employed as undergraduate teaching assistants.

The program's offerings include courses in Leadership Development, Communication Skills, and English-as-a-Second Language. Instruction in basic skills such as reading, writing and math is also available.

Program Coordinator Joe Connelly describes the program as two-tiered "It offers courses in basic skills and, after learners have achieved adequate proficiency in these areas, they may move on to the second level of the program, Next Steps. Next Steps offers a rich array of workshops which allow workers to discuss issues they've encountered in the workplace. It is truly a sharing experience, and students are encouraged to guide the discussions themselves."

Neighborhoods seek to secede

BOSTON (AP) — An organization of black residents is attempting again to carve a new, independent city from Boston's minority neighborhoods.

The effort by FATE, or Focusing Attitudes Toward Empowerment, is the third such campaign in less than a decade.

"The community must realize it has two choices: it can live as a municipality or die as a ghetto," said FATE member Andrew Jones, who was a leader in an earlier secessionist drive.

Jones said promises of economic benefits and political power have not materialized, and the city's elected School Committee has been replaced by a committee appointed by the mayor. While the new committee, like the old, has minority representation, residents have complained that the appointed board is accountable only to the mayor, while the elected committee had to answer to neighborhood voters.

"The black community has come apart at the seams," Jones told The Boston Globe.

"No elected School Committee, no elected black officials at large, no development, kids killing each other in the streets, and a lousy school system."

Bids to secede and create a separate city to be named Mandela, after South Africa's Nelson Mandela, were defeated by ratios of 3-1 in 1986 and 2-1 in 1988.

FATE is not committed to a name for the city it wants to create from the Roxbury and Mattapan neighborhoods and parts of Dorchester and Jamaica Plain. The city would measure 12.5 square miles and include about 125,000 residents.

Mayor Raymond Flynn and some of the city's leading businesses opposed the earlier break-away attempts. So did some of the city's best-known black leaders, including the Rev. Charles Stith.

"It's an issue folks in our community fully understand," Stith said. "It's come up twice and it's been defeated twice. I expect voters will react the same way to it this time."

Stith said Boston's black residents should instead increase their involvement in the political process and work at attracting more private-sector investment.

Supporters of the secessionist movement plan to begin collecting signatures in April for a November ballot referendum that would establish a special commission to study the feasibility of creating a separate city.

A similar referendum, limited to four city neighborhoods, was defeated in 1990.

Sadiki Kambon, a leader of the current movement, said the goal is to have the commission study the question for two years and then put it on ballot in a binding referendum in 1994.

Organizers would aim for incorporating the new community no later than 1996.

"We've been working at this for almost a decade now," said Kambon, director of the Black Community Information Center.

"We're not out here for moral victories or to get press coverage or to influence City Hall. We're not in this for symbolism. We're in this to win."

New bishop stresses values

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD — The Rev. John A. Marshall called Tuesday for all religions to join in a renewal of traditional morality, as he took over leadership of the 322,000 Roman Catholics of western Massachusetts.

"I am committed to working toward the genuine Christian unity and to working harmoniously with those of other faiths," he said during his installation as the new bishop in Springfield.

"It is my hope and expectation that . . . we may be able to rebuild the system of family and moral values, which was accepted and lived by persons of most every religion — Protestant, Jewish, Catholic or any other — when I was growing up a half century ago," he added.

Marshall spoke at a solemn ceremony at St. Michael's Cathedral in Springfield. Earlier, dozens of bishops, cardinals and parish priests from around the country filed into the Cathedral to strains of organ music and the flickering light of candles.

Among the estimated 1,200 people celebrating the installation were Cardinal Bernard Law of Boston and Archbishop James Hickey of Washington D.C.. Political leaders, including U.S. Rep. Richard Neal of Springfield, were also on hand.

The Rev. Agostino Cacciavillan, a representative of Pope John Paul II, read a papal letter that formally designated Marshall as the new bishop.

Young people from the four-county diocese later presented Marshall with gifts representative of their areas. Marshall was given a basketball and a volleyball from Hampden County, where the two sports were invented.

Marshall, a 62-year-old Worcester native, took the pastoral staff as the sixth bishop in the 122-year history of the diocese. During his homily, he urged stronger religious education, more prayer, and a resurgence of candidates for the priesthood.

Defending the church's teaching about sex, he said, "We are sometimes told that the church in our day seems to have an obsession with sexual matters. Is it not secular society which has the obsession?"

He added, "It is strange indeed that in a country which maintains that, with the power of human intelligence, we can do almost anything we want to do, we foolishly and falsely abdicate the use of intellect and free will by submitting that in matters of the flesh we must act like brute animals."

Marshall replaces Bishop Joseph F. Maguire, 72, who is retiring after 15 years at the post in Springfield.

Traditional law schools must change

A red flag waved among many of us women who are considering entering into the arduous process of law school. I'm sure as we sat and listened on as one woman recapped her horrid experience in a traditional law school setting, I was not alone in feeling that somewhere in my gut, I had a knowledge of this but suppressed it. What this woman's experience did was to confirm the reality that when women, and particularly "uppity" ones, decide to take power, they are met with massive resistance. Professor Diane Brooks, a recent addition to the Legal Studies Department at UMass, and in my opinion a tremendous asset, stated that the structure of traditional socratic law school classrooms reinforce the expectation placed upon women to maintain a silent existence.

Professor Brooks spoke of the overall dissatisfaction with the field and added that many women simply abandon the legal profession after discovering its inherent prejudices, while others who possess different values, collude with the system in exchange for their soul. According to Brooks, most law schools expect students to conform to the legal education without question and display little tolerance for any type of alternate views within the classroom structure. But, she added, most students go to law school to be corporate lawyers with no intent of changing the system, but rather to pursue the type of lifestyles and values that the legal system facilitates.

Lisa Veshecco

I asked, "How does one reconcile a desire to help people seek justice in personal and political legal issues with a system that just simply does not work for the majority of people?" A tough question that brought no clear cut or positive answers. It did however, clarify in my mind the reality of law school and the legal profession for women who possess values different than what the system facilitates. Listening to Professor Brooks really brought home the reality of compromise many women have to tolerate just to arrive at a position where we can be heard because we now have the "correct" language with which to play the game. This in itself is a pretty absurd notion considering the fact that the rules are mostly stacked against anyone other than most white boys. One exception includes the inherent racism of using the white female standard of sex discrimination when trying to measure the impact of discrimination on the experience of woman of color.

A local political candidate, Ellen Story, brought up a good point in which she reminded everyone just how important the law is in our lives. Yes, I agree. But I can't help asking myself j .st how much impact can one think to have on a monstrous system that vehemently denies the charge of non-neutrality. Okay, I reckon, maybe the strategy is for women to infiltrate the system one by one and in some collective way we will have an impact on changing sexist, racist, classist, and homophobic laws and doctrines.

Suddenly, I remember I've always been somewhat of an idealist, and I begin to really wonder if it's really gonna make a difference. But, on the other hand, I grapple with the fact that if I just sit around and allow the system to maintain itself as it is capable of doing than before I finally decide that I'm gonna get in there and give 'em hell, it will be too late because what has evolved in a very short period of time is fascist government policies.

Forget the idea of preparing for the LSAT for I think my bigger problem now lies with fighting off these pig jerks who tell me I'm now to stay at home and produce babies for the sake of the country's survival. I think it's time to reread "A Handmaid's Tale."

Deficit is everybody's problem

The current decline in national employment and economic output (i.e. the recession) will probably end fairly soon regardless of what public policies may be adopted. This is because economic activity tends to be cyclical and recessions tend to be short-term phenomena that do not last much longer than this one has. However, certain long-term trends, such as the absence of family income growth that has persisted for the last 20 years, will probably continue. Between 1947 and 1973, median family income (adjusted for inflation) nearly doubled. Since 1973, it has grown only 6 percent. Slow income growth is correlated with slow growth in productivity, the economic output per worker. American productivity growth stalled in the early 1970s and has never returned to the higher levels that prevailed previously. As Michael Kinsley of the New Republic reported in a recent article, "Since 1975, Japan's output per person has increased by almost 50% while America's has increased by a mere 12%."

American "laziness" is not the culprit. As reported recently in Newsweek and elsewhere, the average American's number of working hours per week has been increasing while those of the Japanese worker have been decreasing. The average West German or French worker works 320 hours (about eight working weeks) less per year than the average American.

Instead, low American productivity growth is largely due to the relatively low American rates of investment in plant and equipment, process development, worker and manager training, and general education.

One of the biggest impediments to such investment is the federal deficit, the amount the U.S. government must borrow each year to cover the difference between its expenditures and its tax revenue.

The federal deficit not only reduces the availability of investment capital, it also encourages importing and discourages exporting. This is because the government must obtain much of its borrowed funds from foreign lenders, and this produces less favorable currency exchange rates which "artificially" make American products less price-competitive both at home and abroad. Deficits also constitute an extra tax burden for future generations to pay.

Unfortunately, the deficit has received relatively little attention from the presidential candidates. This is probably because most American voters seem unaware of how the deficit ultimately depresses their personal income. The annual deficit is now six times what it was when Ronald Reagan was vilifying Jimmy Carter for his deficits 12 years ago. Any hope for sustained improvement of the average American's standard of living requires that today's leaders start addressing the deficit seriously.

Two strange cousins fight on

It's Israel's "eagerness" to negotiate, Secretary of State Baker's political perseverance, Bush's "more than Arab" economic ultimatum and Palestinian nationalism refusing to disappear that brought the Israelis and Arabs, for the first time, face to face in Madrid, then in Washington and recently in Moscow.

The question remains, what is there to negotiate between Israel, Arabs and Palestinian Arabs? The answer — the unpleasant truth being, solving the problem of the Palestinian refugees would require sacrifices by all parties concerned, namely, Israel, Arab states and Palestinians themselves.

In spite of historical claims by both sides, the future of the West Bank and Gaza cannot be settled through religious passion or force or both. Both parties are beginning to learn that there can be no settlement unless and until more than two million Palestinians living in the various Arab states, many of whom may want to live in a Palestinian state, are accounted for.

Infada's leaders are revered and obeyed in the territories and East Jerusalem as well. Hence the argument in which Palestinians are acceptable as representatives of the West Bank and Gaza may be easy, but pointless in Palestinian political dynamics and even, to a certain extent, quite invalid.

As negotiations progressed in and after Washington, whether Israel would ever allow the dread word "sovereignty" to be mentioned could entirely depend on the concession in the form of indication, to quell the fears of most Israelis including many moderates, from Palestinian negotiators that a Palestinian state would never follow the Israeli example in enacting its own Law of Return — any Palestinian could move in at will.

Since the liberation of Kuwait, many Palestinians have been asking relatives to help them take refuge in the West Bank from the wrath of the Kuwaitis and their future is uncertain in the rest of the Arab world as well.

A deal by the name of "Palestinian sovereignty" could not be sold in Israel unless it was perceived as Arab states sharing the burden of settlement — irrevocable rights of residence and economic participation.

Arguably so, the fate of Palestinian statehood, in spite of U.S. efforts to make Israel accept a Palestinian state, will depend on the sacrifices made by the Palestinian leaders and Arab states.

To ensure permanent peace between Israel and Palestine, a larger plan for the reconstruction of the Middle East should be undertaken.

The western governments, including the United States and wealthy Arab states, that have been pleading the case of the Palestinians, will now have to join, like the United States led reconstruction of Europe after World War II, to end the embitterment between two strange cousins so far removed, yet so close.

The truth is a frightening thing indeed

You think your life is surreal. You wear headphones when you walk around campus so you can pretend you're in a video. Yeah, you have some strange moments, but I can beat anything you have to tell me. You see, I have experienced a world in which people spoke exactly what was on their minds. Complete honesty. You think this is good. You could be very wrong. It happened last week . . .

Brooke C. Wheeler

When I woke up, it felt like any other Friday. The shower was fine, I got my contact lenses in alright, got some clean clothes — and then my roommate woke up.

She squinted at me. And groaned. "God, I get so sick of seeing you every morning. I hate having a roommate. You're a slob. Are you wearing sweatpants again today? Put on some makeup. It's the least you can do if I have to look at you every day. If I have to watch you pluck your eyebrows again, I think I'm going to throw up." Ho, I am gone. Off to class. She's just tense.

The class was a lecture hall, a safe place to hide. To relax. The professor briskly walked through the door.

"I'm not going to say "Hello class" because I don't feel like it. I'm not in the mood to deal with you little snot-nosed know-it-all alcoholic brats. None of you do homework. Do you think I don't realize that? I don't get paid enough. You think I like wearing corduroy all the time?"

I looked around me in amazement, expecting to see similar bewildered looks. People just took out notebooks, uncapped pens, folded Collegians and stuffed them away. What the . . .?

The professor began lecturing. Three minutes into his lecture, a girl raised her hand. "Excuse me, I'm one of those obnoxious people that asks stupid, irrelevant questions in large lecture hall classes. I don't really have anything important to ask, but I'm going to use big words."

In astonishment, I watched as the professor rolled his eyes. "Oh, I hate it when you pseudo-intellectual brown-nosers try and sound like you know something. I want a cigarette . . . where is my coffee . . ." I snuck out the back, convinced I was experiencing flashbacks from something I might have smoked in a former life.

Later that afternoon, I took a trip to my least favorite place — the hair salon. The woman told me to sit down in front of the sink and lean back.

She looked at my hair. And sneered.

"You know, you are the fifth customer I've had today. I'm sick of you people. That is the ugliest color brown I think I've ever seen. Do you use conditioner or axle grease? Washing other people's hair is gross." Thank you, I'm outta here.

So, in a state of extreme panic, I darted down the street into a clothing store. A salesgirl walked up to me and looked me up and down. "Nice sweatpants, babe. You need serious help. And don't even think of returning clothing items to the wrong rack. I hate people who leave clothes in dressing rooms."

I was narrowly missed by a several moving vehicles as I ran out into the street, weeping with confusion. This is not an ideal world, I thought as I finally ricocheted off the bumper of a Volvo.

I awakened several hours later, unharmed yet still dazed with fear. Nevertheless, in true UMass spirit I pulled myself together and went to a frat party that night with some friends. The place was packed full, and as I squeezed past a guy and girl talking in a corner, I overheard part of their conversation . . .

"So, yeah, uh, I'm going to act real suave for the next ten-fifteen minutes and then invite you up to see my exotic beer bottle collection, at which time I will try to . . ."

U.N. security council hands Iraq ultimatum

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The U.N. Security Council on Tuesday handed Iraq an ultimatum: either start cooperating fully with U.N. weapons inspectors or face grave, though unspecified, consequences.

The 15-member council decided in closed consultations to send Rolf Ekeus, who heads the special commission monitoring Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, to Baghdad at once to demand compliance with U.N. resolutions.

"The council would not want to think it's providing an ultimatum, but it sure looks like one, doesn't it?" said U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering, the current council president.

Pickering declined to say what the council would do if Iraq still fails to cooperate. "This is one of those issues it is now not fruitful to speculate about. No options are ruled in. No options are ruled out."

Diplomats speculate the council could tighten the economic sanctions against Baghdad and close all loopholes allowing supplies into the country.

No one has mentioned military force, but the council already authorized the use of force to drive Iraqi forces from Kuwait and an indirect reference to force is contained in the resolution setting ease-fire terms.

There has also been speculation about possible "demonstration bombing" of weapons installations not knocked out in the war.

Pickering said Ekeus would "consult at the highest political level to to secure the Iraqi commitment to comply." He said Ekeus told the council about "serious, grave, maybe even appalling Iraqi disdain for resolutions of the council."

education system. Moore explains that many communities are now entering their middle-age years an have had all their children finish school. He adds that now they are not involved with the educational system and that these older parents no longer care. As a result of the majority of the society becoming elderly, educational issues are being swept under the carpet.

In addition, he continued to point out that many in the community feel that these students' problems just don't effect them. In one town in eastern Massachusetts, the residents decided to improve the football team, rather then spend the money to help the bilingual students.

Jennifer McNeil is a 1991 UMass graduate who has been working with the New England Farm Workers' Council. This association has been working with bilingual students in Fitchburg and Gardner high schools through after-school tutoring. She said that many of these students come from homes where their parents cannot speak English. According to McNeil, this results in many students having difficulty with the English language so they come to these centers to get help in school.

"Unfortunately, many of [the students] don't come forward, so as an incentive we will pay the student $2.50 an hour," she noted.

Since 1974 the BCP has been helping the bilingual student community at UMass. Manuela Littlefield, the assistant director, says that through working with many departments on campus, such as admissions and financial aid, they have been able to help over six hundred students a year.

BCP deals with Hispanic students, while the UALRC works with Asians.

Smith College sponsors lecture

Researcher clarifies myths of Native Americans

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Correspondent

Last Monday, Smith College hosted guest speaker Nancy Mitchell to give a lecture pertaining to the retrieving and collecting of human, Native American remains over the course of history.

Mitchell is a member of the Chiricahua tribe who has devoted much of her life trying to eradicate the misconceptions of Native Americans by challenging the scientific institutions that have promoted and supported racism over the years. She asserts that our blind faith in science has caused us to overlook the racist undertones in various research and theories, especially those found in the study of Native American bones and fornology.

Mitchell went back to the 1830s, when frontiersman John Cartland studied the Native American culture and recorded it in the form of letters and notes.

Mitchell explained that despite Cartland's proclaimed admiration for the Indians, he was an avid collector of Indian skulls. Cartland lacked respect for traditional, spiritual burials, and was hypocritical and inconsistent in his attitude about Native American culture.

Later, in the mid 1800s, "experts" such as Orson Fowler used the field of fornology to promote certain ideas about various races. They believed that the size of the skull and brain determined the capabilities, strengths, and weaknesses of the mind. Common traits among the shape and characteristics of the skull were supposed to account for behavioral and cultural differences.

Orson determined that the generally low forehead found in the Indian skull accounted for the "violent, destructive" nature of the Native American, and promoted the idea that Indians were savage and rampant.

According to Orson, African-Americans were superior in linguistics, memory skills, and musical areas, but like Native Americans, lacked the reasoning and moral skills found to be superior in Caucasians upon study. Caucasian skulls were said to modify these abilities, while the Native and African-Americans had a worse fate.

Orson and others in his field used science to draw stereotypes and negative images of different races that were somehow threatening to them. White America took scientific theory for fact, and believed that Native Americans were naturally aggressive.

Mitchell asserts that the procedures and proposes of scientific research are often just as questionable as the results. Mitchell first cited the fact that human bodies were often referred to as "skeletal remains," a term which dehumanizes the people studied, and helps to distort the focus on the study of culture.

Mitchell also stated that of the 33,000 samples collected by The Smithsonian Institute, 90 percent of which were collected before the turn of the century, 90 percent had never even been taken out of their boxes for study, and only 21 had been returned to their respective tribes for proper burials over the course of 100 years. The Smithsonian's defense was that these skeletal remains were to be looked at as "reference materials", and would be used if needed to answer a particular question.

The likening of human bodies to reference materials diminishes the cultural value of Native Americans' bones. Mitchell said this demonstrates the research interest coming before the research subject, and thus questions the relevance of this science to the Native American community. It also utilizes the scientific pretense that we are beyond the world's constraints, and that humanity has little to do with science. This sentiment, Mitchell claims, "destroys our connections to each other and to the earth."

Today, legislation such as The Native American Claims Commission Act fights to protect the interests and rights of the Native Americans, especially concerning issues like grave protection.

Native Americans are also taking the initiative to do their own archeological research, but despite these opportunities, Mitchell still finds she must work around certain limiting models that have been set over the years.

"The past is our present," she repeated throughout her lecture.

Mitchell was referring to the fact that many Native American religious leaders believe that their current problems are due to the fact that their ancestors' bones are being held in captivity, and that the loss of their land, culture, and language leave them with little more than "domestically dependent nations within the nation."

Mitchell discussed the predominant sentiment that to be Indian, one has to fit a certain traditional pattern. This attitude, she said, encourages a revitalization of traditional Indian customs, and leaves modern-day Native Americans without the opportunity to invent and create new aspects of the culture.

Mitchell asserted that her purpose for lecturing was not to promote white guilt.

"Everyone wants to do something good for the Indians, but do the Indians want something good done for them?" Mitchell asked.

Neil's gone and a new Crue lives on

By A.C. FOSTER
Collegian Staff

According to reports from MTV Feb. 15, Vince Neil, lead vocalist for the hard rock group Motley Crue, has left the group at the pleasure of both Neil and the remaining members.

Neil informed the group of his decision during a recording session while the band was working on material for a new album. Upon his revelation, the rest of the group told Neil that they no longer wanted him singing for the band anyway.

The reasons for the mutual desire to part from one another are multiple, and at best sketchy at the present time. Apparently, Neil has done a bit of "falling off the wagon" lately, much to the dismay of the other members who recently completed a comeback from drug and alcohol addiction.

Bassist Nikki Sixx, who is particularly proud of the group's sobriety, said the band will continue to record and is having auditions to find a "young and arrogant" lead vocalist.

Sixx and fellow Crue members — guitarist Mick Mars and drummer Tommy Lee — have done the songwriting in the past and have apparently been irritated by Neil's lack of contribution.

It is well known that Neil has a profound interest in auto racing, and he may in fact be pursuing that alternative.

Whatever the reasons for his departure, Neil will be missed in the rock world. He and Motley Crue have sold over four million of each of their last four albums. Motley Crue just signed a contract with their long-time label, Elektra Records, for a four album deal reportedly worth $25 million. Whether or not this contract will be effected by the recent turn of events is unknown.

MTV asked that viewers remember Van Halen, when they lost former lead vocalist David Lee Roth, Black Sabbath, when they lost their former lead vocalist Ozzy Ozbourne, and AC/DC, when they were set back by the death of vocalist Bon Scott. The great bands go on.

Shakespeare becomes accessible to everyone

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Who understandeth thee not, loves thee not.

It was nearly 400 years ago when William Shakespeare reflected on the truth of that statement — no doubt unaware that his words would survive for so long, or that they would, one day, apply so directly to him. Although Shakespeare is generally considered to be the greatest poet and dramatist in the English language, the extent of his genius is often lost on indifferent audiences.

Part of the blame lies, perhaps, with the educators who perpetuate the image of Shakespeare as merely the author of numerous ancient texts — painstakingly exhumed and resuscitated by scholars and pedants, who wield them as weapons of annoyance against college students everywhere. The popular conception of Shakespeare is not one of a bawdy jokester or a chronicler of timeless emotions and follies. This, says Lisa Risley-Aquizap, is precisely the problem.

Risley-Aquizap is the acting artistic director of the Brush Up Your Shake-Speare Society, a newly formed Student Group, which seeks to bring Shakespeare a more contemporary audience, through student-run productions of Shakespearian classics, as well as works by latter day dramatists (such as Tom Stoppard and Richard Nelson) who use the Bard as inspiration.

The Society, formed by Risley-Aquizap and Tabula Rasa head Corey Perlstein (who is also the group's producer) promises to fill the gap between the three prominent on-campus theatre groups.

The Theatre Department and Theatre Guild have both established themselves as professional operations on a small scale, and experience is understandably required. Student Valley Productions (SVP) is often more accomodating because it strives to be more experimental. SVP (for many years UMass' only open-armed Theatre RSO) focuses on more contemporary student-written or non-traditional shows.

What the Brush Up Your Shakespeare Society adds to this mix is the opportunity for interested students (from any major) to become involved in the production of a classic. The key to Shakespeare, explains Risley-Aquizap, is not experience, but rather "the actor and the director knowing what they are doing." She should know — after all, she is coming to the society directly from a hit production of Twelfth Night (at Lesley College, Cambridge) performed almost exclusively by non-actors.

If an actor can understand the text, she feels, he can love it — and if he can love it, he can make the audience love it as well. This is the central philosophy of the group, and one which will play a large part in the creative processes behind their upcoming staging of the The Taming of the Shrew.

But purists beware! This is not to be a typical Shrew — genders have been switched, and messages updated — but it is one which seeks to express, like all good Shakespeare, "The eternal paradox of humanity — man as a noble creature, and at the same time, man as the animal he is."

The society also hopes to serve the public with other events such as lectures or workshops, although details are now sketchy. What is important, however, is that a new voice has arrived — one which seeks to "capture the spirit" of our language's greatest poet.

Bombastics go ballistic

By LISA J. CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Despite the fact that the headlining band cancelled and the sound man couldn't help during the set because he had to check IDs at the door, The Bombastics put on an incredibly lively set that had the audience funking (and smiling) to the beat at the Hatch last week.

Though the band has been together for only six months they play a professional, snappy set that overcomes even the most major obstacles to a band's morale, like not getting paid for the aforementioned gig. They made the best of a bad situation by acknowledging that at least they were getting exposure.

The band's demo tape gives a healthy taste of the band's energetic live performance. It was recorded live in the drummer's (Joe Fitzpatrick) bedroom.

"When we get signed we still want to record live. No lip syncing," says Eric Olsson, the band's lead singer. He's a tall, lanky fellow with a perpetual grin and an endless supply of energy. He does a kind of worm dance when he sings; he wiggles down and then grows tall with a snap.

Olsson's humility and humor keep the show going, even when his guitar strings were snapping. He smirks to the audience, "And they think to themselves, 'what a professional guy.'"

Though "bombastic" is defined as pompous is in the dictionary, Olsson explains, "We're making fun of those guys with the long hair prancing around on stage. We're making fun of the system. Our music is cynical like that."

The band cites their influences as Fishbone, Primus and the Tower of Power, just to name a few. "We're trying to keep it rock and roll, but keep it complicated. We want the music to stay entertaining," says Olsson.

In the song, "Fear" Olsson sounds a bit like Sting (and maybe early Chicago) and yet he can burst out with rapid fire lyrics, bounce up and down and sing, "Why don't you slow down."

The bombastic horn section is filled out by Scott DeMusis on trombone and Bill Chenaille on the sax. Bob Lawliss masters the bass. The extended instrumental sections are professional and effectively display their expertise.

"What time is it/ it's time to get cliche," sings the band. Whistles are blowing, the lyrics are cute, the rhymes impressive and the musicianship is impeccable.

Though I was impressed that the band doesn't do any covers, some of their original material tends to drag on too long on stage. Of course with this last show at the Hatch they probably weren't prepared to playing for so long.

One of the more "pop" type sounding songs is "Lost Imagination," but in this case pop isn't a bad word. This song was still playing in my head almost a week after the show.

The Bombastics will play again at the Hatch on March 5.

Smith and Freddy D, a perfect combination

By SONDRA SUTTON
Collegian Staff

What do you get when you cross the great words of Fredrick Douglas, actor Roger Smith, and a large video screen? A wonderful performance by Roger Smith titled "Fredrick Douglas Now".

On Wednesday, Feb. 5, at the Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Roger Smith dazzled the audience with a modern day impression of Fredrick Douglas, the famous speaker and abolitionist .

Smith began his performance by addressing Douglas's former master. Smith eloquently acted out the words of a letter which Mr. Douglas had written to his master after escaping to freedom.

Smith brought across the feelings of happiness and pain which Fredrick Douglas must have felt while writing the letter.

However, in a modern day fashion Smith spoke to Harriet Tubman on the telephone and was interviewed by Ted Koppel about the Civil War.

The performance progressed with the speeches and lectures of Douglas in chronological order, mixed with very powerful pictures, and video clips appearing on the video screen.

Although the clips on the screen were deep and moving, the emotion and passion with which Smith acted Douglas's role were what brought tears to my eyes.

"I have always been proud of my heritage, and Roger Smith's performance just validated that pride," said Ricardo Townes.

Everyone in attendance had the same feeling of pride. Some said that hearing the words so superbly spoken gave them a feeling of strength.

When asked why and how he started portraying Fredrick Douglas, Smith said that he had always enjoyed reading the work of Fredrick Douglas. "'I started to work on Freddy D as an undergraduate. I read everything I could get my hands on."

Not only has Mr. Smith acted as Fredrick Douglas, but in many, many more roles, his most famous being "Smilie" from Spike Lee's "Do the Right Thing" and as "Professor Howard Randolph" on NBC's "A Different World". My personal favorite is the anxious line brother of Gamma Phi Gamma in "School Daze" also by Spike Lee.

When questioned about other persons which he would like to perform, Smith mentioned that he would like to portray Huey Newton, and Alexander Pushkin. Smith will also portray Christopher Columbus in the fall 1992, as well as "Rudie" in Spike Lee's up coming film "Malcolm X."

Smith had a special message which he felt was instrumental for all young African Americans and this was to "Learn to read Learn to write, Organize yourself to fight."

Smith felt that we all need to invest all we have into education; if we do not do this, we are betraying the legacy of Fredrick Douglas, a man who knew the importance of knowledge.

The Black Mass Communications Project has done an excellent job with sponsoring such a entertaining and educational event in celebration of Black History Month.

Many more organizations are sponsoring events in celebration of Black History month and all are encouraged to attend. We can all learn a great deal from the lectures, and artistic events occurring here at the University, and the surrounding five college area. Remember, "Learn to read learn to write organize yourself to fight!

HSCN: lobstermen and disco dancin'

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome again to the Campus Cable Connection. This week, there is a wide range of movies, from the classics to the strange and bizarre. (See: Lobster Man From Mars). If you remember from last week, (and I know you do, faithful readers), I gave a denotion to those movies that, shall we say, are descerations to that form of entertainment that we call cinema. For each of those choice flicks, I will give a little sign (@@@) to either change the channel or get a barf bag ready. Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, Feb. 19.

Dying Young — Julia Roberts, Campbell Scott. Well, looks like we're starting off on the wrong foot here, hmmm? Sigh, the previews looked so promising, didn't they? Too bad the movie didn't deliver. . . anything. It's your typical cancer movie with a little extra dramatic effect with the chemo scenes — very graphic. Julia is still irresistible, Campbell is good-looking and sweet, but, MEGA thumbs down on the plot, and especially the ending. Survey says . . . BIG X! (@@@)

Real Genius — Val Kilmer, Gabe Jarret, Michelle Meyrink. Stylish satire about a bunch of whiz kids who are being exploited by a very slimy William Atherton. The premise is kind of blah, but the acting, especially by Kilmer, is light and funny. I guarantee at least a few good laughs. ***

Saturday Night Fever — John Travolta, Karen Lynn Gorney, Barry Miller. If you can suffer through 199 minutes of 70s street slang and Bee Gees falsetto music, then you should sit down and watch this movie, because it is really very good. Travolta is a Brooklyn punk who is happy only when he dances at the local disco. ***

Stone Cold — Brian Bosworth, Lance Henriksen, William Forsythe. "The Boz" is a cop who infiltrates a motorcycle gang. There's some good action, some great shootouts, but some crappy acting. Hey, what can I say? It didn't quite work for me. **

Taxi Driver — Robert DeNiro, Cybill Shepherd, Jodie Foster. For some, this movie is a sick, ugly, and disgusting portrayal of the crazed mind of a N.Y.C. cab driver. For others, including myself, it is brilliant and poignant. Director Martin Scorsese literally scorches the screen. The film is hard hitting. . . don't miss it! ****

Terms of Endearment — Shirley MacLaine, Jack Nicholson, Debra Winger. Tearjerker alert! Tearjerker alert! Follows a mother and daughter through their trials and tribulations throughout the years. Jam-packed with Oscar winners, including Screenplay, Director, Best Picture, and Oscars for MacLaine and Nicholson. ****

Total Recall — Arnold Schwarzenegger, Rachel Ticotin, Sharon Stone. Hey all you lunch people in the Bluewall who think I'm a softie who only gives four stars to each movie — just take a look at the movies I give the four star rating. This movie deserves four stars! "AHnold" is a victim of a mind-tampering scheme that brings him to Mars to battle it out with the bad guys. CHECK out the special effects! Few movies have done better. So hmmph! ****

Toy Soldiers — Jason Miller, Cleavon Little, Rodolfo De Anda. The plot kind resembles both High Risk and The Rescue. Last semester, I reviewed the former and slammed it with a vengeance. This one ain't faring too much better. Toy Soldiers is a high paced action flick where kids rescue kids in Latin America. Oy, I hate these plots. No stars. (@@@)

V.I. Warshawski — It's the movie with Kathleen Turner in it, but I didn't get a chance to see it. Sorry!

Weekend at Bernies — Andrew McCarthy, Jonathan Silverman, Catherine Mary Stewart. This is one of those movies where it's cute, it's funny, but I would never shell out money for it. The plot is cutsie — Silverman and McCarthy are invited to a beautiful beach house, but when they arrive, not only is the host dead, but they are innocently involved in a sticky plot. A couple of scenes with the corpse are hysterical. ***

Bill Cosby: "Himself" — Bill is much funnier in this stand-up than in his show. It's nice once in a while to hear a comedian who doesn't rely on obscenities to be humorous. Not that I don't like Eddie Murphy or anything, but I like this show. The dentist scene is a classic. ***

Cousins — Ted Danson, Isabella Rossellini, Sean Young. Is there something about Ted Danson that places him only in Americanized French movies now? Based on the French hit Cousin, Cousine, Danson and Rossellini play cousins whose spouses are cheating on them. . . with each other! Danson is dazzling. ***

Days of Thunder — Tom Cruise, Robert Duvall, Nicole Kidman, Randy Quaid. As my dear friend Doug haughtily remarked the other day, "It's Top Gun on the ground." And it is. Brought to you by the filmmakers and star of Top Gun, this movie is about a die-hard race car stud (who else? Cruise) who boasts that there isn't anything he can't do in a race car. Yawn. I'll give it points for charisma and for having good acting by Duvall. *

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes — Jane Russel, Marilyn Monroe, Charles Coburn. The sequel to this movie is called Gentlemen Marry Brunettes, so what do you suppose they prefer the blondes for? Ha, ha — joke. Monroe and Russel are coquettish, charming, and at their best in this 1953 film. Famous tune "Diamonds Are a Girls Best Friend." 1/2

Heaven Can Wait — Warren Beatty, Julie Christie, Jack Warden. Beatty is a football player who is sent to Heaven too early, and goes back to Earth in a different body. It's a cute movie, but it never really goes anywhere. 1/2

Lobster Man From Mars — Deborah Foreman, Anthony Hickox, Tommy Sledge. Narrated by Dr. Dimento, this flick is a spoof of 1950's sci-fi movies. It's a hokey film, and poorly acted. Nothing to write home on Saturday, Feb. 22 at 3 p.m.

JOHN KATZENBACH
He will autograph his newest book,
JUST CAUSE

Son of former Attorney General of the United States Nicholas Katzenbach, John Katzenbach began his "life of crime" at an early age. He started reporting on the subject in 1973 at the Trenton Times covering riots, murders, prison breaks and assorted urban tragedies." Three years later, Katzenbach moved to the Miami News to report on the Dade Circuit Court, the felony court for Dade County. Katzenbach left the Miami News in 1979 to write his first novel, In the Heat of the Summer. Published in 1982, the thriller received extraordinary praise from critics nationwide. It was filmed as "The Mean Season" starring Kurt Russell and Mariel Hemingway.

In 1981, Katzenbach joined the staff of the Miami Herald as a criminal court reporter. His second book was the critically acclaimed true crime story Fatal Born — published in 1984. He had also married Madeleine Blais, a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist at the paper, who now teaches at UMass.

JUST CAUSE
A Novel by the Author of THE TRAVELER
JOHN KATZENBACH

The criminal mind, racial bias, journalistic ego and the flawed fabric of the American justice system are potent raw materials for psychological suspense master Katzenbach. (The Traveler) in his opening scene, a man is shot to death in front of psychopathic murder and the limitations of the legal system become clear. The story generally proceeds at a breakneck pace, enhanced by his perfect dialogue and complex characterization. — Publishers Weekly

Katzenbach's second novel, The Traveler, was published in 1987 and went on to become a New York Times bestseller.

Day of Reckoning, his third novel, published in 1989, was highly praised as well.

Katzenbach lives in Amherst with his wife and two children

Lavender Hearts didn't quite warm this reviewer's cockles

Lavender Hearts
Stearn Auditorium
Feb. 15, 1992

Saturday night two white lesbians, storyteller Jennifer Justice and photographer Susan Wilson, presented lesbian erotic stories and images to a small audience of about eighty women and one man at Stearn Auditorium at Amherst College.

The event marked the debut of a new lesbian production company, Fiddlehead Productions, started by Fern Spierer.

Justice, dressed in a fleshy pink silk blouse and black tights, opened the show by explaining why she performs stories of lesbian erotica.

"Women get cheated," Justice said, "because the world denigrates the erotic of the female."

Justice said she was inspired by black lesbian feminist Audre Lorde's famous essay "The Power of the Erotic."

"She describes the erotic as the power that imbibes our whole lives, work, friendships, and relationships," Justice said.

Justice' first story was about a butchy cowgirl, "Clem" (short for Clementine) who visits television's Dodge City and ends up with Miss Kitty. Graphic descriptions, sighs and moans characterized Justice' performance throughout the night as she brought to life lesbian scenes of intimacy. This first story ended on a funny note, with Miss Kitty telling Clem, "now don't you think I'm Matt Dillon's woman, that's just a cover so he and Chester can get it on."

Next came Susan Wilson's slideshow, a hodgepodge of images around popular lesbian themes. A series of shots of white lesbian comedienne Kate Clinton taking her sweater off to Aretha Franklin's R.E.S.P.E.C.T. particularly stands out, probably because hers was the only face I recognized. The slideshow lacked subtitles or a narrative, and the theme became muddled between staged shots of erotica, gay pride and peace marches, and headshots of (famous?) lesbians I felt I was expected to recognize but couldn't.

After the intermission Justice told three more stories. The first was about two young women discovering their love for each other. The second was a description of a young woman's obsessive stake-out of a lover's house. Linking emotional obsessions with physical addictions, afterwards Justice remarked "Thank god for AA."

The night ended with a tale of "Victorian Erotica" in which Justice, in a stilted, Victorian trill, told the story of an older noblewoman who introduces a younger to woman-love. The tale was replete with titters, giggles, and ornate language. One could almost see Justice dressed in frills and lace, waving a fan and sitting in a carriage.

Although Justice' performance was technically flawless, her material seems problematic because of its lack of inclusiveness. Although Justice credits her show's inspiration to Audre Lorde, none of her stories contained images of women of color.

Her last piece seemed especially class-specific. I doubt if many lower-class lesbians, black or white, could have empathized well with a tale of two wealthy English noblewomen discovering lesbian sex in a carriage while their oblivious lords slept through a boring evening at the theater.

However, Lavender Heart's relatively steep admission fee of $10 in advance, $12 at the door probably served to screen out most of those who could not relate to the material. This show served to highlight the fact that lesbian culture in this valley is clearly divided along race and class lines. Wilson's slideshow could only be understood by those who can pay to become familiar with lesbian pop culture, which has become prohibitively expensive.

I found Lavender Hearts to be an extremely culturally specific show aimed at older white lesbians who "are in the know" about the higher-priced names, faces, and experiences of lesbian culture. It was clearly not intended for young lesbians hoping to connect, lesbians who are lower-class, or lesbians of color.

Mommie Dearest — Faye Dunaway, Diana Scarwid, Steve Forrest. This movie is a true story based on the book by Christina Crawford, daughter of movie legend Joan Crawford. It's a haunting — terrifying really — movie about child abuse. Crawford is brilliantly played by Dunaway. ***

An Officer and a Gentleman — Richard Gere, Debra Winger, David Keith. Gere and Keith are students in the Naval Officer Candidate School who spend off-duty time with Winger and Lisa Blount. The main plot is somewhat obvious and overused, but some scenes are shocking and surprising. ***

Prizzi's Honor — Jack Nicholson, Kathleen Turner, Anjelica Huston. Wonderful black comedy about a dim-witted hit man from a mafia family. Nicholson is hysterical, Huston is superbly sly (she won Best Supporting Actress). ****

Someone to Watch Over Me — Tom Berenger, Mimi Rogers, Lorraine Bracco. Stylish film about a married New York cop (Berenger) who becomes infatuated with the beautiful woman he is assigned to protect from a death threat. A great film by director Ridley Scott. ***

Men's gymnasts suffer first loss

BY KIM ADDESA
Collegian Staff

"We need to score 275 to beat Temple," said University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics coach Roy Johnson last week before the Minutemen, undefeated at the time, left for Philadelphia.

Johnson had anticipated key gymnasts from Temple sitting on the sidelines due to injuries, and felt that a solid performance from the UMass gymnasts, resulting in a score of 275.00 points, would be enough to secure a victory over long time foe Temple.

Unfortunately, UMass did not score 275.00 points, they scored 265.15 points, but even if they had, it would not have been enough, for Temple scored 281.70 points.

Johnson had expected to face a Temple team weakened by injury. Key gymnasts such as Dom Minicucci and Ebon Greyman were to be sidelined. Instead, he found his squad up against a strong, seemingly healthy Temple team. Gymnasts that were thought to be injured were competing, and performing as well as ever.

"I expected them to be tough," said Johnson of the Temple gymnasts, "but what I did not expect was Dom Minicucci to compete after having a cast removed from his thumb only a week ago Thursday."

Minicucci, a former Olympian, did not just compete, but scored a 9.4 or better in three events, including a 9.70 on the still rings.

Johnson, who has been concerned about the inconsistency of some of his gymnasts throughout the season, expressed concern again after Sunday's meet. "We had one or two guys score almost four tenths lower on some events then they ever did," explained Johnson, "and we aren't going to beat Temple unless everyone is hitting their routines."

Although things did not go perfectly for the gymnasts at Temple, "there were some bright spots," according to Johnson. Cal Booker scored a 9.6 on the floor exercise, and Jason Fox surprised his coach and teammates by scoring a 9.15 on the vault. The score was almost four tenths of a point higher than his previous best on the event.

The Wolverines from the University of Michigan were the third team competing in Sunday's tri-meet, and finished in second place with a score of 271.80.

UMass now begins preparation for Friday's meet at West Point, a meet that they really need to win if their quest for a top three seeding in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships in March is to continue.

Minutewomen beat So. Conn.

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

After a disappointing performance at the University of Pittsburgh two weeks ago, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics squad desperately needed a victory Saturday to get back on track.

And that's exactly what it did.

With strong performances by juniors Lisa-Beth Cronen, Tammy Marshall and senior Erin Klier, a high team intensity level and the home crowd's support, the Minutewomen won convincingly over Southern Connecticut State College, 184.1-178.5.

"I'm so happy with this team's performance, and particularly the score we got," UMass head coach Alfie Mitchell said. "With such a high score, we'll be able to go into the next couple of meets a lot more relaxed and not really worry so much about our score."

The best event for UMass was the uneven bars in which a team record of 47.1 was set after all six of UMass' competitors scored at least 9.2. Ironically, the previous record was set almost one year to the day (Feb. 14, 1991).

"We really paced ourselves in [the uneven bars]," said Mitchell. "If something wasn't working, we adjusted and didn't force it. That's what makes a successful team."

Marshall took top honors for UMass with a 9.55 in the bars followed by freshman Gina Demeo with a 9.5 and sophomore Margaret Furtado with a 9.4.

Marshall also had high individual honors in the vault (9.45), the beam (9.55) and the all-around (37.85) as well.

"This was a really good team effort," Marshall said. "In practice we knew we were strong in pretty much every event but it was just a matter of hitting the routines in the meet, and we did."

In the floor event, it was Cronen who had the high score for UMass with a 9.65. She was followed by Klier with a 9.55 and Demeo with a 9.45.

"Erin [Klier], Lisa-Beth [Cronen], and Gina [Demeo] all had really good days," assistant coach Erika Baxter said. "We're really starting to come together as a team. Hopefully we can carry the momentum we have now into the next few meets."

The beam, which had been a real problem in UMass' first three meets, was not the team's best event but Klier and Marshall still managed to score 9.4 and 9.55 respectively.

Sometimes to do your best work, all you need is a change of scenery.

The new Apple® Macintosh® PowerBook™ computers give you the freedom to work anywhere you want, any time you want.

They're small enough to fit in a book bag. Powerful enough for your toughest class assignments. And they're affordable, too.

They run virtually all Macintosh software. And can run for up to three hours on a single battery charge.

They can be expanded to up to 8MB of memory and come standard with plenty of hard disk storage.

The Apple SuperDrive™ disk drive reads from and writes to Macintosh and MS-DOS formatted disks—allowing you to exchange information easily with almost any other kind of computer. Add SoftPC and you can run MS-DOS programs, too.

With built-in AppleTalk® Remote Access software and a modem, you can use a PowerBook to retrieve files from your project partner's Macintosh without leaving the library. Or log on to the library computer without leaving your room.

There are three models from which to choose: the PowerBook 100 is the lightest, most affordable PowerBook, the PowerBook 140 offers higher performance and a built-in Apple SuperDrive disk drive, and the PowerBook 170 is the highest-performance PowerBook. All three offer bright, adjustable backlit screens and the simplicity of Apple's latest system software innovation—System 7. And their ergonomic, all-in-one design makes them comfortable to use—no matter where you do your best work.

See the PowerBook computers at our place today, and while you're in, be sure to ask us for details about the Apple Computer Loan.

There's no telling where a PowerBook could take you.

It's the next thing.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Youngsters blossom when you take a special interest in their development. A direct approach works best where a career vs. romance conflict is concerned.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your maturity is a tremendous asset now. A phone call brings both money and memories. An optimistic newcomer gives you fresh hope for the future. Go ahead and pool your ideas and talents.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A quick reply to an offer of letter will get you special treatment. Curl up at home with a good book if you do not want to socialize tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An unusual coincidence brings about a much-desired meeting. Buying a few items for your wardrobe will boost your spirits and confidence. Good luck is yours where romance or finance is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. Loved ones are much more affectionate than in the recent past. A chance encounter could lead to an exhilarating romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Discussing potential problems with an acquaintance will help you clarify your ideas. The two of you could decide to pool your resources. Get any financial promises in writing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do what your heart dictates, even if you must go against tradition or accepted mores. Rid yourself of prejudices. Savvy investments will result in lasting financial security.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Legitimate enterprises over which you have full control give you the best chance for turning a profit. Pull any strings you can. Try to cut through the romantic haze tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Even the so-called experts can be wrong. Trust your instincts in business negotiations. A flexible approach will help you iron out a mutually beneficial agreement.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your attitude toward money or employment may be partly to blame for deteriorating domestic harmony. Reflect on your partner's point of view before taking decisive action.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A romance delights you. You can succeed where others have failed. A desire for change will soon be fulfilled. Trust your intuition when interviewing potential partners and employees.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take advantage of a constructive new trend. Thinking in positive terms will help you arrive at sound conclusions. Honest discussions about a family problem lead to a solution.

United States hockey team beats France

By STEVE WILSTEIN
Associated Press

ALBERTVILLE, France (AP) — Feisty and still unbeaten, the U.S. hockey team reigns supreme on the ice.

The battling Americans whipped France 4-1 Tuesday night, brawling even after the game, to go into the semifinals against the winner of Wednesday's game between the Unified Team and Finland.

Boasting the best record in the Winter Games, 5-0-1, the U.S. team is within one victory of its first medal since the miracle gold of 1980.

The latest victory was punctuated by a punch-out at the end between America's Guy Gosselin and France's Antoine Richer. Sticks and fists flew as the benches cleared after the final horn, but order was restored after a few minutes.

Ted Donoto scored twice in a 3:16 span of the second period, breaking open a 1-1 game, silencing the home-court cheers of "Allez la France!" (Go France!) and eliciting chants of "U-S-A! U-S-A!" from a vocal minority of U.S. fans. Donato also assisted on Marty McInnis' third-period goal.

Ray LeBlanc made 35 saves. He has allowed only eight goals while playing all 360 minutes of the tournament.

Greg Brown, who suffered a concussion, a broken nose and facial lacerations against Sweden, got out of the hospital Tuesday morning but didn't play against France. He might be available Friday.

The sad tale of Americans Dan Jansen and Eric Flaim ended on the speedskating oval, both going home without the medals they felt sure they'd win. They finished far behind gold medalist Olaf Zinke in the 1,000 meters as the German gave his country its 23rd medal .

Jansen looked golden — for 900 meters. He fell from contention coming out of the last turn and finished 26th, 2.5 seconds behind the winner.

"I was just tired," Jansen said. "My legs were gone, they were like lead."

Jansen, the world record-holder in the 500 meters, said he'll probably try again in the 1994 Olympics.

"If it were four more years," he said. "it would be tough. We're going to start a family soon and . . ."

A reporter interrupted and asked, "How soon?"

Before Jansen could answer, his wife, Robin, said, "Tonight."

Men's swimming wins 6th straight NE's

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team captured their sixth consecutive New England Championship this weekend at Bowdoin College, beating their nearest competitor by a score of 641.5-608.5. The three day tournament was capped off with the naming of coach Russ Yarworth as New England Coach of the Year.

The Championship Meet, which featured sixteen New England teams, was set up so that swimmers would compete in trial competitions in the morning and final competitions in the afternoon. From the trial competitions of 100 swimmers, the top 16 swimmers advanced to the final round.

Throughout the meet, the Minutemen's depth proved to be the key factor that enabled UMass to outclass second place Connecticut.

"UConn won a lot of individual and relay events, but because there are 16 places, our depth was enough to do them in." Yarworth said. "It was a real team championship."

The Minutemen opened the meet by taking fifth, sixth, ninth and fourteenth in the 500 freestyle, and first, second, fifth, sixth and thirteenth in the 200 Intermediate Medley, which was highlighted by Jay Peluso's New England and UMass record time of 1:52.97, eclipsing his previous record of 1:54.85.

Despite all of the places UMass won, Connecticut actually enjoyed a lead after the first day of competition, 198-193. This lead proved to be short-lived, however, as the Minutemen took fourth, fifth and eighth in the 400 medley relay and first and third in the 100 butterfly. Peluso, who finished first in the 100, set another New England record with a time of 50.66.

The event that enabled the Minutemen to take control of the meet was the 200 Freestyle. While Connecticut was only able to take 12th and 13th place, UMass won third, fourth, fifth and seventh place.

Bill Chouinard tied for first place in the 100 breststroke with a time of 58.06. Earlier in the day,, he set a New England record with a time of 57.86. Tim Milbert's time of 58.28 was a also a freshmen record. At the end of the day, UMass had built a commanding 442.5-390.5 lead.

UMass extended its lead in the 1650 freestyle by taking third, fifth, sixth, eighth and fourteenth, which enabled them to maintain their lead after Connecticut won first, seventh, eighth, 11th and 16th in the 100 freestyle. The 200 breaststroke was another strong event for the Minutemen, as they took second, fifth and sixth. Chouinard once again set a New England record during the trial race with a time of 2:05.59, only to finish second in the finals with a time of 2:06.87.

Assured of victory, the Minutemen were able to cruise through the final event of the competition, the 400 freestyle relay. To celebrate their victory, each swimmer grabbed hold of Yarworth and threw him in the pool.

Yarworth credited his assistant coaches for helping his team improve so much throughout the season.

"After losing 50 percent of last year's championship squad I didn't think that we would have a chance to repeat as champions this year," he admitted. "But we improved tremendously. (Assistant coaches) Jim Robertson and Tricia Franciosi have helped us out a lot, and (strength coach) Kevin Fulton's work with the freshmen really helped them to grow up."

UMass wallops Rutgers, 81-67 ending 29-year losing streak

BY TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWY, N.J. — If this keeps up, the University of Massachusetts basketball team will have no more streaks to end.

After stopping their 21-game losing skid to Temple University on Sunday, the Minutemen (21-4, 9-3 in the Atlantic 10) snapped another streak last night, when they came into the Louis Brown Athletic Center and won for the first time in 29 years against a gritty, but less-talented Rutgers University team, 81-67.

"I was more nervous for this game because I didn't know what we had left [physically or emotionally] after the Temple game," said UMass coach John Calipari. "This is a huge win for the program. We are finally starting to mature as a team."

With Rhode Island beating West Virginia 88-67 last night, the win puts UMass into a first-place tie in the A-10 with the Mountaineers, with a game between the two foes next Thursday in Morgantown.

UMass, currently ranked 26th in the latest Associated Press poll, had five players score in double figures, including freshman Jerome Malloy. Malloy, who has been quiet since the winter break, came off the bench to score 11 points — all important.

With UMass leading 62-56 and its top scorer, Jim McCoy, on the bench with four fouls, Malloy snuck free on the baseline for a layup. The basket stopped the 5-0 Scarlet Knights' run and started what would be a 13-0 Minutemen run.

Rutgers guard Donnell Lumpkin, who scored 19 points in the first meeting, (only 5 last night) hit a jumper to stop the UMass run, but by that time, the Minutemen had built a 17-point lead and there was only 3:33 remaining in the game.

"We were just terrible," said Rutgers coach Bob Wenzel, whose team dropped to 12-11, 4-8 in the Conference. "They were great. They deserved to win and they deserve their ranking. I suspect with their record, they will get a fifth or sixth seed in the [NCAA] tournament."

Early on, Rutgers could not score. After Mike Jones made a layup to tie the game at 2-2, Rutgers did not make another field goal for 10:57. They missed 18 straight shots.

With Rutgers misfiring, the Minutemen opened up a 19-5 lead after Kennard Robinson scored two quick buckets and Anton Brown (13 points) nailed two straight jumpers.

UMass led by as many as 16 points in the first half and for almost 16 minutes it appeared this would be a runaway.

However, enter Steve Worthy, who would single-handedly cut the lead in half by intermission, scoring 16 points in the final 5:30, to bring Rutgers within 8, 40-32 at halftime.

"We knew we needed a quick start in the second half," McCoy, who scored 10 points, said. "We scored some quick points and we never looked back. This was a huge win for us."

With UMass leading, 30-20, Malloy hit a turnaround jumper on the baseline to up the lead to 12 with 3:18 left to play in the first half.

Damon Santiago connected from International Waters on Rutgers' next possession and Jones hit a free throw to cut the lead to 8, 32-24. However, Malloy nailed a trey to stop the bleeding.

Worthy, who finished with 23 points, was simply awesome at the end of the first half. No one for UMass could contain the slippery and elusive junior.

Tony Barbee (13 points) got UMass started in the second half when he scored 8 points in the first seven minutes.

With UMass ahead 56-46, Harper Williams (15 points, 9 rebounds) canned a foul line jumper to give UMass a 58-46 lead with 11:38 to play.

Lumpkin then hit a trey and Santiagio's two foul shots brought the Scarlet Knights within nine, 60-51.

Rutgers pulled within 6, but would get no closer because of UMass' 13-0 run.

"I was more concerned with an emotional let down," Calipari said. "But the bench played so well, you didn't see it as much."

The Minutemen host Saint Bonaventure Saturday and with a win should move back into the Top 25.

"It doesn't matter if we are in the Top 25, " Williams said. "It would be good for the program and for the fans."

Player of the game

Jerome Malloy
6'3 Fr. Guard
Bridgeport, CT

University of Massachusetts freshman guard Jerome Malloy came off the bench and replaced UMass' leading scorer Jim McCoy, who sat down with four fouls with 9:38 in the second half, and ignited the Minutemen on both ends of the floor. Malloy's 4 points and unfiring defense gave UMass a 19-point lead while he and his teammates held Rutgers to just 3 points in just over 5 minutes of play.

Why UMass won

After trading baskets at the beginning of the second half, the Minutemen went on a 13-0 run at the 9:08 mark to increase their lead to 19 at 4:12, the biggest of the game. UMass had five players in double figures, led by Harper Williams' 15 points, 9 rebounds, and 2 blocked shots. The Scarlet Knights almost handed the Minutemen the win in the first half, missing 18 consecutive shots. UMass shot 42.9 percent from the field in the game, 55.2 after intermission and held Rutgers to just 32.9 percent, 25 in the first half.

UMass' Next Opponent

The Minutemen have three days off before they host Saint Bonaventure at 7 p.m. on Saturday at the Curry Hicks Cage. The Bonnies (7-15 overall) have only one win in the A-10 this season, and have lost six straight. UMass won at St. Bonaventure two weeks ago, 76-58. The Bonnies are in Philadelphia tonight to face Temple University.

Freshman guard Jerome Malloy leads Minutemen to big victory

BY DAVE SCOTT
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Maybe all good things don't have to come to an end.

Freshman guard Jerome Malloy may have given UMass basketball fans a glimpse into the future during last night's 81-67 victory over Rutgers University.

"Jerome is Jimmy McCoy's replacement," said UMass head coach John Calipari. "He's a little better shooter, but just not as athletic."

Malloy's final statistics last night tell only half the story. His 11 points on 5 of 13 shooting put him in UMass' top five scorers last night, but it was more a case of quality than quantity.

"I thought I played all right," said a humble Malloy after the game.

Malloy's "all right" consisted of one huge 3-pointer with 1:48 remaining in the first half after Rutgers had cut a 16-point lead to eight.

Malloy, from Waterbury, Conn., came down court after Rutgers' Mike Jones made 1 of 2 at the foul line. Fellow freshman Lou Roe came down court, drove inside, saw Malloy outside and passed to his classmate.

"Lou penetrated and dished it out to me for three," Malloy said.

In the second half, Rutgers went on a 5-0 run to cut UMass' lead to just six with 9 minutes to play.

But, once again, Malloy came up big while senior McCoy watched from the sidelines with four personal fouls. Malloy streaked downcourt, cut back door and laid in a nifty pass from assist leader Will Herndon.

There minutes later, Malloy took a seeing-eye pass from UMaass' game-high scorer Harper Williams for another backdoor layup that brought the UMass' lead to 13.

Malloy has averaged just under 11 minutes of playing time for the Minutemen this season, but had been on the floor for 12 minutes by half time.

"During the Temple game, he was tentative and scared, and I couldn't play him that much," Calipari said. "Now today, he came out shooting and I had to leave him in there to build his confidence."

Rutgers head coach Bob Wenzel was duly impressed with the play of Malloy.

"He's had a lot of nice games for them," Wenzel said. "You think of him as a 3-point shooter, but he hit some big layups and did a real nice job."

Japanese university president slain

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Japanese officials who came here to celebrate a sister-school agreement with a local college instead gathered at police headquarters Wednesday to discuss the slaying of university president Iwao Matsuda.

Matsuda, president of Chukyo University in Nahoya, Japan, was shot in his 16th-floor room at the fashionable Westin Hotel the night before his school and the University of Massachusetts-Boston were to formally seal their friendship.

Police said Matsuda's wife, Akiko, described a male gunman who knocked on their door, forced his way inside, and began struggling with Matsuda. While she screamed for help in the hallway, police said, Matsuda was shot once in the lower back.

"She was running down the hallway banging on doors, trying to get somebody's attention," Police Supt. Joseph Saia said.

The 72-year-old Matsuda, an acclaimed sports psychologist and former college track star, was pronounced dead at 7 p.m. Tuesday, less than an hour after he was shot.

Police said nothing appeared stolen from his room, and they knew of no motive for the murder. The wife told police the attacker wore a bandana as a mask.

Police spokesman Vincent Loporchio said homicide investigators still considered scenarios other than the armed assailant: "We don't rule people in or out."

Toshiki Saito, head of economic affairs at the Japanese consulate in Boston, said he hoped the killing wouldn't aggravate relations between Japan and the United States.

"This is very sad," Saito said, "but I think we should try harder to establish relations between the two countries."

Jasaburo Hyashi, an official with Nippon TV Network Corp. who attended the police news conference, said the Japanese never considered Boston as crime-infested as they did New York or Washington D.C.

"When they think about Boston, nobody is worried about their safety," he said.

The Westin, a 36-story hotel in the city's Back Bay section, anchors Copley Place, a chic shopping center. Rooms start at $195 a night.

Brian Winston, the Westin's marketing director, said the Matsudas' room had a standard doorknob lock that opens with one turn of the key. He said three security personnel were on duty at the time. The guards, wearing gray suits and carrying keys and walkie-talkies, were roaming the hotel, he said.

"All hotels are public buildings," Winston said. "Obviously, if we notice suspicious characters... we have security people ask them questions."

One hotel guest who requested anonymity didn't learn of the murder until after checking out Wednesday morning. The man, who works for a California software company, said he stays at the hotel on his occasional business trips to Boston.

"It's creepy, but the security here is pretty good," he said. "This seems to be an independent, random situation."

Chancellor Richard O'Brien announced yesterday his appointments to a council that will oversee the new Community Service Program that has just been instituted at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The Council will consist of approximately 18 people, 11 of whom are employed by the University, five students and possibly two representatives from the surrounding community.

Also, an additional two spots may be opened later in the semester because there is only one person of color among the current nominees, said a statement prepared by Joan Stoia of the Mather Career Center and Professor David Schimmel of the school of education.

O'Brien spoke at a luncheon held at the Campus Center yesterday afternoon that preceeded an informational fair where representatives from non-profit

Tsongas taking slow road to success

By CECI CONNOLLY
Associated Press

BOSTON — When Paul Tsongas told Massachusetts' congressmen he wanted to take on President Bush 11 months ago, his old friends raised their eyebrows, shook their heads and wished him luck.

He got the same response at home, from the Greek community and in neighboring New Hampshire.

"I felt like the Maytag repairman," New Hampshire Democratic Party Chairman Chris Spirou recalled of those early days on the campaign trail. "No one was calling except Paul Tsongas." And few people were answering Tsongas' calls.

So Tsongas went it alone. And it worked — giving the 51-year-old former Massachusetts senator a solid New Hampshire victory Tuesday.

All through the hot summer and early fall, Tsongas kept at it.

"It was hard to take his candidacy seriously even though he was saying serious things," said Mike Pride, editor of The Concord (N.H.) Monitor, who first interviewed Tsongas last May. "By the time he came back, we had read his book ("A Call to Economic Arms") and were very impressed."

Tsongas capitalized on the luxury of time, dedicated volunteers, proximity to New Hampshire and an electorate desperate for the promise of economic remedies.

"He was the economic medicine man finding a million victims of an economic demolition derby," Spirou said Wednesday.

Tsongas also benefited from a late surge in money and a barrage of negative publicity that befell a rival, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

But he did not have the political or financial support of prominent Democrats, and the pundits paid him scant attention.

"There was a lot of skepticism," recalled Ann Lewis, a former political director of the Democratic National Committee. "He's in the very satisfying position right now of having surprised the skeptics."

Even folks who spoke fondly of Tsongas wouldn't back his candidacy.

UMass library falling apart, officials say

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts library system is falling apart — and we're not just talking about bricks falling from the sky.

An additional $1.1 million in emergency relief has been requested for fiscal year 1993 to improve "woefully deficient" library acquisitions and staffing budgets, according to the Future of the Library Committee report, which was established last May by the Faculty Senate.

The future of the library remains uncertain as what the report labels "volatile funding" continues to push the library into further disarray.

Because the purchasing power of the library has been slashed by about $9 million in the last two decades, Richard Talbot, director of the library, said increased funding is sorely needed.

"Obviously, if we don't get some increase, the situation will get worse," he said. The report also requests a $7.8 million budgetary increase which could be spread over the next three years.

As the University's national ranking plummets yearly, Talbot said the library system could receive a potentially damaging "probationary sentence" which would last four years.

In addition, he said, deteriorating library resources could cause the removal of the library's accreditation, which could be a blow to individual programs and the University itself.

"We're right at the bottom edge," Talbot said. "Massachusetts is really the Mississippi of public higher education with respect to academic support."

Talbot said the "major problem" is that the library is buying very few new books while the budget cuts have sparked "a gradual erosion in staff."

Financial woes have also left library structural damages deprived of badly-needed repairs, he said. "There are some serious leakage problems," Talbot said. "But there's no danger of the building falling down."

To this day, he said, "legal questions" remain over who

Hite and Franklin speak before senate

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

Two of the losing candidates from Tuesday's Democratic primary for the Third Hampshire District's State Representative seat thanked the Undergraduate Student Senate last night for its support, while the Senate president expressed discontent with student empowerment, urging more students to vote.

Runner-up Jon Hite said he was thankful for the senate endorsement, while fellow Democrat Terry Franklin raised questions as to the whereabouts of primary winner Ellen Story.

"You have two losers here tonight, but I wonder if the winner will ever show up," Franklin said. "We both lost, but it could have been very different very easily."

Noting there are "about 25,000 students here in the Valley," Franklin speculated that if only five percent of the student body voted for him, he could have won the election. He also suggested that "one quarter of one percent would have gotten Hite in."

"It's amazing how few people voted, and how many could have," he said. "There's so much power in the students in this town, and they tend not to use it."

Hite, who received 1,464 votes to Story's 1,515, thanked the senate for its endorsement, and urged students to keep fighting for the University.

"I just want you to know one thing — it's very important that you stay involved in the financing of this place," Hite said. "This is more than just a place to go to school and get a college degree. This place is an opportunity for people you don't know and probably will never meet who would not have an opportunity to go to college if this place doesn't continue to exist."

Senate President David Gagne expressed disappointment that Story didn't come before the senate to thank her supporters as her opponents did.

"She could have come down and said 'thank you to anyone who voted for me,'" Gagne said. "Students pump $112 million into this area, and yet Mrs. Story doesn't come to say thank you to those people who supported her — but the two losers did."

Gagne acknowledged that Story may have decided she didn't owe an appearance to the senate, which endorsed her opponent, Hite, but he was still visibly displeased.

"She has to work with us now — I'm looking forward to working with her," he said. "I'm not surprised Ellen Story didn't show up, but I wish she would have."

Gagne also said he was disappointed with student voter turnout.

"We registered 2,250 students this year, and 120 turned out," he said. "That's absolutely pathetic. Students have to get more involved. And if they don't get involved, they have no right to bitch and complain when things don't go the way they want them to go. They have to turn out to vote.

"If we don't vote, then who the hell are we," he asked.

Public Policy chair Matthew Pavesi concurred with Gagne's analysis of the election results. Pavesi, who oversaw an SGA-sponsored "Get out the Vote" drive which provided registered voters with transportation to the polls, was frustrated with the meager turnout.

"There was a core group of us who worked our asses off," he said. "We got about thirty-one students out of Orchard Hill to vote. Thirty-one. 120 overall is a measly number. We have to register more students. If we don't vote, we're nothing."

Poet urges GLB community to 'gain voice'

Essex Hemphill

Renowned poet and author Essex Hemphill compares the process of writing to the process of coming to terms with sexual identity.

"You never come out and come out, you just keep coming out. The writing is like that," Hemphill said in an interview an hour prior to a presentation of his work in the Campus Center last night.

Hemphill read works, both his own and others, from the anthology "Brother to Brother: New Writings by Black Gay Men," to about 100 people. He also talked of his experiences in Washington, D.C., Philadelphia and elsewhere.

Hemphill told the Collegian there is a need for gay, lesbian and bisexual voices to be heard politically, socially and culturally.

"The important thing right now is to gain voice, or to gain voices, to articulate the experience," Hemphill said. "Because there is so much silence, any articulation is a necessary articulation."

He spoke of the need for more voices to break the silence that surrounds the lives of gay, lesbian and bisexual people.

He emphasized that he is not the only Black gay man who can speak about those experiences, and cited his experiences with being asked to speak on issues in which he has no interest because he is a Black gay man.

Hemphill is the recipient of fellowships in literature from the D.C. Commission for the Arts and the National Endowment for the arts.

His poetry is featured in two critically-acclaimed, awarding-winning Black gay films: Looking for Langston and Tongues Untied.

Hemphill talked of the empowerment which came when people recognized him from Tongues Untied which aired on PBS this past fall.

Hemphill's work speaks often of home, and he commented, "For me, I think the first site of resistance is home." He said a lack of family support is a common

Crack babies studied

UMass professor makes new discovery

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts psychology professor and two doctors at Boston City Hospital recently discovered one major effect of cocaine on unborn babies after a year of research.

The research revealed a chemical link between hyperactivity and lack of concentration among babies born to cocaine addicts.

Professor Jerrold S. Meyer said he and his colleagues, Dr. Mark Mirochnick and Dr. Barry Zuckerman, compared visual and auditory responses of babies who were exposed to cocaine in the womb to unexposed babies.

"During the visual and auditory tests the normal babies had good orientation while the cocaine-exposed babies had poor orientation," Meyer said.

Meyer said the cocaine-exposed babies who displayed the worst visual and auditory responses during testing also had elevated levels of norepinephrine in their bloodstream.

Norepinephrine is a chemical released naturally in the body during periods of heightened stress or arousal, he said.

Meyer said not all the cocaine-exposed babies had elevated levels of norepinephrine. Only babies with the worst responses during testing had higher levels of this chemical, he said.

"I don't know why some babies are more affected than others, but I think it may be related to the amount of cocaine taken during pregnancy," said Meyer.

Because the study began after the babies were born, there is no past record of the mothers' drug habits during pregnancy, said Meyer.

"Therefore, we are relying on the mothers' memory and honesty about how much cocaine they took and how they took the cocaine during pregnancy," said Meyer,

Staff members at the Lederle Graduate Research Tower reported that a computer keyboard and terminal screen, valued at $750, was stolen at approximately 1 p.m. on Tuesday afternoon. The equipment was located in an area that is open to the public during prescribed hours.

LARCENY

• A man reported on Tuesday afternoon that his mountain bike valued at $500 was stolen from his suite in Brown Residence Hall.

ARRESTS

• University Police placed a 42-year-old man in protective custody at the Fine Arts Center Wednesday morning to question him about a hit-and-run accident that occurred in Lot 34 on Friday.

BURGLARY

• An officer on patrol Tuesday morning in Lot 44 discovered a vehicle with two broken vent windows. The owner, after being contacted by police about the break in, reported that a duffel bag containing approximately 100 tapes valued at $500 was missing.

• A women reported Tuesday afternoon that a stereo and radar detector, valued at $280, were stolen from her car in Lot 44. Entry was apparently gained by the smashing of the driver's side window.

VANDALISM

• An officer on patrol Tuesday morning in Lot 12 discovered a vehicle with a smashed windshield and a broken wiper blade. The owner reported nothing was stolen, but the damage is estimated at $400.

Do not reject gay children

I wonder how many future parents realize as many as two out of every 20 will have homosexual or bisexual sons and daughters?

Stop and consider: The Kinsey report says at least 10 percent of the U.S. population, roughly 25 million people, are gay or lesbian. Assuming they all have two parents, that means there are 50 million moms and dads who have raised gay kids.

Trystan Skeigh

Admittedly, this is an extremely rough calculation, especially considering Kinsey's estimate is actually well over 10 percent when bisexuals are included. Also, some families probably include multiple gay siblings, as well as several sets or single parents. Plus, there are a few gay/lesbian/bisexual parents. But regardless, it remains very clear there are lots of straight parents out there who have gay children.

How many people reading this feel ready to accept the distinct possibility they may someday be the mother or father of a gay, lesbian or bisexual child?

It would be wise for heterosexual parent-hopefuls to start learning about gay children beforehand. There's a super book by Aaron Fricke, Reflections of a Rock Lobster—A Story About Growing Up Gay, that is a moving, autobiographical account of a gay man's childhood and adolescence. Also, there is a growing body of support literature written by heterosexual parents who have successfully adjusted to raising homosexual sons and daughters.

A recent study suggests homosexuality in males is genetically determined. This indicates homosexuality is no more "unnatural" among human children than left-handedness, red hair or freckles.

However, if more parents let go of their fear they would realize their gay children are lovable regardless whether they choose or are born loving the same sex.

I dream of a world where parents do not reject their children after they discover they're gay. Many gays and lesbians are deeply traumatized when they come out to their families and are consequently condemned and disowned.

Over the past two years I have watched several friends pack up and leave UMass because they couldn't handle the pressures of school and coming out to their parents at the same time.

The few bisexuals and lesbians I have known lucky enough to have supportive, loving families exist in amazing contrast to the vast majority who do not. They are not traumatized by coming out and their lives do not undergo tremendous, painful disruptions. They are much less likely to fall prey to depression and many of the accompanying self-destructive behaviors that haunt the larger gay and lesbian community.

It's not that gays, lesbians and bisexuals who have been rejected by their families do not lead healthy, successful lives. Many do. But it is more difficult. I contend the gay community is living proof of Nietszche's statement "that which does not kill us makes us stronger."

Lesbian and gay people are forged like steel from the fires of widespread fear and social hatred. That we can find joy and celebration within a pride march attests to the unconquerable spirit of gay community. Yet, on a sad note, though many of us endure and thrive, some are lost along the way, often to suicide, drugs or alcohol. This is an easily preventable loss.

Parents need to remember the causal link between love and positive self-development.

If all 25 million homosexuals, their 50 million parents, their straight siblings and their extended relations remained loving and supportive, social homophobia would utterly vanish. Is this really such an unreasonable dream?

Blonde jokes hurt everyone

"How can you tell when a blonde has used your word processor?"

The new craze today focuses on blondes. Blonde jokes, that is. From out of nowhere these jokes have become the hottest rage and everywhere you turn there seem to be more and more of them. The newest conversation starter on campus is now, "Have you heard the latest blonde joke?"

"What do you get when you put twenty blondes in the freezer?"

Felice Cohen

Recently I was given a list of fifty blonde jokes. Neatly typed, it covered both sides of a regular piece of paper. Having memorized them, the giver, no longer in need of the list, began rattling off an entire slew.

"Why did the blonde cross the road?"

Having specific stereotypes represented on television, one example being Suzanne Sommers' character on "Three's Company," has only helped to enhance the image our society has of blondes. But is it really true that blondes have more fun?

"How do you kill a blonde?"

Whenever I heard a blonde joke I assumed it was aimed at blonde females. Then I realized the word "blonde" has become synonymous with the word "woman." Now I admit I laughed at the first blonde joke I heard a few months ago. The joke sounded funny, but suddenly it struck me the joke wasn't just aimed at blondes.

"What's the definition of a blonde?"

Over winter break I was down at Disney World. A male waiter in our hotel, who had served us the previous evening, came over to our table. Remembering not only my family, but what we had ordered, he added, "You see, I'm not just another dumb blonde." That was the first time I associated the word "blonde" with a male. It was also when I noticed that the word "blonde" in all these jokes could be replaced with "woman."

"How do you make a woman's eyes sparkle?"

Hearing a blonde joke recently while out with friends, I said, "That offends me." Their response? "But your hair isn't blonde, why are you so upset?"

It then became perfectly clear why people feel it's all right to tell me these blonde jokes; because of the color of my hair. It is this exact reasoning why people still feel it is okay to tell someone whose skin isn't black a black joke or someone who isn't Jewish a Jewish joke and they won't take offense.

Sounds crazy, but after I first heard a blonde joke I was about to share it with a friend from home. I didn't because she is blonde and I thought she'd be offended. Then I thought she might also be offended because she is Polish.

"Why don't Polish people eat pickles?"

Now what should her being Polish have to do with a blonde joke? Asking myself that question, it became all the more obvious. The term "blonde" in all these jokes not only can be replaced with the term woman, but with the word "Polish person," "African-American," "Jew" or "homosexual," to name a few.

On this campus, people's thresholds for racial, anti-Semitic and homophobic backlash are quite low. With these barriers everywhere, people are forced to be very cautious of what they can and cannot say.

Nevertheless, these blonde jokes seem to be acceptable and even encouraged.

"Why don't Blacks get coffee breaks?"

Though I have the feeling if a list of the top fifty African-American jokes were circulating on this campus, we would have news coverage from all over.

Being the butt of jokes is okay if you're a chicken in a Far Side cartoon, but not when the joke is aimed at you just because of who you are.

Is there a justifiable reason why being teased because of the color of your hair is any different from being teased because of the color of your skin? or religious affiliation? or sexual preference?

I didn't think so.

Immolation not a "peaceful act"

I would just like to briefly comment on the article in the Collegian, Wednesday, Feb. 19, marking the anniversary of Gregory Levey's death.

I was present at the very moment that Gregory Levey lit his match. I watched his body fall to the ground. I smelled his burning flesh and I even watched him twitch as he lay there smoldering. I saw little children looking in disbelief and asking their parents "What happened?"

For everyone that thinks that this is an act of courage, open your goddamn eyes. My life is scarred because of one person's selfish act.

It was not an "inspirational sacrifice" nor was it a "peaceful act." This man wanted to kill himself, used the war as an excuse and violently burned himself for everyone to see.

How peaceful.

Help wanted: Democrats dying fast

I can't hide from the facts anymore. My party — the Democratic Party — is dying fast.

Greg Sukiennik

How do I know? When you can't do any better than Paul Tsongas, Bill Clinton and Bob Kerrey for the land's highest office, there's something dreadfully wrong.

The Dems' problems are no recent invention. As I see it, they haven't produced a worthy candidate for president in over 20 years. Walter Mondale? You're barking up the wrong tree. Jimmy Carter? Would have never won if it hadn't been for Watergate. George McGovern? Spare me.

No, my party hasn't offered a true leader to this nation since day Robert F. Kennedy was shot dead after the California primary, in 1968. Gary Hart and Michael Dukakis pale in comparison. Jesse Jackson, as moving and inspiring as he is, still lacks government experience. Lloyd Bentsen? Edward Kennedy? Sorry, wrong number.

Here's the punchline — the Democrats are such a sorry bunch they can't even beat George Bush. Even Pat Buchanan, a bigot (strike one!) and an isolationist (strike two!) who worked for the Nixon administration (Strike three, you're out!) managed 40 percent against an incumbent president. That's a political rarity, not to mention proof of just how warped New Hampshire really is.

Oh, the Democrats do have among their ranks candidates who could possibly win the presidency. (Then again, the Red Sox might win the Series one of these days.) I, for one, think New Jersey senator Bill Bradley would make a strong candidate. Think about it: Princeton grad, Rhodes Scholar, New York Knick, Democrat. What else could you want?

"Super" Mario Cuomo is the obvious choice among Dems not running, but with New York's budgetary problems in disarray as they are, Cuomo doesn't seem a likely addition to the race. But everyone likes to talk about him anyway. He might as well be a candidate. He might even win a few primaries that way.

Anyone else? Where are the women and people of color who could breath life into a moribund organization? Twelve years of Republican attacks on civil rights, women's rights (see Hill, Anita) and the poor need to be responded to directly.

If the Democrats are as inclusive as they claim to be, perhaps they should stop blindly funding white guys who can't carry their home states and start supporting candidates who represent the party's constituency more accurately.

More importantly, the Dems need one good candidate instead of 12 really mediocre ones. Huge primary fields are a waste of time and money. Instead of letting regional run-of-the-mill candidates beat the snot out of each other, why not put up one or two well-qualified ones who could actually (gasp!) win? While it's important to be a "party of the people," there has to be some concensus somewhere which voters could support.

As for what I think of the current crop o' candidates? Glad you asked. If I had to pick one, well, wait a minute, I really don't want any of them. No, scratch that.

Does anyone know which party John Calipari belongs to?

Will someone somewhere please politically correct me?

Perhaps you have noticed that it is more than fashionable to be P.C. (Politically Correct). You may also have discovered that being P.I. (Politically Incorrect) in public, consciously or accidentally, may result in anything from ostracism to threats on your life.

If you, like me, enjoy staying on top of the latest trends, then questions concerning the clearly very rigid doctrine of the P.C. will doubtless have sprung to mind, the most obvious question being "Is it P.C. to ask these questions?" Others being, "How masculine must a woman be in order to be a feminist?," "When is a girl not a girl, but a woman?," "Should animals be on or under the table?," "Black and White, Black and white, or black and white?," "Are boys ever men?," "Mail or femail?," etc.

It seems as though the P.C. are a very elite group of people (as their title would suggest) to whom the ins and outs of their extremely exclusive doctrine are innate. I have spent several days searching for a comprehensive rule-book, so that I too may join. I found nothing.

Picture this: A dusky winter's evening, a crowded bus returning from Haigus Mall to Northampton, a solitary woman (aspiring to be P.C., I should add) with nowhere to sit. She stands, gently perusing her homework book. A crisis occurs.

A seated man's voice cuts above the gentle hum of commuter conversation: "Would you like to sit down?"

WOULD YOU LIKE TO SIT DOWN?!!! The bus was silent. The woman felt all eyes upon her as she encircled the question, turning it over in her mind, the full political implications of such an inquiry slowly sinking in.

Olivia Stewart-Liberty

The woman knew that if she were to keep her friends and remain true to her ideologies, she must strike the man across the face. Or could she ignore the question?

She ignored the question. However the offer was repeated, somewhat louder. Conscious of all eyes upon her, the woman turned to her assailant, and flushing a deep red, she muttered "No, thank you." For the remainder of the journey, the woman suffered in sweating silence as the full horror of the hypocrisy and cowardice of her response sank in.

What should she have done? Is it Politically Correct to smack the dominant white male across the face, purely because he's still adrift in the 1950s? I suppose it is, as this creature is the categorized enemy of the P.C.

However, keeping the enemy in sight, a question which is certainly less than P.C., rears its ugly, ugly head. (Forgive me, I'm still learning)

If the dominant white male is the enemy of the Politically Correct, then the dominant white male must be the enemy of the subservient Politically Correct feminist. Thus it follows that militant feminist bearers of the Politically Correct flag should be lesbian. Yet, why then, do white militant Politically Correct lesbian feminists strive to look exactly like the enemy? This worries me (a guide book would have solved all these problems). If both sides look identical, ensuing battle may cause complications. . . On the other hand, perhaps I have blown the cover of some sophisticated aggressive strategy: attack from within enemy lines.

My questions remain unanswered — what should the woman on the bus have done? Can one be Politically Correct without looking anything like the enemy? Or have I already forfeited any chance of joining the P.C. elite by voicing my questions?

Hullo... lot of student cartoonists out there, good work, folks. I've got a subscription to Toles (see opposite page), but he yields to all you doodling messiahs, if your stuff follows guidelines, that is: these guidelines are cake: just make your cartoon a square or rectangular shape, (why not 7" by 6"?), do it in fairly thick, black ink, and if you want extra brownie points, make it topical, local, and, of course, funny, but I'll be the judge of that! Come on down here with your art, find me here gnawing on old bones and scratching my fat, fat stomach. I'll be pleased to assist, greet, encourage and screen. It is my job to do these things, after all. Keep reading. More importantly, keep drawing, keep writing, get involved. Remember: we like you.

Drunk Hoop-Heads lack respect

I've read a lot of editorials in the past four years which were written sarcastically, and in doing so lost their true point on me. I will therefore be straight with you all.

I was appalled on Sunday by the behavior of a large group of inebriated Hoop-Heads sitting behind the North Basket next to the Hoop Band. I have been in the Hoop Band for four years and consequently been to almost every home basketball game, and I have never seen such rude behavior and blatant disrespect as was demonstrated at the beginning of the UMass-Temple game.

While the UMass Acafellas took the center court to sing our national anthem, a large group of overly enthusiastic, obviously drunken boneheads could not display even the basest respect for the banner by holding off their derisive chants towards the pitifully small contingent of Temple fans. They spoiled the singing of the anthem and had to be drowned out by the rest of the crowd singing the anthem.

As a musician myself, I know what it is like to stand in front of a large crowd. It can be a frightening experience, especially if you are not received well by your audience. The reception the UMass Acafellas was harsh indeed. They couldn't even be heard over the yelling.

Is that really the way to enjoy a basketball game? To get drunk and make a public scene of yourself? I guess I can't make anyone act in any sort of manner. I just appeal to whatever drives you people to, if nothing else, show a little respect

No need for hetero sympathy

I've been following the Collegian editorials closely this semester because of the amount of lesbian related material being printed each week.

I am a lesbian with my own ideas and opinions on things. I am getting a little tired of reading an editorial by Trystan Skeigh, then two days later reading a rebuttal by a heterosexual who feels slighted by her and feels her methods of education are discouraging their "open-minded" support.

I don't know what Trystan's goals are in writing her editorials, but I personally am not looking for heterosexual supporters when I express my opinions.

Thinking that all queers are just doing everything to get heterosexual supporters is rather egocentric and oppressive. I like to just read about lesbians anywhere, anyhow.

I do not agree with everything Trystan says, but I do appreciate getting such a constant diet of pro-lesbian reading material.

I am surrounded daily by anti-lesbian, anti-woman propaganda. If you want to criticize someone's treatment of another group, first look at how heterosexuals (even some who call themselves allies) put down lesbians.

To oppress someone, you first need the power to do it. Right now lesbians have very little power. We are therefore not oppressing heterosexuals.

If you want to stop oppression related to sexual orientation, start with your own paternalistic views. As for Trystan's editorials, look at her specific arguements and disagree with those if you want, but stop acting as if all lesbian expression is a campaign to gain heterosexual supporters.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Marc Elliott abdicated the Notes throne without designating an heir. No, I'm not going to lay any value judgment on that, theoretically he's my boss. Anyway, leafing through applications, he noticed that, under skills I had scribbled (in crayon?) "I can fake it" and figured that I was qualified for the position. So, this week I'm giving it a shot.

So, now that introductions are taken care of, on the first non-news item of the day.

ZuNews has died. Guessing from their sense of humor, I'd say it's a case of acute testosterone poisoning. Too bad. They were starting to get those nifty MacIntosh graphics down pretty good. They never did manage to stamp out big hair, though.

What I enjoyed most about ZuNews was that the Collegian looked much less self-promoting in comparison. Six pictures of the editors in just one issue is a sign of one who thinks pretty highly of himself. You'll never see me poster size on the front page wearing an alligator clip, and perhaps that's best for all concerned.

There's no Graffiti of the Week. Go write your own.

I've forgotten who, but somebody clever once said that a journalist is someone with nothing on his mind . . . and the power to express it. If you need proof, you haven't been reading this page closely enough. Hey, what do you want from a paper that runs a disclaimer on its comics page?

A good friend of mine is a physics major. Contrary to popular belief, many of them have personalities every bit as functional as you or I. They're easy to spot, just look for the nervous twitch. If you'd like to make friends with a physics major, look for someone with a BIG Hewlett-Packard in their pocket, and make some small talk about "superstrings," or high temperature superconducting ceramic compounds. They're usually quite loyal and easy to train.

It's bad etiquette to quote from "Saturday Night Live" in crowded public areas. It's just not clever. It also lets everyone in on the sorry state of your social life, and lack of creativity.

Josh Reynolds

To those of you who were wondering: No, Jim's Journal isn't supposed to be funny. It's a commentary on life's pettiness and banality, inappreciable to those of you mired in it.

I'm guessing you're the same group who wear "Simpsons" shirts. Wake up, you're the butt of your own joke.

Aren't those little paper table tents on the D.C. helpful? One extolling the quality of their raw materials caught my attention. For those of you who hadn't guessed, 80 percent fat-free means 20 percent fat.

Pop culture tidbit: Axl Rose was Ethyl Merman in a past life.

Liberal arts education is quite a concept, isn't it? Sorta like shooting tin cans with a shotgun. It's the blunderbuss method of education. Today I learned that in 1658 the Massachusetts court reported that "Many children are exposed to great dangers of losse of life or limbe through the ravenousnese of swye, and elder persons to no small inconveniencies." (Funny how history repeats itself — we had the same problem at those protests on campus about five years ago.)

Anyway, it just struck me that the job that an individual with such a well-rounded education is best qualified for is host of Jeopardy, "I'll take esoteric frivolity for 800, Alex."

It's easy to complain, but I suppose Gen-Ed requirements are preferable to the alternative, a Sally Struther's correspondence course in appliance repair.

Wednesday I went to lecture by a Harvard suit about adoption, torture and cannibalism amongst the Iroquois. The audience was made up of tweed-jacketed history profs, and L.L. Bean-clad Amherst types, and not an American Indian amongst them. They sat for an hour listening to stories of beheadings, broken fingers and red hot tomahawks. Maybe if they had all joined the boy scouts and stayed up late telling each other ghost stories, they would have grown out of this by now.

Well, gang, my typing finger is getting tired, so that will have to do this week.

I won't give you the address down here, because I'm guessing that any of who feel strongly enough about it can find us on your own. Come on down, we'll duke it out in person.

His old boss from the Peace Corps, U.S. Sen. Harris Wofford, D-Pa., hosted a fund-raiser for Tsongas in Boston last month. But there was no endorsement.

When Tsongas met with U.S. Rep. Brian Donnelly, D-Mass., "He gave me a copy of his economic book. I wished him good luck."

Tsongas historically has been out of the political loop, from his early days as a reformist county commissioner to his years in semi-retirement after stepping down from the U.S. Senate in 1984 to successfully battle cancer.

Some praise him for his independence, others complain he has not been a loyal party soldier.

"I haven't seen that he's tried to inject himself" in state issues, said Democratic state Rep. Suzanne Bump, who is supporting Clinton. "When was the last time he reached out to Democratic Party activists?"

ICE-T

Brainstorm microphone napalm

By SETH KAYE
Collegian Staff

Those artists who defy established boundaries and appeal to a broad spectrum of people are truly of a rare breed. Those that begin in the music field especially, with the producers and executives who must decide how to market the act must find it difficult to mold such diverse talent to a specific target audience. However, as with true art, the audience will find the artist, not the reverse. Clearly, Ice-T's audience is as diverse as his own musical influences are. In his act he has been known to sample from rap, metal, hardcore and even spoken word performances from Jello Biafra. His own musical history runs from political, crime and sex raps ("You can't go nowhere without the sex rhymes" he says), to the grunge-punk of his latest project Body Count.

Ice-T began his career with the gangs in the streets of South Central Los Angeles. His adult education began, he says, when he started stealing from more upscale stores "to get educated to what was really fly." His career hit stride in the mid-1980s after moving in and around the Los Angeles area. "That's why the police couldn't catch me," he said. "They didn't know [where] I was."

He moved next into the movies, writing the theme to Dennis Hopper's Colors, then performing the titles to and acting in both the powerful New Jack City and the disappointing Ricochet. These days Ice is into target practice, cars, tacos and Nintendo, giving the games he's finished with to city kids who can't afford to buy them themselves.

On the road though, his latest design is Body Count, whom he debuted on his latest album, O.G. Original Gangster, and broke in at CBGB's and on the Lollapalooza tour last summer. As for this being a departure from his more well-known rap act, Ice-T said, "As far as I'm concerned, music is music. I don't look at it as rock, R&B, all that kind of stuff. I just look at it as music. I feel sorry for anybody who only listens to one form of music."

Don't play yourself.

Go see Ice-T with Body Count this Sunday night at the Vertex Niteclub in an all ages show with opening act Hard Corps. Showtime is 7:30 p.m.

'Gauntlet II' filled with adventure and fun

By DAVID WEIZEL
Special to the Collegian

From a darkened arcade to your cozy well-lit room, from beneath the shifting shadows of Mindscape's evil data-gnomes, a dank dungeon's air stagnantly awaits your step.

Gauntlet II provides some sensational slinking and slashing about, and it even TALKS to you! An almost (well, not quite) human voice announces weapons and food as you grab them, and warns you of your imminent demise.

Also, with the aid of four GameBoys and cartridges, plus a multi-player adapter, up to four players can slug it out at once — just like in the moss covered walls of the arcade. You can be a Warrior, Valkyrie, Wizard or Elf, with speed, strength, magic and fighting ability varying according to character type.

There are traps, treasures, and enough salted snacks for many a brave adventurer, lest ye live to see light of day (or night, for that matter.)

This not being your typical lock-up, the place is absolutely seething with all kinds of slime drippers. Granted, dungeons are not generally known for their ambience, but "Gauntlet II" packs more uglies than an all-night diner in a B-movie.

As you wander from room to room on each new level, you'll meet up with the likes of demons, ghosts, sorcerers, stone-lobbing cretins and more (Sorry — no killer black pudding in this one). And as an aperatif, there are force fields and stun tiles to sap your strength, avec ze chef's special poisoned food and cider for dessert. All a la carte, of course.

Watch out for "Death," who refuses to leave you alone, and a blob called "IT" that'll make you real popular with the locals if it can lay its ooze on you.

There a bonus weapons, limited invisibility, invulnerability and reflective shots to be had, but remember, the spoils go only to the living. Search for floor traps that will make walls disappear, collect keys to open doors, and use the transporters to "zap" from place to place.

Sometimes, the depth perception on the game can make entering doorways a little frustrating, since the overhead view is so detailed, but "Gauntlet II" is otherwise easy to navigate if you don't end up as ghoul gruel.

Stagger into the store and snatch one up if you dare. Just follow the moans and clanking chains and you'll find the right aisle, I trust. From the minute you hold it in your trembling hands, you just won't be able to throw down the gauntlet.

KLAX makes another great addition to the annals of GameBoy.

The object of KLAX is to catch tiles falling from a tilted ramp with your paddle, and release three or more tiles of the same pattern in a stack, forming (drum roll, please) a Klax! This can be done vertically (a piece of cake), horizontally (no problem, right?) or diagonally (acrobats only need apply).

The game consists of waves, the goal of each wave basically being to meet your quota of Klaxes, or else. And hey, try not to drop too many tiles while you're at it, eh Bub? Yeah, that's right, the ramp your tiles hop down from is five rows wide, and your paddle's gotta clip 'em all. Oh sure, you can drop a couple, if your heartstrings can stand the little graon they give out as they fall, but regulations strictly limit the number of "kerplunks" allowed per Wave.

Getting back to basics, a Wave consists of achieving one of the following, chosen in progressive difficulty by the computer: a certain number of points, a specific number of Klaxes, either vertical, horizontal, or diagonal, or (rarely) any of the above. You can also move on by catching a preset number of tiles — say an even sixty thousand — and forming Klaxes with them until they

Wayne's World: serious social commentary–NOT!

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Dumb fun doesn't get any dumber. A cross between Bill and Ted and Naked Gun, Wayne's World is a clever pop culture comedy that's surprisingly funny and ridiculously pointless.

For those who go to bed early on Saturday, Wayne's World evolved from a skit on "Saturday Night Live" starring Mike Meyers and Dana Carvey as Wayne and Garth, two guys who do a cable access show from Wayne's basement.

In this feature film, Wayne and Garth spend little actual time on the air. Rather, the pair cruises around Aurora, Ill. (actually L.A.) where Wayne falls for a Cantonese rocker (Tia Carrere) while trying to dodge his clingy ex-girlfriend (Lara Flynn Boyle). Meanwhile, Garth foils bullies, lusts after "dream lady" Donna Dixon and offers such eternal questions as "Did you ever think Bugs Bunny was attractive when he dressed up as a girl bunny?"

The thin plot involves a lecherous television producer played by Rob Lowe who wants to exploit the duo and move in on Wayne's girlfriend.

Thankfully, Wayne and Garth stray from the plot often enough to allow for such tangents as a "Laverne and Shirley" opening parody and a "Scooby Doo" ending. Wayne's World has the distinction of not revealing all its funny moments in the commercial.

The humor is appropriately sophomoric — while it isn't as crass or mean spirited as "Married. . . With Children," it isn't Noel Coward. Meyers and Carvey are keenly aware of how stupid this all really is, but they find their humor in four basic categories: babes, TV, tunes, and partying. Wayne's World is not a social statement — in fact, it treats women as complete objects, but what do you want from two adolescent metalheads who still live with their parents. . . Thelma and Louise?

Mike Meyers portrays Wayne as one of those guys who thinks he's clever. Indeed, he sports a plastic grin at his own jokes. More expressive is Dana Carvey as Garth, whose awkwardness is so believable one forgets they're watching the guy who does President Bush and the Church Lady.

If you enjoy their sketch on "SNL", Wayne's World will be right up your alley. If not, see the film anyway for its ethnocentric social youth commentary in relation to socioeconomic ramifications to urban redevelopment in Illinois. . . NOT! Grade: B

RECENT RELEASE:

My Own Private Idaho: Now that this superior film has come to this area (at the Amherst Cinema), I'm reprinting a capsule that appeared in my Ten Best of 1991 article from December.

My Own Private Idaho is a complex and unnerving drama of two male prostitutes played with bitter honesty by River Phoenix and Keanu Reeves — in their best performances ever. A thinly veiled Shakespearean tragedy that's not easy to understand and not for everyone. Director Gus Van Sant ("Drugstore Cowboy") lets the emphasis fall not on prostitution or being gay, rather he places the characters on a search for love and a sense of belonging. The film moves from black and white to color; from dreams and imagery to stark reality. "My Own Private Idaho" is a gritty, intense journey that's a reminder of the potential power of film. Grade: A

Livingston Taylor to play Iron Horse

By DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Staff

When Livingston Taylor builds a model, he takes care in every joint, every part of his creation.

The quality of his songs show his relentless pursuit for purity of melody, lyrics and chords, something lost in today's sampling age.

When Livingston plays to an audience, his one man stand gets your hands clapping and your feet stomping and dancing. You'll be singing along.

Thank God for places like the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton which brings entertainers like Livingston Taylor to our area. This Saturday, Feb. 22, Livingston plays the valley.

Since Livingston's teenage years, he has been lured to the sit down, guitar swinging on the knee, flashing-of-the-pearly- whites-and-harmony-of-great-lyrics-kind-of-folk-music. The kind where you crawl under the covers at night and fall asleep with a smile spanning your pillow.

James' sweet, baby brother (I'll try not to mention him again, hint-hint) has all the charm, wit and voice, and adds the integrity to the music he's writing.

Livingston's voice is soft like velvet, he rubs his chords all the right ways for a smooth ride to your senses.

He has played coffee houses and small clubs for years, amounting in a load of experience, which in the long run means he knows how to entertain. However, that doesn't mean he gets run down or redundant. He is always full of energy and wit.

On Saturday, Livingston's receding hairline and baby blue eyes (similar to Paul McCartney's dying babydom) as well as his piano, guitar and banjo, will be there to entertain you.

Opening the show is local folkie, Leah Cunkel. Her acoustic set and the over seventy brands of beer the Iron Horse serves will provide a great warm-up as you await Livingston.

Every song Livingston will play will be one of his models, created with great care and patience, and sung with his heart.

In 1970, he told a reporter upon signing his first record contract, "I don't want to write a whole lot of songs, because every one I write has to be as good as it can possibly be."

Doors open at 5:30 p.m. for dinner and the show starts at 7:00 p.m. The show is sold out — however, for those attending, the Iron Horse's quaint and comfortable setting will be great for Livingston Taylor. Just don't ask him about his brother.

mercifully stop falling on you.

Of course, things do tend to pile up, and the well at the bottom of the screen can only hold so many tiles before you hit "No Vacancy." So, since getting a Klax makes those few, precious, space-filling tiles disappear, Klaxes are not only desireable, but vital to your survival, not to mention your sanity.

Anyway, the original version a "Klax" is a color game, and it does lose a little in its translation to GameBoy. Various solid and stripped patterns are substituted for the more easily distinguished color tiles available on other gaming systems.

The arcade version's chiming arpeggios are sadly replaced by a single, uninspiring beep.

"Klax is great fun, and Mindscape has done fairly well considering the grey scale they had to work with on the GameBoy, and alas, the special sparkle is gone. But a black and white "Klax" is worth springing for if you don't have a color system. In the meantime, though, scale the GameBoy's narrow prism walls and drop in on someone who does.

John Sheldon to visit Pearl St. nightclub

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

It just doesn't seem right to refer to someone with the stature of John Sheldon as a "local" musician, especially given his lengthy and illustrious career.

Sheldon started out at the young age of 14 playing in bands on the Boston club circuit in the early 1960s. Three years later he hooked up with another young musician named Van Morrison and went on to play guitar and record several albums with the music legend.

Sheldon came into popular demand as a studio session guitarist for Atlantic, Mercury and other major labels as a result of his collaboration with Van Morrsion. He also managed to record his own two jazz-rock albums with his band Bead Game on the Avco Embassy label.

The guitarist has studied music at both the California Institute for the Arts and the New England Conservatory of Music. He has toured nationally with such acts as James Taylor and Linda Ronstadt.

Sheldon moved to the Pioneer Valley last year with his wife and family and soon after he began his own local band called Blue Streak. Their sound is a mixture of rock, blues and country and Sheldon handles the songwriting and vocal chores along with guitar.

John Sheldon and Blue Streak are a power trio featuring the veteran local rhythm section of bassist Jonathan McClellan and drummer Dale Monette. Both McClellan and Monette might best be known for their work with Wailin' Dave and the Blue Dogs.

The word is that Sheldon is a guitar wizard who is a literal powerhouse of sound. His music has been described as Neil Young meets Stevie Ray Vaughn.

JABBERWOCKY

James Taylor said of Sheldon, "John and I came up together and I have always loved his music. This latest crop of songs is the best yet. Singer, songwriter, great guitar player, John can do it all."

John Sheldon and Blue Streak are one of the most happening bands in the Valley right now and they are well set to become a major regional act. They will appear at Pearl Street Niteclub in Northampton this Saturday night.

Opening will be Tribal Etiket, another local favorite. They are a world beat outfit with an emphasize on the groove. The band often works in collaboration with theater and dance shows and they will be joined for this show by dancers from the Eno Washington Dance Company.

Advance tickets are on sale for $5 at Pearl Street, Dynamite Records, and For the Record. The show begins at 9:00 pm and tickets at the door will be $6.

BLAH, BLAH, BLAH... If you haven't seen the Collegian ads, The Pub in Amherst now features live music on Wednesday nights. Dangerous Papers and Bark Like a Dog have already appeared at The Pub.

Storyteller to visit Hillel tonight

Self-proclaimed wimp has relations with big rear-end

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

She's witty. She's talented. She's a riot. The critics rant and rave about her. She's storyteller Judith Black and she's appearing live tonight Feb. 20, at the Hillel House Lounge, 388 N. Pleasant St., 7:30 p.m.

Black, who hails from Marblehead, has been telling stories for 15 years. She has performed all over the country and in various festivals, including the Montreal Comedy Festival and the National Storytelling Festival in Tennessee.

Tonight she will tell the story of Deborah and Simon: he, a Hungarian immigrant engineer and self-proclaimed wimp, she, a native-born sociology professor with insecurities about her ample rear-end. The two meet at an adult education lecture on death, where their relationship is born.

"It's a good story about reaching out beyond your own insecurities and it's funny," said Black in a telephone interview. Simon, she explained, thinks he's a geek, and Deborah thinks she has a big butt, but the truth is, that Simon adores her female form, and Deborah thinks Simon is gorgeous.

Although no good stories have overt morals, Black explains, there is an underlying moral in this story, and that, says Black, is "Don't let your mishagas get in the way." (Or, your personal craziness, idiosyncratic insecurities, Black explains.)

In Judaism, Black said, one learns through Midrash, or a search for explanation. "Jews always ask the question why, which is wonderful, and that's what a good story does, it asks why."

Trained as an actress and a teacher, Black finds storytelling to be "a very intimate form of theater." Without scenery, lighting and only minimal props, one can create much the same atmosphere as as theater, she explained.

As a storyteller, Black said, you can make your own material, develop an intimate relationship with the audience. "It's a trusting, exciting, vital art form." And besides, she adds, "people who come will have a good time." Another reason for coming, adds Black, is because "like any good Jewish organization, they serve food."

The beauty of storytelling, is that listeners leave with images, said Black. "I draw the outlines, but listeners fill them in," leaving with the images they have created for themselves.

ordered the installation of a faulty brick support structure on the tower library.

The bricks on the outside facade of the Tower library are supported by metal shelves, Talbot said.

The bolts which hold up the shelves are one size too small, he explained. Because of this potential instability, bricks could become dislodged and fall.

"There is a chance that particularly a piece of brick could fall," Talbot said. This is the reason a metal fence surrounds the base of the tower library.

All the problems the University library system currently faces, Talbot believes, are "not only a manifestation of the fiscal crisis, but a manifestation of the underfunding of public higher education."

organizations gathered to discuss opportunities with prospective student volunteers.

A total of 41 community and student organizations participated in yesterday's informational fair.

"As an institution, universities have a responsibility to the community around them," said O'Brien.

The Community Service Program's goal, according to a statement released yesterday "is to help students find volunteer positions in the community and to serve as a liaison between campus groups that are involved in community service."

"The program is not intended to duplicate other programs, but it is to place students in voluntary positions in the community," said Diane Huebner, coordinator for the Community Service Program.

The program also to serves as a liaison for other groups doing volunteer work on campus, she said.

Staff members were pleased with the amount of students at the fair, which was sponsored by the Mather Career Center.

"We had a very good turnout at the fair today," said Ronna Sadow, a senior history major and Mather Career Center employee.

"Volunteering is a great opportunity for UMass students to get involved in the community and explore personnel and social interests while gaining valuable skills," Huebner said.

experience among gay people of all races.

He continued this theme by saying that someone in your family may be homophobic without realizing someone they love is gay, and by revealing your sexuality you can work to combat that homophobia.

When asked what advice he would give to young GLB writers he replied, "Be true to your voice."

He then told of how he was in writing classes where he was told to write about his experiences, but not about being Black or gay.

His poetry and prose are included in numerous anthologies and his essays have appeared in Gay Community News, Out Look, Out Week and The San Francisco Chronicle. His book, Ceremonies, a collection of poetry and essays is being published in June of 1992.

Hemphill has given readings at numerous colleges and universities including Yale, Harvard, MIT, and Hampshire College.

He presently resides in Philadelphia where he is currently at work on a number of projects, including the completion of his first novel, Standing in the Gap.

Hemphill will speak again today at noon in the Campus Center 911. He will present a talk entitled "Tongues Untied: The Emerging Voice of Black Gay Men Within African-American Cultural Expression."

whose role in the behavior study was to test chemical measurements in the infants.

Meyer said the original research using 20 infants was too small to provide conclusive evidence. "I don't know if treatment is necessary yet because I don't know if the poor orientation to sensory stimuli is temporary or long-lasting," he said.

This chemical-link discovery helps explain the symptoms cocaine-exposed babies have, said Meyer. "The more doctors know about the abnormalities in cocaine-exposed babies the better they can treat or work with the babies," he said.

Meyer said he and his colleagues are now conducting a similar study with a group of 100 infants and hope to have their results by the end of the year.

Meyer said this time the three will follow the infants' progress for nine months instead of a few days as was done in the first study.

Study next year in Paris

UMass/Boston

Space purchased at no cost to the Commonwealth.

UMass/Boston's high-quality, low-cost Paris program offers

- opportunities to study at a range of institutions
- numerous cultural activities
- tutoring
- personal attention from knowledgeable and caring faculty directors
- companionship with a small group of serious, sociable students
- varied lodging choices
- and affordability.

The 1992-1993 program fee for University of Massachusetts students is $9,000 for Massachusetts residents ($10,000 for non-residents). The fee covers all non-personal expenses, including round-trip air fare. Financial aid may be available (ask the financial aid officers on your campus).

Participants may earn 30 or more credits. They should have completed at least two years of college French, with a B average, before leaving for France.

Space is still available in the 1992-1993 program. To learn more, call the program director, Prof. Gerald Volpe, in the Modern Languages Department at the University of Massachusetts at Boston.

DOONESBURY By GARRY TRUDEAU

MR. PRESIDENT, HOW DO YOU PERSONALLY INTERPRET THE NEW HAMPSHIRE RESULTS? WERE VOTERS TRYING TO SEND YOU A MESSAGE?
YES, THEY WERE. AND THE MESSAGE WAS, "HEY, WE CARE ABOUT THE NEW WORLD ORDER. THAT'S GOING ON. WE DON'T LIKE THIS 'AMERICA FIRST' THING THAT'S BEING PUT OUT THERE BY THAT NEGATIVE CROWD THAT WE'RE SEEING."
THE FACT IS, WHEN AMERICANS OPEN UP THEIR NEWSPAPERS EVERY MORNING, MOST OF 'EM GO RIGHT TO THE SAME SECTION I DO...

THIS SNOWMAN DOESN'T LOOK ESPECIALLY AVANT-GARDE.
ACTUALLY IT'S VERY AVANT-GARDE.
THIS IS MY NEW ART MOVEMENT, "NEO-REGIONALISM." I'M APPEALING TO POPULAR NOSTALGIA FOR THE SIMPLE VALUES OF RURAL AMERICA SO YEARS AGO.
I FIGURE THE PUBLIC WILL EAT THIS UP AND I'LL MAKE A FORTUNE.
SO HOW IS THIS AVANT-GARDE?
IT'S SECRETLY IRONIC.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep up a steady pace at work. You may have to dig deep to get certain information. Stress you stamina and common sense. Someone could signal you to stop. Keep an open mind.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid both extravagance and exaggeration today. Showing enthusiasm for your work will help put this day in the success column. Problems arise involving scheduling or logistics.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may have to cancel certain plans in order to deal with a private matter. Do not put off approaching a romantic interest any longer or they may lose interest. Your energy is high today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Steer clear of conflicts, but do not act stand-offish. You are moving up the career ladder and need to be at your best at all times. Romance soars to new heights tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Two of your allies may not like each other much. Try to keep the peace by suggesting certain concessions. Giving in to an emotional ultimatum would be a mistake.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stay on your toes. Indecision or another person's deception could make money slip through your hands. Romance is in the air tonight. Avoid rushing things.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A pact with someone at a distance could bring long-term benefits. The scales of justice swing your way. Past favors will be repaid. Consult mate if you want to entertain at home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Curb a tendency to get too wrapped up in your own affairs. Co-workers could turn resentful. Let your colleagues know that you are a team player.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Something terrific could happen to you today. A new plan is perfect for you. Be certain you make the right choice. You and a longtime romantic partner can recapture the original magic.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It is time to turn idle talk into positive action. Do not be afraid to take the plunge! A romantic relationship changes for the better. Your ego could have caused problems. Admit past mistakes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance and good luck go hand-in-hand. You are never too old for love! Community work appeals to recently retired seniors. If a project seems hard, get your second wind and try again.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasize your desire to do something constructive when talking with influential friends. A new job offer could come your way. Smile and the world smiles with you today.

first game. The Minutemen did the job though, by playing suffocating defense and by attacking the basket.

In the latest issue of Inside Sports, it ranked the 10 toughest courts to play at in college hoops. I was outraged to see that the Curry Hicks Cage was not among them.

Is it really tougher to play in West Virginia's Coliseum or California's Harmon Gymnasium than it is here at the Cage? I think not, and I'm sure that everyone at the Temple game on Sunday certainly agrees with me on the answer to that question. Once the UMass band starts blaring the J. Geils Band classic "Rage In The Cage" it's already over for the poor opposition.

Will someone please explain to me how the Big East Conference has five teams ranked in the Top 25? The five ranked teams, Syracuse, Connecticutt, Seton Hall, St. Johns, and Georgetown have 29 losses between them. Can you say overrated?

All year long on WMUA I've made it very clear that Will Herndon has a spot on my AAA (Awesome Aerial Acrobats) team. Well, the rest of the team was just released.

Joining Herndon as starting members of AAA are USC's Harold Miner, Michigan's Chris Webber, LSU's Shaquille O'Neal, and Wake Forest's Rodney Rogers. Off the bench, Memphis State's Anfernee Hardaway and Southern Miss's Clarence Weatherspoon bring their own signature slams for the acrobats. I want to see a dunk contest between AAA members.

In my first Collegian column I pondered the thought of putting together a team of the NBA's fattest players. The next project: a team of the NBA's toughest players.

Playing point guard for this squad would be Atlanta's Rumeal Robinson, I really don't know if he's tough, but his physique alone makes him my choice.

At shooting guard, Milwaukee's Alvin Robertson gets the nod, due to his pit bull mentality. Orlando's Nick Anderson was my choice until he got beat up at an Ice Cube concert.

Up front there are many contenders for the three available positions. Utah's Karl Malone and New York's Xavier McDaniel are the team's forwards with Houston's Larry "Mr. Mean" Smith, New York's Charles Oakley, and Portland's Buck Williams (his skirmish against the now retired Lonnie Shelton is legendary) being the toughest omissions.

At center, the Clippers' Olden Polynice wears the crown due to warrior-like approach to the game. Robert Parish garnered an honorable mention for his vicious attack on Bill Laimbeer a few years back. If Artis Gilmore were still in the league he'd start, hands down.

Overall, this is one team you don't want to mess with. Next column: the NCAA's All-Ugly Team.

Meanwhile in Miami, the Heat are making the other expansion teams, the Hornets, Magic and Timberwolves look something like Moe, Larry, and Curly. The Heat has stockpiled tremendous young talent and are currently battling for a playoff spot.

Watch for the Heat to deal for a backup power forward/center. Their backcourt is extremely crowded right now with Steve Smith, Glen Rice, Bimbo Coles, Brian Shaw and Kevin Edwards all needing playing time. Even if the Heat doesn't make the playoffs, it should still be considered a successful year for them.

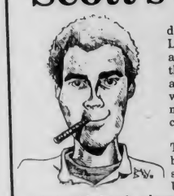
Scott's shots



Somehow it just didn't seem right for Larry Bird to be wearing a suit in Los Angeles this past Sunday. That alone should indicate what Magic Johnson means to the basketball community.

• It was nice to see Temple fall in The Cage, but it was even nicer to see Jim Reid on the UMass bench. He fit right in with the other dapper coaches on the bench, (at last count: 106) and in some small way I've got to believe he was at the core of the victory.

• Perhaps I should clear up something from last week's ramblings. When I mentioned Athletic Director Frank McInerney's $79,000 annual salary and Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff's $96,000 yearly take, I did it strictly to humiliate these two men and allow them to think about their recent actions and statements.

I shall continue to do so until someone can justify these salaries in light of the Jim Reid debacle. There is no excuse for losing a man of Reid's stature.

David Scott

• The battle for "Cravat King" (king of the ties) stepped up a notch at the Temple game. Two things confirmed my almost insurmountable lead:

1) Hampshire Gazette venerable writer Milt Cole's wife Nancy's comment that I "accessorize well" and,

2) The conspicuous stares Coach Cal was giving me, or more accurately my tie, as he conducted his post-game interviews. Don't think I didn't notice, Cal, and don't think I'll let up on the pressure either. Sure, you wore a "prime time" neck piece on Sunday, but it's my contest and I make the rules.

(Editor's note: David Scott's tie opinions are his and his alone, they do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian, the University or any truly sane person. In all honesty he may be the only one even in the tie contest.)

• You always know I've been Uptown too much when the column has more fashion news than sports commentary.

• I rode Rusty again last week, this time in the sitting trot, without stirrups. We quote ABC's Keith Jackson and say, "Wohh Nellie, that Rusty is a hohhrse. Trying the sitting trot on him is like trying to brush your teeth in a six-foot boat with 12-foot waves — you just cahn't do it."

• Road trips always provide valuable material and the Road to Rutgers blessed us with this gem from a sub shop manager, "Chips, drinks or anything famous?"

Also from Rutger's Louis Brown Athletic Center: Rest assured that your representatives from the Collegian totally outdressed the writers from Rutgers student rag.

• Jody Reed lost his arbitration case with the Red Sox and will have to settle for something in the area of $1.6 million. I had a similar settlement with this paper and the bad blood still exists. Suck it up Jody — where else can a short guy with a girl's name make that kind of cash? Sure Reed has a good glove and he strokes the doubles, but the real money comes with speed as well.

• I get ill thinking that we may lose Magic and Larry in the same year with Bird's recent hints of retirement.

• My soccer guru, Del, made an important point as to why soccer is hardly recognized in the United States. He said if each touchdown in football were only worth a point, the scores would be 3-2 as well. Americans like big numbers, (the exception is of course baseball), but the prospect of a grand slam or a ninth-inning comeback are some explanations.

• Davey Allison won the Daytona 500 and in three days most of the people who know that will have forgotten it. In fact I think it just slipped my mind. Oh well.

• The Boston Globe's Joe Burris almost fell out of his seat on one of Will Herndon's dunks against Temple. My legs weren't too sturdy either. Someone asked me to imagine Herndon being 6'8" and the dominance he would have. True, but the dunks would'nt seem so improbable.

• I'll go out on the limb and say that by the time Temple's Rick Brunson and UMass' Lou Roe are seniors, they will be the dominant players in the Atlantic 10 and two of Dick Vitale's favorite players. "Diaper dandies, Babbeeee, watch out."

• Pre-pre-season prediction for the Patriots: AFC champs and then a heartbreaking touchdown

Women's hoop braces for rematch with Temple

62-38.

That's what happened the last time the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team faced off against Temple.

In the five Atlantic 10 games that UMass has left, Temple is the worst Conference opponent that the Minutewomen will face. Therefore, tonight's game at Curry Hicks Cage at 7 p.m. will represent a good shot at UMass' elusive first win.

UMass must improve on the drubbing at Philadelphia that Temple gave them, but the team hasn't lost its confidence.

Coach Joanie O'Brien said earlier this month she is optimistic about the home stretch.

"All of those teams are coming around for a second time, so hopefully we'll get them then," she said.

The Minutewomen (4-18, 0-11 in the A-10) are on an 8-game losing skid, and they haven't beaten Temple since 1988.

The Owls, who are 7-15 overall and 4-7 in the Conference, are led by a bevy of upperclassmen.

Junior Margarete Rougier is on a tear this season. The swingman leads Temple in points (12.5 per game) and rebounds (8.4) after being mainly a reserve last season. She has led the team in points in eight games. Rougier is Temple's best all-around athlete, so the Minutewomen must guard her at all times.

Sonya Perry is another threat for the Owls. The 6-0 forward has started every Owl game for the past two years, and is second in scoring (10.1) and rebounding (4.6). Perry scored a career-high 23 points in a loss against Villanova this season.

Dallese Jackson is Temple's outstanding point guard, and she has been the main cog for the Owls. The senior leads the team with a whopping 7.4 assists per game, which is among the best in the country.

The Owls have a wealth of talent, but it hasn't been translated into wins. Temple is currently tied for sixth place in the A-10 with Rhode Island.

Riley, a senior from Altoona, PA, leads the Minutewomen with 52 assists, averaging 2.5 per game. She has been a spark on both ends of the floor while battling a chronic back problem.

Kristofik has performed well in a new position this season. She increased her outside shooting as a forward last year, and uses it for her 12.8 points per game average. Kristofik also leads the team with 7.9 boards per game.

Moran has been a pleasant surprise this season. She is second on the team in points (11.4) and boards (6.3).

Men's track earns third place

Willis, Simon set Eastern Championship records

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Last Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's track team headed into the Eastern Conference Championships hoping that, with a little help from the other teams and a near perfect performance of its own, it could overtake the University of Rhode Island and end its recent string of third place finishes.

The Minutemen held up their end of the bargain. But the other 10 teams weren't as cordial, as UMass couldn't hold off the powerful URI squad and finished third behind the Rams and the Black Bears of Maine.

"We knew going in that we needed some help from the other teams to knock off Rhode Island's big guns," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "What happened was that we all ended up chipping away at each other's scoring, and not URI's."

URI dominated most of the events, winning 10 of 19, while cruising to a 140.5-70 victory over Maine. UMass finished third with 66.5 points, narrowly edging out Southern Connecticut State University and UMass-Lowell, both with 66 points.

UMass scored in 12 of the 19 events as 20 different Minutemen recorded their personal best performances of the season.

While the Minutemen were only able to garner two first place finishes, they did so in convincing fashion, as both Matt Simon and Keith Willis set Eastern Championship records in their respective events.

Simon ran away with the 3,000-meter race, beating his closest opponent by 10.96 seconds, while Willis' 5,000 was decided in a closer 1.48 seconds.

"Basically, Matt took the race from the gun, and by the one mile mark it was pretty much over," O'Brien said.

Also impressive for the Minutemen was the sprinting duo of Jerome Bledsoe and Kevin Walters, who finshed 2-3 in the 55 dash, with Bledsoe only .12 seconds behind the winner.

"Overall, the sprinters and middle distance runners had an outstanding day, and I was very pleased with our jumpers," O'Brien said. "I just think on a day like that, none of us could have beaten Rhode Island. They're just too strong for us."

Things don't get any easier for the Minutemen, as they travel to Hanover, N.H. on Saturday to take on Dartmouth, a meet which should see UMass' perfect 8-0 record go by the wayside.

"Rhode Island was good, but Dartmouth is better," O'Brien said. "I really don't think that we can beat them."

Instead, the Minutemen will use the meet as a tune-up for next weekend's New England Championships, which almost 75 percent of O'Brien's team has qualified for.

"In a meet like this, you just have to give it your best shot," O'Brien said. "All we can do is work each event as hard as we can, and hope it takes us one step closer to the New Englands."

Hoop season winds down and heats up

The world of college basketball is starting to heat up right now and the Minutemen here at UMass are adding their own fuel to the fire.

Jeff Crofts

With a record of 21-4, the Minutemen are knocking on the door of the Top 25 once again (UMass is currently ranked 26th). If they enter the Top 25 again, hopefully they'll have more than the cup of coffee they had the first time they were there. After beating Oklahoma to enter at No. 25, UMass lost their next game at home to West Virginia and dropped out.

Against Temple on Sunday the Cage crowd was in its usual fine form. It was especially nice to see the spirited return of Elvis after a lengthy hiatus.

I really didn't know if the Minutemen would be able to beat Temple — they were outplayed in the State ruling retains congressional seats

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Massachusetts won a lawsuit against the U.S. Census Bureau yesterday in its attempt to keep all 11 of its congressional seats.

The state had argued that it was improper to include people living overseas, such as military personnel, in apportioning congressional seats. The U.S. Constitution calls for the apportionment of representatives according to the "whole number of persons in each state" in order to retain the seat.

The state was originally slated to lose one seat, and the Legislature and the governor have been trying to redraw the state's congressional map to reflect the loss. The state's current congressional delegation completely consists of Democrats.

All states must redraw their congressional districts after the federal census, which takes place every 10 years. The apportionment of seats among states is based on the census numbers as well as a complex formula that assures the size of the U.S. House of Representatives always remains 435 members.

Massachusetts went before a panel of three federal judges to argue that the state should not lose its 11th seat.

"We won with the special federal panel ... meaning that we will retain the 11th seat," said Tom Samoluk, a spokesman for the attorney general's office.

The case can be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which is already hearing a congressional apportionment case filed by Montana. That case comes up for a Supreme Court hearing March 4.

The ruling today says that the state may retain its seats if the governor and the legislature meet special conditions imposed by the court. Samoluk said the attorney general's office was still reading through the decision early today to determine what the conditions are. One condition is that the state must have its 11 new districts redrawn by the end of March.

Rep. James Brett, D-Boston, co-chairman of the Legislature's redistricting committee, said he expects the Massachusetts case up to the Supreme Court as well.

"I'm obviously pleased by the decision," he said. "It's great news for us. It's just unclear right now whether it's going to be upheld or not."

Brett said that he would have no trouble meeting the requirement to have a new map for the 11 seats drawn by the end of next month.

"I look forward to that assignment. I'll have it done, you can count on it," he said. "We're gratified by the federal court's decision that Massachusetts may ultimately be given its proper representation in Congress."

The Legislature passed a redistricting plan last month that would pit two incumbents against each other to reduce the congressional delegation to 10. The plan was drawn up by Democratic leaders in the Legislature, but Republican Gov. William F. Weld returned the plan with recommendations that were more favorable to the GOP.

Since that time, Democratic leaders and Republicans have been trying to negotiate a compromise plan that anticipates the loss of a seat.

Men's soccer team saved; Ryan to the rescue

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts often seems to be the forgotten little brother of the Commonwealth. Last in line for funding, respect and praise from both Beacon Hill and alumni alike.

Just when you thought no one in Massachusetts cared about the University, Jeff Ryan, class of '81, and the World Class Soccer Camp came forward.

Ryan, president of the WCSC, negotiated a deal in which the camp will donate $780,000 over the next five years to the University's men's varsity soccer program.

The soccer program was eliminated from the athletic budget last spring. The team played out its "terminal" season last fall.

"Basically when I saw what was happening to UMass, in terms of funding, it disgusted me," Ryan said. "I saw donating to the soccer program as an opportunity to help my school out. I wanted to come up with some money and do some good."

The good Ryan did was bring back a soccer program which was basically dead, set up the precedent of private funding for public services and provide UMass with its only good news this side of John Calipari's basketball team.

Athletic Director Frank McInerney summed up the importance of the donation by saying, "This is the first good news to hit this department in years. Instead of the monthly cut, cut, cut, it is the first positive sign I've seen."

The WCSC originally approached the University in mid-October about the possibility of donating funds. After months of deliberations, Ryan came to terms with the University and made the announcement on January 29th at Gov. Weld's office in Boston.

This summer, the WCSC will run its nine week camp at the University, paying the full rent any other camp would.

"We aren't getting any special treatment from the University," Ryan said. "However donating obviously strengthened our relationship with UMass. By running the camp at UMass we are giving money to the University instead of giving it to a private college."

The camp has high goals for itself, namely being the largest in the Northeast. The WCSC boasts of employing 14 former international players, many of them World Cup players, as coaches. The group also is planning on sponsoring tour groups to Europe.

Ryan had met some of the coaches while working in England and they decided to give the camp a shot in the U.S.

The camp is only a year and a half old and they have never run a camp in the U.S. Still, Ryan forsees no problems.

"The people we have who will be running the camp have ten years of experience [running camps] in Europe," Ryan said. "We have the best coaches, best format and best program in the area. The WCSC is simply the best camp around, there isn't anything close to this around and we are expecting a successful summer."

Ryan pointed out that the funding for the soccer program does not rest on the success of the camp.

"We are committed to funding the team regardless of how the camp does," Ryan said. "We will stand behind our committment no matter what. The camp and the funding are tied together but they are not exclusively dependent on each other."

Ryan, who earlier this month recieved a thumbs up from Sports Illustrated, shies away from the individual attention and prefers to place the emphasis on the camp.

"The only thing I gained after the Sports Illustrated

Amherst fire hazards persist

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

The charred house where two UMass students lost their lives one year ago still stands as a grim reminder of a tragic event that might have been avoided.

Matthew Peterson and Joseph Pirog, both 22, died due to a fire that engulfed their North Pleasant St. apartment in the early morning hours of February 17, 1991.

Residents said the house had no smoke detectors and that the landlord, George Ray of Middlebury Conn., had not supplied any.

Both the landlord and local officials were accused of negligence because of a loophole which allowed the home to go without detectors.

Amherst Fire Chief, Victor Zumbruski said last year the landlord was obeying the laws because fire detectors were not mandatory in Amherst residential homes until May of 1991.

Zumbruski said that an estimated 70 percent of the homes in Amherst do have working fire detectors. In addition, he said 20 percent have dysfunctional ones while 10 percent of Amherst homes don't have smoke detectors.

"You think 10 percent isn't much," Zumbruski said. "But even that's too much."

Last years fire was a tragic event though Zumbruski says a similar tragedy might still happen again.

"We've done all we can to educate people about fire detectors," he said. "Some people don't replace batteries and some remove detectors for various reasons."

UMass students are the largest group of renters in Amherst, Zumbruski said. The house where Peterson and Pirog lost their lives was very similar to many homes that UMass students are presently living in.

Gerald Jones, of D.H. Jones Realtors, says some problems in fire safety stems from the "small landlords" who

D.H. Jones, who rents a majority of its units to UMass students, maintains it has had a strict fire detector policy long before the new 1991 laws were even drafted.

Amherst Building Commissioner, Chester Penza, said the damaged building is still owned by George Ray and that he has been trying to sell the building and the land it occupies.

Penza also said that the town may have to take steps to demolish the building if the landlord doesn't renovate or demolish the site himself.

Democratic Presidential hopeful Paul Tsongas, sporting a lipstick kiss from his wife Niki on his cheek and a pin with her picture on his lapel, speaks during a fund-raising swing through New York Wednesday evening. The former Massachusetts senator, fresh from victory in Tuesday's Democratic presidential primary, said chances at the nomination will rest on his ability to raise money for television commercials.

Scientists find gene

May lead to muscular dystrophy cure

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Researchers said Thursday they have pinpointed the gene that causes the most common adult form of muscular dystrophy, the latest in a series of discoveries that should lead to early diagnosis and perhaps eventual treatment of this disease.

The discovery already provides more clues about why this inherited disease gets worse as it is passed from generation to generation.

The disease, called myotonic dystrophy, affects about one in every 7,000 to 8,000 people worldwide.

"To see this major breakthrough come to fruition is very exciting," commented Dr. Richard Moxley of the University of Rochester.

Three research teams with members in the United States, Canada and Europe discovered the gene almost simultaneously. One of their reports will be published in Friday's issue of the journal Cell. The other two will appear March 6 in the journal Science.

"The new results will permit very precise methods for diagnosing the disease prenatally and before symptoms appear and identifying carriers" of the gene, said Dr. Henry Epstein of Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, a member of one of the research teams.

Experts caution, however, that the discovery does not immediately suggest any obvious ways of stopping or preventing the disease, which causes weakness and wasting of the muscles.

"Treatment is not just around the corner," said Dr. David Brook of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, another co-discoverer.

However, the findings at least help scientists begin a systematic search for therapies.

"Knowing the gene permits one to work toward that goal," Epstein said. "It doesn't necessarily tell us we could design a specific drug right now, but it may offer the possibility."

Just two weeks ago, many of the same researchers reported the discovery of an abnormal section of gene that appears to be the critical flaw in this form of muscular dystrophy. Now scientists have isolated virtually the whole gene and provided more details about how it goes bad.

The discovery should allow them to figure out what role this gene normally plays in healthy people. Then scientists will be able to decipher the exact irregularities that occur when it is defective.

Doctors theorize that the gene contains the code for the body to manufacture an enzyme. This substance, in turn, regulates the working of other crucial proteins that are found in cell membranes.

The researchers are uncertain whether the muscular dystrophy gene makes too much of this enzyme, too little or a defective form of it. However, their work shows the abnormal form of the gene is active in the brain, heart and muscles, all parts of the body that are affected by the disease.

Israel attacks Shiite guerillas

Officials say action isn't precursor to major invasion

By RODEINA KENAAN
Associated Press

TYRE, Lebanon — A tank-led Israeli force smashed through U.N. barricades and stormed into two south Lebanon villages yesterday to hunt down Shiite Muslim guerillas. Israeli officials insisted the operation was narrow in scope and not the prelude to an invasion.

Two Israeli soldiers were killed and three wounded, security sources said, and four Shiite guerillas were killed. The two U.N. peacekeepers, four guerillas and five civilians were hurt, sources said.

Israel said the attacking force, backed by Cobra helicopter gunships, was seeking out "Katyusha launchers and terrorist nests" after three days of Katyusha rocket attacks on Israel by Shiite guerillas. There were more rocket attacks reported today.

An Israeli military spokesman emphasized that today's action had a narrow focus. "This is a very limited operation for a very limited time and of limited scope," Col. Moshe Fogel told reporters at a briefing near the Israeli-Lebanon frontier.

But two Israel lawmakers demanded an urgent session of Parliament's Defense and Foreign Affairs Committee to review the action. Legislators Yossi Sarid and Yair Tzaban, both liberals, said on Israel radio that what the army was doing in Lebanon reminded them too much of 1982.

Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon was initially launched as a limited operation to drive out Palestinian guerillas, and then Defense Ariel Sharon's more ambitious designs became apparent later.

In today's strike, Israeli gunners fired hundreds of howitzer rounds into valleys around Kafra and Tibnin, apparently to block guerilla escape routes.

Hostilities between Israeli forces and fighters of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah organization have been on the rise since Israel assassinated Hezbollah leader Sheik Abbas Musawi in south Lebanon on Sunday.

Musawi's successor, Sheik Hassan Nasrallah, in a fatwa, or religious edict, broadcast on Hezbollah's radio station, declared a "general mobilization and maximum alert of all the mujahedeen," or Islamic holy warriors.

Hezbollah, or Party of God, was moving fighters in civilian cars to the battlefront, but heavy Israeli artillery fire was stopping the reinforcements from reaching Kafra or Yater.

The Israeli casualties occured when a guerrilla-planted explosive charge went off in a house they entered in Kafra. The ceiling collapsed on the five soldiers, security sources said.

Four Shiite guerillas were wounded by Israeli gunfire during the search in Kafra and neighboring Yatar, the security sources added.

Glass windows in jail cause trouble

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — County administrators figured putting large glass windows in the cells of the new $52 million jail would let a little sunshine in. But they also let a couple of inmates out.

The 12-story, 1,200-inmate jail was billed as escape-proof when it opened in November.

Since then two prisoners have escaped and several others have tried. Both escapees were recaptured.

The large glass blocks that were installed to let in light were supposed to be bullet-proof, but one inmate escaped by smashing a mop handle through one.

The other inmate dug out the mortar that held a window block in place.

Authorities subsequently performed bullet-proof tests on the blocks and found they failed two out of three times. Checks of the mortar showed some had been mixed without cement.

Last week, county officials gave the jail's prime contractor, Manhattan Construction Co. of Tulsa, 10 days to answer their request to make repairs.

Assistant District Attorney Robert Mitchell said the company responded on Monday and things should be fixed within 90 days.

In the meantime, authorities have moved the jail's more dangerous prisoners to areas where they can keep a better watch on them.

Disabled youth not receiving social security

By PETE YOST
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Some 600,000 children with disabilities aren't getting benefits they're entitled to from the Social Security Administration because the agency isn't letting them know help is available, a coalition of private organizations said today.

Eighty-five percent of the eligible children in some states are going without payments of up to $422 a month because their families don't know they qualify, the Children's SSI Campaign said in a statement.

More than 1 million children with disabilities are eligible for the Supplemental Security Income program, but only 439,000 got them in December, the coalition said.

Some of the children qualify under a Supreme Court ruling of two years ago which said the agency had arbitrarily and illegally denied cash benefits.

The court ordered the SSA to contact 452,000 children turned down between 1980 and 1990, but only 204,000 have been located, Jonathan Stein of Philadelphia's Community Legal Services said.

Today is the second anniversary of the court case, Sullivan vs. Zebley, the largest class action lawsuit ever brought against the Social Security Administration.

Stein said there are delays and errors in processing cases and that the agency is engaging in "foot-dragging."

Agency spokeswoman Trish Butler denied the allegations.

"I'm shocked, disappointed and confused that all this agency's efforts to reach these children are being castigated as foot-dragging," Butler said in an interview Wednesday.

She said the agency has printed a quarter of a million posters, over half a million brochures in English and Spanish, run TV and radio public service announcements and been in touch with 200 community organizations.

The Supplemental Security Income program is for lower-income families of children who are blind or have a severe disability or chronic illness.

Amtrak workers feel railroaded

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Amtrak spent $62,140 to send its president and nine directors to Europe last fall to check out high speed trains in five countries. And with the railroad cutting jobs back home to balance its budget, some unions are steaming.

The unions contend the trip amounted to an expenses-paid luxury vacation at a time when their members are being asked to forgo pay raises or facing the loss of jobs.

Amtrak says the trip was a strenuous and productive fact-finding trip that resulted in decisions to bring the Swedish fast train, the X-2000, to the United States for experimental runs along the railroad's northeast corridor.

The federally subsidized passenger line says use of the train could eventually cut an hour off the run from New York to Boston.

Amtrak spokeswoman Sue Martin confirmed the trip costs, including $44,600 for air fare, $14,309 for hotels, $4,950 in miscellaneous expenses and $3,509 for rail fares. She said $4,950 of the costs were reimbursed by two U.S. officials and an aide to Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson, Amtrak's board chairman, who traveled with the group.

Each of the nine directors also received a $300 fee for each day of the trip, which opened with a regular two-day board meeting in Stockholm.

The party then spent five days riding high-speed trains in Sweden, Germany, Italy, France and Spain.

"The extravagant $62,000 European trip by the Amtrak board was a slap in the face to Amtrak's workers," said Mac A. Fleming, president of the Brotherhood of Maintanence Way Employees.

"The fact that they would spend $14,000 on lavish accommodations alone shows that they have no understanding of the plight of their employees. Our workers make an average $21,000 a year and have gone three and one half years without a pay raise," he said. "I cannot understand how Amtrak's management can poormouth at the bargaining table and do something like this."

"It was absolutely not in any shape or form a vacation for any of them," Martin said. "It was a very strenuous trip, a whirlwind. There was not a spare moment. But it was not extremely productive."

She said the hotels were selected because of their proximity to railroad stations.

Amtrak announced last week it is elimination 230 blue-collar and management jobs across the country as one of several cost-cutting steps to offset $67 million in projected losses.

Wife-killer will receive three months

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) —A convicted wife-killer who worked here for years as a minister will serve three months in an Illinois prison for violating parole, officials say.

Ed Lopes, 56, a Plymouth, Mass., native will serve three mon at Menard Correction Center in Chester, Ill., as punishment for parole violations.

In a separate decision, Deputy District Attorney Joe Gaughan in Plymouth County, Mass., said Lopes will not be charged in the death 25 years ago of Helen Hanson of Brockton, Mass.

Lopes told the Illinois Prisoner Review Board this week that leaving Illinois without permission after he was paroled in 1983 was an honest mistake. He served nearly 12 years for murdering his wife and trying to kill a girlfriend.

But the three-member panel didn't buy the minister's explanation, board chairman James Williams said Wednesday.

Lopes had passed himself off in the Tri-Cities as a reformed Mafia hit man who avoided a death sentence through the grace of God.

His stories were called into question in mid-December by newspaper reports. Illinois authorities then learned of Lopes's whereabouts and asked Richland police to arrest him for jumping parole.

"We took into consideration that he didn't try to hide his identity in all these years, but the fact is, he absconded after being fully informed of his responsibilities while on parole," Williams said from his office in Springfield, Ill.

Massachusetts officials reopened an investigation into Hanson's death after Lopes told a newspaper he beat a woman to death in Brockton in the 1960s and fled.

Lopes has said he will not talk to Brockton authorities about the death of Hanson, with who he had a daughter. Without his confession, Gaughan said, Brockton has no case.

Lopes likely will remain under Illinois' jurisdiction until 2019, but can apply for early discharge, Williams said.

Lopes, who is scheduled for release from prison May 18, can ask to transfer his parole to Washington. The transfer would require approval by Washington and Illinois officials, and a parole plan prepared by Lopes that outlines job prospects, Williams said.

Cannibal killer Dahmer does not deserve the life sentence

Well, it's time for some serious talk, guys. Our country has a huge problem, and you know it as the criminal justice system.

First, let me make the assumption that the criminal justice system in the United States is inadequate. A recent case will prove my point.

First of all, let's travel to Milwaukee, Wisconsin for the Jeffery Dahmer case. Dahmer was indicted for 15 counts of murder, and there were some "minor" sexually deviant counts also.

To make a disgusting story short, Dahmer kidnapped young men, tortured them, raped them and killed them. He killed his victims in a variety of ways, mainly through decapitation, although testimony indicated he tried to boil someone's skin off.

Near or at the point of death, Mr. Dahmer skinned his victims and ate portions of their bodies. He later froze the heads or other parts of the body for his own pleasure. Dahmer was a necrophiliac, according to testimony, which meant he liked to have sex with dead bodies.

He calculated his routine so that he would not be caught by anyone. Dahmer picked up poor, defenseless teenage boys who lived in the city with the assumption that no one would notice their disappearance.

Dahmer was proud of his hours of meticulous labor, and he had the heads of his victims in his apartment. He kept the bodies in his home for his sexual pleasure.

Testimony indicated that Dahmer was interested in buying a cryogenic machine which would freeze the bodies so that he could [expletive] them. When he saw the $23,000 price tag, he turned away.

Michael Morrissey

Eventually, the police tracked Dahmer down and arrested him, later charging him with 15 counts of first-degree murder. After a quick and speedy trial, Jeffery Dahmer was found guilty.

Oh yeah, they also ruled he was sane.

Sane.

Jeffery Dahmer is not a sane individual, fine, but we know that. The problem is with our criminal justice system, which, in order to sentence Dahmer to prison, had to rule he was sane.

See, back in the old days, we had a noble notion that the mentally disturbed criminals could be reformed. Therefore, insane killers were put in mental institutions to be "cured" by our wonderful psychologists and psychiatrists.

Nowadays, our brilliant lawyers have told every murderer and rapist walking down the pike to plead insanity, and the justice system has rewarded them with a year of "evaluation" in a low-security hospital. This has to change. When I think about a just society, I think we should protect our citizens from dangerous criminals who, in one way or another, have shown they cannot live with our rules and laws. The safest way to protect ourselves is to exterminate "mad dogs" who are otherwise living off of the fat of society.

Felons, I believe, are incurable and should not be relegated to mental hospitals. Instead, they should go to prison like the rest of the scum. (Incidentally, I welcome the prisoner's rights groups to write in with their opinions. I'm always looking for reading material while on the toilet.)

Life without parole is too good for Mr. Dahmer. Obviously he should be put to death through the most creative way possible (Personally, I prefer the guillotine.).

As long as he is alive, "Mad dog" Dahmer is a threat to all of us. We need a national death penalty now more then ever. Our criminals can't be rehabilitated. That was the fantasy of the "New Deal" liberals.

It infuriates me that a man like Dahmer could live off my taxes. How sickening. If I could, I'd save Milwaukee Electric the wattage and settle things myself.

Stop the attack on public education

The University is going private. At the same time its budget is being slashed and the quality of education is beginning to nose dive. Middle and low income working people in Massachusetts are losing the right to higher education. My purpose here isn't to restate the problem. I am concerned, rather, with our inaction on this problem. Why is it that we are letting wealthy and self-interested politicians and bureaucrats steal this right from us and wreck our futures?

Zack Exley

A few years back there was a massive but short burst of student protest against budget cuts and tuition increases. It culminated in a student strike and a huge rally at the state house, but after everyone had exhausted themselves, and Whitmore and the state had made some superficial concessions, the struggle was not carried further. Consequently, the University continued to raise costs and the state has continued to slash the budget. We can learn from that experience and see that it will take a long-term, determined effort (maybe two years) to save the University.

The fact is that we students have everything we need today to bring tuition and fees back to 1987 levels, and to simultaneously force the state to fund the University at old high levels as well. We don't need to see a completed, specific plan to see that this is easily possible. In fact, we shouldn't have a specific plan now because we won't know what form the struggle will have to take until we're in the middle of it. All we need is determination and the willingness to organize ourselves. With that the details will present themselves to us as we go along.

A true community effort, in which each one of us contributed and hour or so every few weeks, would have no chance of failing. Everyone spending and hour every few weeks for the salvation of the University would supply 8,000 people hours per week—the equivalent of a staff of 200 people working full time on saving the University! On top of that, though, we will have to organize ourselves. We have to organize ourselves because those who are threatening the University are organized. There will be plenty of room for different action and different voices, but it is crucial that we show the state, and show the overpaid bureaucrats of the University system that we are totally committed to, totally united to, and totally capable of forcing them to return UMass to a full budget and fair fees.

First and second year students should and will play a leading role in this effort. They have the most at stake, and they have the most time. First and second year students, along with others, should come together as soon as possible to form a group for the long-term struggle to save their educations.

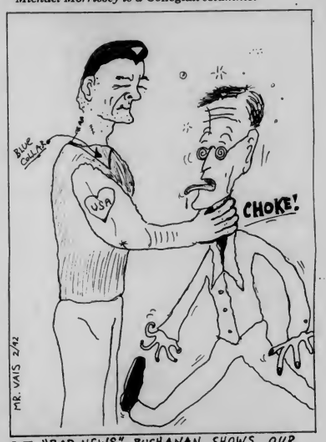
The way is clear. But is there a will? To sit back and let our school, one of the best public universities in the country, be decimated by wealthy legislators and a millionaire governor, is pitiful and self degrading. If in ten years potential employers skip our resumes because we went to UMass, "The most expensive community college in the country", we will have no one to blame but ourselves. If the first and second year students of today cannot get accepted into graduate school when they try, they also will have no one to blame but themselves. Because we have the capability to do something, but are not, the collapse of the University says as much about us as it does about the state government.

We are being attacked. The wealthy politicians of this state and this country think it's perfectly okay to wipe out public higher education. If we cannot come together to defend ourselves now, here, when will we ever be able to?

To allow ourselves to be robbed like this is counter to the spirit of this school, of this country and our humanity. If we cannot learn to defend ourselves against violation of this kind, we will go on being violated for the rest of our lives.

An organization should be formed. It should work on growth until the whole school is tied into it and behind it. When we graduate and costs are halved, and the budget is back where it should be, we will have earned more than our diplomas; we will have earned our self-respect and the respect of the people of this state.

Zack Exley is a UMass student.



PAT "BAD NEWS" BUCHANAN SHOWS OUR PRESIDENT A THOUSAND POINTS OF LIGHT

By all means, keep writing — I suppose that I'll need to reiterate these words all throughout this semester: type everything, we're far too busy to decipher and will usually disregard a hand written document. More things: if your piece is much longer than 70 lines, we will probably not have room for it. If it is under 50 lines, it is a letter, and we like those. Really short and to the point? We love it!

"Moneybags" Story used artificial factors in victory

On Tuesday, the moneybags of Ellen Story invoked their magic, winning for her the Democratic Primary in the State Representative race. Without all those newspaper and radio advertisements, she most certainly would not have received those 128 votes which put her over the top. Now she heads into the final race against two less-known candidates, Mark Enoch and Larry Kelley. In this liberal-minded town, how could a Weld-following Republican and a fiscally-concerned Independent business owner make a dent in a feminist Democrat's campaign?

Money is not the only super-political tool Story used to win the primary. In fact, there were so many artificial factors beyond simple experience and beliefs that supported her election that I find myself no longer surprised that we have a lying, ineffective ex-CIA director as president of the United States.

Mike Levy

Story was effective in highlighting her gender as a key reason to support her. While her "not one of the guys" chatter was a main focus of Story throughout many debates and forums, nobody stopped to think that maybe this was not a liability, but instead a godsend. She was the sole woman in a field of four candidates, leaving her alone among the voters that were concerned about electing their own gender. Hite, Page and Franklin, on the other hand, had to split the male vote three ways. To exactly what degree this helped her I do not know, but even a small handful of gender-sympathetic votes would be a large percentage of her margin of victory.

It is too bad she was allowed to ride on this issue, while experience was largely ignored with respect to the other candidates. Hite has had direct experience in Boston and direct knowledge of the state government's inner workings. Page has an extensive resume of local government work, surpassing by far any of the three other candidates.

It could be argued strongly that Story won the campaign Tuesday night, but I hope there are other options to the Amherst and Pelham voters than this. I have heard optimistic rumors of a Hite write-in campaign. This sounds interesting, unless Norman Page decides to do the same thing. Still, voters seem to like what is written in front of them, as Story's name will be during the general election (and so it was over the last month, on lawns, cars and radio stations). It is just too much trouble to write all seven letters that spell "Jon Hite." No, they will probably just check what is fed to them on the ballot.

Who knows? Maybe there will be some sort of action in the future in the area of a "none of the above" campaign. Hopefully the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign will take such action against Story, who was most resistant to their proposed campaign funding limits.

She may not have handled the Pro-Democracy Campaign brilliantly, but it seems to have worked in her favor — she outspent the rest and won some power and prestige. Congratulations, Ms. Story, but please, I implore you, remember one important word — CONSTITUENT.

Bliss rock from Britain far better than Valium

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

"Just For A Day" from the British band Slowdive is not music you listen to, it's something that just happens to your ears.

This music is like the Inspiral Carpets on a serious dose of Valium, like the Cocteau Twins in a steam room. They should have called themselves Slow Mo, because this is the perfect music to accompany the world in slow motion.

The band is from Reading, England and started up about two years ago when schoolmates Rachel Goswell and Neil Halstead pulled some friends together: guitar player Christian Savill, bassist Nick Chaplin, and drummer Simon Scott. Their demo landed on the desk of an influential type at SBK Records, he dug it, and the rest is history.

Halstead writes the music and lyrics, plays guitar, and sings vocals whenever Goswell, who also plays guitar, doesn't. The lyrics are fairly undiscernable and sort of drift faintly through the music. The drummer doesn't sound like he has a lot of work to do either, as the beat of all the songs is a sort of relaxed, obligatory "thump" every once in awhile.

That fact, however, is forgivable because this music has not been created to get your toes tapping. It is part of a new sound presently coming out of England called "wooze," which Details magazine calls "undanceable trance rock made by introspective middle-class London groups." Other new bands in this wave include Ride, Curve, Lush, Blur — well, you get the idea. The goal is not to get your blood pressure up too much, and this they accomplish.

The first thing that hits you when you first listen to "Just For A Day" is . . . nothing. It just sort of creeps up on you and then you notice these ethereal sounds coming out of your speakers and you start breathing a little slower . . . Dreamy, wispy voices and what their press release calls "blissed-out guitars" pull you into a floating realm of sound.

Hazy, sleepy harmonies diffuse directly into your bloodstream, and you let them because it feels good. Relax. A meadow of soft grass grows under your feet, breezes caress your skin, clouds from the sky settle down around you and time slips quietly away.

Be warned — this is not really something you "listen" to every day. You're probably not going to pop it in to play that "one cool song" you feel like hearing at that moment. There is not much differentiation between songs — there is that three-second pause, of course, but it often sounds like the same song starts up again.

There are some bright moments on the album, such as "Ballad of Sister Sue" and "The Sadman." You can almost hear the lyrics in these, and they are a little bit different in tempo from the rest of the songs. "The Sadman" sounds a little bit like The Cure's "The Same Deep Water As You" from their "Disintegration" album, without the excessive drums. I lost myself momentarily to this expectation, forgetting the very nature of the band and the music. Make no mistake: nothing beats or pulsates here.

DOONESBURY By GARRY TRUDEAU

GENTLEMEN, WHAT SORT OF MESSAGE DO YOU THINK THE VOTERS SENT ALL OF YOU LAST TUESDAY? GOVERNOR BROWN?
WELL, I THINK THE VOTERS WERE TELLING US THAT THEY LIKE A CANDIDACY THAT BELONGS TO THE PEOPLE, AND NOT THE ENTRENCHED ELITE...
PEOPLE WERE SAYING THAT THEY LIKE MY "800" NUMBER, EVEN IF MY OPPONENTS DO NOT, AND THAT THEY LIKE BEING ABLE TO CALL 1-800-426-1112 TO MAKE A PLEDGE!
THANK YOU, SIR SENATOR KERREY, DO... WHY DO THEY CALL 1-800-426-1112? BECAUSE THEY CARE!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A money riddle will soon be solved. Postpone travel. Family affairs promise to consume the afternoon. Evening is the best time for a romantic interlude.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good money signs exist today. A shopping expedition is likely to turn up real bargains. Something you receive in the mail gives you new hope for the future. Go slow when making new investments.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your fertile mind will give birth to an ingenious idea today. The employment ads offer ample leads. Be sure to say all the right things to an interviewer. Turn on the charm!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Haste makes waste today. Be certain your plans have substance. Check the details of recent financial transactions. Higher-ups may ask you to account for any irregularities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Brilliant ideas abound now! Guard against letting mounting pressures dictate your actions. A bright future hinges on your making informed choices. You find an ally when you need one most.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pushing too hard or last could undermine all your recent hard work. Wise up and reduce your speed. A gala evening could await you. Introduce yourself to someone you would like to know.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New financial resources become available to you today. The key to forging a business alliance is to show how all parties can be winners. Watch your step if asked to mediate a family squabble.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A travel invitation may signal that good things lie ahead. Take a calculated risk in business. Visualize yourself in a position of power. Look to the future, not the past.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be careful not to get your signals crossed in domestic affairs. Your daily duties should not confine you at home. Plunge into group activities at least one night a week.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Evaluate a recent trend and decide whether to adopt the techniques that your competitors are using. Teamwork will improve the bottom line. Set the stage for romance tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis is now on doing your own research. Do not place too much trust in something you hear today. Messages have a way of getting twisted through repetition.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Contradictory forces pull you in opposite directions. Work on simple jobs. In domestic matters, try not to sound emotional. A quiet tete-a-tete will accomplish more than angry criticism.

Booker

His goal of competing on the National Team was becoming less and less realistic, and after a sophomore year when his problems continued to grow, he decided it would be to his advantage to take some time off from school.

School was secondary to Booker at the time. He wanted to make the National Team and felt that he needed to direct his concentration on his obtaining his goal. So he left UMass and went to Northampton, N.H. where he lived and trained with Barry Weiner of the National Academy of Artistic Gymnastics.

"My year in New Hampshire was great," said Booker. "I felt that I was gaining experience and learning a lot . . . I really grew up."

Although gymnastics was important to him, there had to be more. "Things were still going okay, but not great. And basically the message I was getting from all directions was to go back to school."

Booker and Johnson had stayed in touch during the year, and Johnson was eager to have Booker back. At this point, a new assistant coach had been hired. Jun Chen, a former member and coach of the National Gymnastics Team for the People's Republic of China, was the final factor in Booker's decision to return to UMass.

Booker realized that Chen had the knowledge, experience, and expertise needed to facilitate Booker's hope of a spot on the National Team.

So with the help of Johnson and Ed Suglia, the academic coordinator for athletics at UMass, Booker returned to school.

"I don't know what I would do without him," said Booker of Segulia. "He has been a great help."

Through Suglia, Booker has become involved in a tutoring program in Amherst where he spends three hours a day helping troubled children.

"When I came to school three years ago I came for the wrong reasons," Cal said. "I didn't know why I was here, or what I wanted to do when I got out, so I decided to go out and try to find it."

Women's hoop falls to Temple, 69-55

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

It was a game of personal turnarounds and team lulls last night at the Curry Hicks Cage as the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team fell to the Temple Owls, 69-55.

For starters, let's start with the starters.

Temple's leading scorer and rebounder, junior forward Margarete Rougier, tallied only two first half points, but ended the contest with 11 points and nine rebounds.

Sonya Perry, the Owls' 6-foot center, came into the game averaging 10 points per game, but had zero at the half. She finished with a game-high 20 points.

UMass' Kim Kristofik, who scored 13 of the Minutewomen's 22 first half points (including 7 of 11 from the free throw line), was shut out in the second half, missing all six of her field goal attempts while not attempting a free throw.

Jen Moran, UMass' best pure shooter, scored only five first half points, but ended with a team-high 19, including 4 of 8 from 3-point territory.

Temple reserve Roxy Hildebrand, a 6-foot-1 center who entered the game averaging just under eight points per game, had eight during the first seven minutes of the game, only to finish with 10.

Perhaps the biggest indicator of how things were going for the Minutewomen were two scoring droughts. The first saw UMass not hit a field goal for the last 10:53 of the first half, and the second was an almost six-minute span late in the second half that saw Temple dig a hole the Minutewomen could not escape.

"I'm not sure if it was as much of what Temple was doing," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien, "or as much as what we were doing. If I remember correctly, we had quite a few open shots. And if you can't hit the open shots, then someone playing defense makes it even tougher."

The first half, which ended in a 22-20 Temple advantage, was frustrating for both teams, as UMass hit only 6 of 24 shots from the floor, and Temple hit only 10 of 32. Both squads were playing tough defense, with UMass switching between man-to-man and matchup zone defenses.

"For most of the first half we ran our offense pretty well," O'Brien said, "and got quite a few open shots. But, we just didn't take advantage of it. I think we did a good job mixing [the defenses] up in in the first half because they were a bit confused, running zone when we were in man, and running man-to-man when we were in zone."

In the second half Temple's shots began to fall and the Minutewomen struggled to stay in the game. With 9:33 left, UMass' Laurie Dondarski hit a jumper to cut the Temple lead to only four, but the Owls quickly opened up a 10-point lead. A Moran 3-pointer at the 7:19 mark cut the lead to five, but Temple's Chantel Adkins came back with one of her own and UMass could get no closer than five the rest of the way.

Booker: vaulting to new heights

Gymnast clears many obstacles on way to success

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian Staff

During his first year of high school Cal Booker tried to play both freshman basketball and football. It took him no time at all to realize that as all of his classmates were growing bigger and stronger, he was not. He was not a big kid, and never would be.

He was 15 years old, had tremendous athletic ability, but size simply was not on his side. His sister was taking gymnastics at the time, a sport he had always enjoyed watching, so he decided, with a push from his mom, to give it a try.

Most gymnasts start competing by age seven, at age 15 Cal was taking his first lesson.

Booker, now 22 and a junior on the University of Massachusetts squad, has competed for only seven years, and is aiming for a spot on the United States National Team, and amazingly, it is a realistic goal.

University of Massachusetts gymnast Cal Booker will be performing tonight at 7 p.m. at West Point Military Academy. Booker has his hopes set on a spot on the U.S. National Team.

On January 18 of this year, Booker set the UMass all-around record against Springfield College with a score of 55.20. The previous record of 55.10 was held by teammate Steve Christensen.

Setting the record was a special accomplishment for Booker whose gymnastics career has been far from typical. At age 15, Cal began competing in United States Gymnastics Federation Class III meets.

"It was very frustrating to me," said Booker. "I was the oldest person competing, and I wasn't that good."

At the time he was living with his mother and his sister in Harrisburg, Pa. and was training at the Gymnics gymnasium. He had only been training for six months before his first meet.

When his family decided to move back to Dorchester, Mass., where he was born, Booker met Tom Fontecchio, the regional director of the USGF. "He turned my career around," Booker admits of Fontecchio.

Fontecchio was the head coach of the Milton High School gymnastics team as well as a team training out of a private gym, the Somersault Center. A student at Hyde Park High School, Booker competed as an alternate under Fontecchio on the Milton team while spending his evenings training at the Somersault Center.

By his senior year, Cal developed into one of the top gymnasts in the state.

"I went into my senior year with a different attitude then ever before," Cal said. "I had confidence and knew I was going to do well. I didn't think I was going to win individual events, but I intended to win the all-around."

At the Massachusetts State Championship in the spring of his senior year, Booker impressed his coach and himself, as well as the judges. He took first place on all but one event, the vault, where he finished second. Obviously, he had accomplished much more then he had set out to do.

Up to this point, Cal had been focused on the State Championship, gymnastics was his life, and he had not given any thought to what he would be doing after graduation.

"I had no clue what I was going to do," said Booker, who through the last minute help of Fontecchio contacted Roy Johnson, the head coach of the UMass gymnastics team. "I certainly did not think I was going to college."

According to Booker, Johnson was very helpful to him, and with the guidance of Fontecchio and the persuasion of his mom, he made a last minute decision, in August, to attend UMass.

Since coming to UMass four years ago Booker has faced more than his share of difficulties. Although he had a succesful first year as far as gymnastics went, problems at home compounded the struggle he was already having in the classroom.

UMass hoops hope to guard against upset

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team hosts St. Bonaventure University tomorrow night (7 p.m., Curry Hicks Cage), it will be a matchup of two teams headed in opposite directions, with one having everything to lose, the other looking to take it away.

The Minutemen (21-4, 9-3 in the Atlantic 10), winners of five-straight, are deadlocked atop the conference, making plans for the NCAA tournament and are on the verge of cracking the Top 25.

On the other hand, the Bonnies (7-15, 1-10) have lost 14 of their last 17, six-straight and have been searching for respect from the bottom of the conference the entire season.

But, what most Minuteman fans see as a sure win has UMass coach John Calipari more concerned than ever. In their last two outings, the Bonnies lost to conference co-leader West Virginia by only eight and led at the half at Temple Wednesday night, but fell in the end, 69-60.

"They can beat you," Calipari said. "They really come to play and that scares me. We are one game from humiliation."

St. Bonaventure forward Harry Moore is the Bonnies top weapon. The 6-foot-8 sophomore forward leads the team in both points (15.0 per game) and rebounds (6.1 pg). Against Temple, Moore had 23 points on 8-for-14 shooting.

The Minutemen beat the young Bonnies, who have six freshmen and five sophomores, earlier in the season, 76-58. Jim McCoy, UMass' top scorer (15.8 ppg), had a game-high 21 points. Moore led the Bonnies with 17.

The Minutemen hope to avoid a letdown against the sub-par Bonnies as it will be "senior night" at the Cage. All four UMass seniors; Anton Brown, Francois Firmin, Will Herndon and McCoy will be in the starting lineup.

When asked how to guard against an upset, McCoy said, "We're not worried about it. As long as we play up to our capabilities we're going to win."

The Minutemen, winners of 10 of their last 11, have never been in first place in the A-10 this late in the season and a win will give them 22 regular season wins for the first time since 1970-71.

The game can be heard live on WMUA 91.1 FM and WHMP 99.3 FM and 1400 AM.

Brown, Tsongas battle for Maine delegates

By PETER JACKSON
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Maine — Paul Tsongas battled a strong challenge from Jerry Brown in Maine's caucuses yesterday as he bid to preserve his fragile momentum in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

An uncommitted slate also was running strongly, with nearly half the precincts tallied. Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton was in fourth place.

Tsongas won the New Hampshire primary last Tuesday, an up-from-nowhere victory that automatically installed him as the favorite in next-door Maine.

Brown staged a relentless five-day campaign in the state in a bid to rebound from his last-place show in New Hampshire. He stressed his opposition to the moneyed political interests he says corrupt both parties, an appeal that obviously touched a chord in a state hard-hit by recession.

Democratic Party activists gathered in hundreds of living rooms, schools, town halls and fire houses to begin the two-step process of choosing 23 delegates to the national convention.

Republicans have until April 1 to hold their caucuses, although several precincts were doing so today. Patrick Buchanan was making little effort to contest President Bush in the state.

Tsongas and Brown made last-minute campaign stops in the state during the day. Clinton mounted a strong organizational effort. Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin and Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey, battling for survival in Tuesday's South Dakota primary, had less intensive campaigns.

With 75 percent of the state's 665 precincts reporting, these were the returns:

Brown: 30 percent, or 692 state convention delegates

Tsongas: 29 percent, or 688

Uncommitted: 16 percent or 383

Clinton: 15 percent, or 353

Harkin: 5 percent, or 119

Kerrey: 3 percent, or 66

Maine voted as the campaign moved on relentlessly. All five of the Democratic contenders were headed for South Dakota yesterday for an evening debate before Tuesday's primary. That balloting shapes up as a struggle for survival for Kerrey and Harkin. Tsongas and Clinton also are running strong campaigns, including television advertising.

Elsewhere, there was fresh evidence of the momentum that Tsongas received from his victory in New Hampshire's lead-off primary last Tuesday.

In Colorado, which holds its primary on March 3, a Denver Post poll showed Tsongas running ahead of the pack with Clinton a close second. A similar survey taken late last month showed Tsongas at the bottom of the heap.

Three other states hold primaries on March 3, including Maryland, Georgia and Utah. Three others, plus American Samoa, have caucuses scheduled, with a total of 383 delegates up for grabs.

Even as the caucuses were convening, Tsongas' camp sought to minimize his chances for victory. A month ago, Tsongas barely registered in the preference polls around the country. But after his victory in new Hampshire, anything less than an outright triumph in Maine was sure to be seen by his rivals as a setback for the former Massachusetts senator.

Clinton, the man with the strongest organizational and financial resources in the race, has questioned Tsongas' appeal outside New England. His strategy is to rebound when the primaries move South next month.

Tsongas stressed his pro-business economics policy in the recession-wracked Maine. He opposes a middle-class tax cut

Physical plant needs $400 million

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Physical Plant needs $400 million to return the decaying campus back to like-new operating condition, said the director of the Physical Plant on Friday.

"Eventually [the repairs] will have to get done if the state wants to protect its investment [in UMass]," said Director Peter Wozniak. Without the money when the neglected buildings start to deteriorate they will be demolished or condemned.

With a steady flow of $10-$15 million per year to the physical plant budget from the state it would take about 15 years to finish the repairs on campus, said Wozniak.

"When I asked the state for $10-$15 million for the physical plant budget this year I received only $48,000," he said.

The physical plant budget has suffered $3.5 million worth of cuts during the past

Tsongas' record on environment encounters mediocre reactions

By JOHN SOLOMON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Meet Paul Tsongas, the businessman who earned hundreds of thousands of dollars as a lobbisty, lawyer and corporate director before his bid for the White House:

— With a half of a million dollars of his own, he co-founded a company that proposed a floating garbage incinerator in Boston Bay.

— He lobbied Congress for a U.S.-Canadian natural gas pipeline that drew criticism from regulators, property owners and environmentalists.

— He sat on the corporate board of a utility forced to shut down a problematic nuclear power plant.

— Tsongas also lobbied for an industrial abrasive manufacturer that was fined $9,000 for air pollution violations, and represented the Aetna insurance giant, which does not favor national health care.

But in some instances, Tsongas has worked to improve the environmental policies of the companies he directs and has drawn praise from environmental groups such as the Sierra Club.

To others, however, Tsongas the businessman seems hard to reconcile with Tsongas the politician.

"I'm a great fan of his, but he's a corporate lawyer and lobbyist," Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey said.

"I'm not trying to betray myself. I'm trying to change the Democratic Party," Tsongas told reporters last week.

The Associated Press reviewed lobbying reports and personal financial disclosures forms filed with the government; they reveal that Tsongas built a lucrative career since cancer compelled him to leave the Senate.

Working for the Boston firm of Foley, Hoag & Eliot, Tsongas earned about $350,000 a year, including as much as $360 per hour in compensation as a corporate lobbyist. He boasts net assets worth between $1.47 million and $3 million.

Between 1988 and early last year, he earned nearly $200,000 for his law firm by lobbying for nine interests, including Iroquios Gas Transmission Systems, The Sierra Club, The Humane Society of the U.S. and American Insurance Association.

Peggy Connolly, a spokeswoman for the Tsongas campaign, said the candidate's experience enhanced many of his long-held beliefs on the environment and the economy.

Connolly said Tsongas has likened his experience in the last several years to attending graduate school. "What he learned is that they (businessmen) are not sitting around thinking how are we going to destroy the environment," she said.

Besides his legal and lobbying work, Tsongas is chairman of Flexible Environmental Systems, Inc., the experimental waste management company he co-founded in 1989, and sits on several corporate boards. including those of Wang Labs, Shawmut National Bank, Thermo Instruments and Boston Edison.

Resident goes undercover at local taverns

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

An Amherst resident has been going undercover into downtown drinking establishments, clad in dark clothing with tape recorder in hand, to document violations of capacity and safety laws.

Margot Parrot, 43, presented the Amherst Select Board with an eight-page typed report documenting three evenings she spent watching and entering downtown establishments.

The report, which both complements and criticizes local businesses such as Twisters and Antonio's Pizza, has brought angry reactions from downtown business owners.

"She's twisted the facts," Chick Delano, owner of Delano's Restaurant and Bar, said of her report. "I would think she would be better severed if she let the police and fire department do their job."

Saying his establishment is regularly checked by town officials, Delano said both the report and its originator seemed "bizarre" and "strange".

One part of Parrot's report contained observances made by her of "exuberant young people" in and around Twisters Tavern late on a Friday evening.

"Almost immediately a young man entered the other side of Sweetzer Park," she said in her report. "probably didn't see me in my black clothes, and he urinated in into the bushes."

Parrot defends her report saying she hasn't been undercover, but has only made observances and documented those observances.

in favor of tax incentives to create jobs.

Brown, who finished last in New Hampshire, modeled his five-day Maine stump on a campaign that netted Jesse Jackson second place in that state four years ago.

Brown appealed to disaffected voters, and criticized Tsongas' backing for nuclear power in a state with a strong environmental bent.

"The support has been building, building, building, and building," said Ken Dean, the Maine campaign manager for Brown. "I know that we gave this everything that we had."

Clinton, runner-up in New Hampshire, paid a last-minute visit on Saturday in hopes of maximizing his support. He was credited with strong organization throughout the state.

State Party leaders were predicting about 15,000 Democrats to attend the caucuses.

The caucuses represent the first step in a two-tier process of selecting delegates to the national convention. Caucus participants were choosing up to 3,566 delegates to the Democratic State Convention in May, based on presidential preference.

Essex: Black gay men need to break media stereotypes

By WENDY JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Nationally renowned poet, lecturer and author Essex Hemphill said the Black gay man needs a voice of his own in the gay, lesbian and bisexual community.

Speaking at the first lesbian, gay, bisexual studies brown bag lunch series, Hemphill said the Black gay man needs to be accurately represented in gay literature and the media because even within the gay community they are viewed as "sexual objects."

He cited Robert Mapplethorpe's work as an example of the gay community's stereotyping of the Black male.

He said Mapplethorpe's photographs represented the "objectification of the Black gay male" through a focus on sections of the men's bodies compared to the whole body.

Hemphill said he is opposed to the late artist's work, he does not believe in censorship. "The image shouldn't be silenced — but there should be a space in which to argue against it."

Within gay literature and gay culture, Hemphill said gay Blacks are either not represented or portrayed as drug addict ghetto-dwellers and "snow queens" — drag queens who aspire to "look White" and be with White men.

Hemphill said he is particularly angered by Iceberg Slimm's story Black Mama Widow.

"Sally," a Black gay drag queen in Slimm's book, is seen as a cross-dressing "bitch" who is put through rape and drug addiction.

"It is horrific that a book which portrays such stereotypical identities can still be bought today," Hemphill said.

Hemphill said the false image is due partly because many Blacks cannot get their work published in gay publications.

Hemphill recounted how his one of his articles was rejected in the 1980s because the publication's "readership would not be interested in the plight of Black gay men" but was interested in something with a sexual theme or "something about ghettos.

"There is more to gay life and culture than sex," he said.

Hemphill said there has been a change in gay literature and media, with such works as Adrian Stanford's Black and Queer (1977) and the film Paris Is Burning, about Black gay culture in Harlem. It was filmed in the mid 1980s but not released until last year.

The film shows a slice of Black gay culture, particularly the emergence of the expression and dance style known as "vogueing" — something Black gay men were doing long before Madonna gave it "household name" status, he said.

"How does one go from having power within a micro-community of gays to finding power and confidence within the larger society?" he questioned.

four years, leaving the current budget at $33 million per year, said Kay Scanlan, a University spokesperson.

"The physical plant gets cut first because the administration would rather have the buildings dirty and falling down than cut faculty or academic programs," said Scanlan.

The cut has meant buildings like Marshall Hall to slowly deteriorate and become a safety hazard, he said.

Marshall Hall will be the first building to be condemned on campus unless the budget can come up with $4-$6 million to make the repairs, he said.

"When a building is in this bad of condition it becomes a question of which is more cost effective, to build a new building or repair the old building," Wozniak said.

Inside Marshall Hall there was paint peeling off the walls due to water damage from the leaking roof. The wooden floors have all buckled up forming bumps as high as a foot in some places.

"A person who worked in the building sent the physical plant mushrooms that had started growing on the inside walls of the building," said Wozniak.

Other buildings that are deteriorating are Clark Hall, Fernald Hall and Wilder Hall, said Wozniak. "If these buildings don't get repaired they will soon become a safety hazard and will be condemned," he said.

Wozniak doesn't know where the money will come from to maintain the Mullins Arena and the Sylvio O. Conte Polymer Research Center, which are being built.

"I am waiting to see where Chancellor [Richard] O'Brien is going to take the money from," said Scanlan.

The physical plant has lost 131 employees over two-and-a-half years, said Wozniak. "The 639 employees that are left can barely maintain the 200 buildings on campus let alone the addition of two more," said Wozniak.

Due to loss of manpower the physical plant has formed what are called 'tiger teams' that aim to save time and use limited resources in a more efficient way, said Scanlan.

"As a result of the cuts, the physical plant has learned to be more efficient and to do things more creatively," said Wozniak.

"I haven't been spying," Parrot said, "I've been going into places just like anyone else and recording what I see."

Parrot also added she feels town inspectors have ignored the problems of noisy and overcrowded establishments.

"I got involved because people in local government weren't listening, and elderly people and families have had valid complaints," she said.

Parrot said the clash of lifestyles is also a problem, and points a partial finger at the UMass administration and the drinking policy which affects the students.

Harry Brooks, an Amherst Select Board member, also feels the University has created a dangerous situation by limiting the number of places where students can drink on campus.

"The drinking policies have chased students off campus and pushed [students] downtown," Brooks said, "so it's partially the University's fault."

Brooks, who said Parrot and he personally observed more than the legal amount of patrons inside Twisters on evenings, said his concerns are not just with nearby residents but also with patron safety.

"I want to see students safe and if there had been an emergency in [Twisters] the other night then there could have been deaths," Brooks said.

Parrot, who has been involved with community issues in the past, says she has been aggressively targeted by local government because she has not been afraid to address controversial issues which she feels the local government has ignored.

Chester Penza, the Amherst building commissioner, said he issued verbal warnings to some establishments last Thursday but felt he would need further instructions from town officials if problems do persist.

All sides of the issue are expected to be addressed this evening at the Select Board meeting scheduled to begin at 6:15 p.m. in the Bangs Community Center located in downtown Amherst.

Dept. heads to Trustees: ratify GEO pact

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization is making it known that they will not simply be waiting patiently for their contract, the result of a year of struggle, to be ratified by the Board of Trustees. During this current approval stall, GEO has gained some important allies.

"The contract was negotiated in good faith between the administration and GEO, and that needs to be recognized by the trustees," said Robert Jones, chairperson for the history department.

Jones and 32 other department heads at the University have made an appeal to the trustees through a letter, urging them to ratify "as soon as possible."

The letter, also signed by four University deans, was instigated on the basis that the contract ratification affects many more people on campus than just GEO members, said Jones.

"All of our jobs will become very difficult if this is not resolved," he said.

The letter stated that "failure to ratify at this point the results of good faith bargaining . . . would be severely detrimental to the entire campus community and to our ability to function as an institution."

The trustees will meet this Friday in Worcester, but an appeal has been made to Chairperson Gordon Oakes to hold the meeting on the Amherst campus to make it more accessible to GEO members. GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs stated previously that if the trustees fail to ratify the contract at this meeting, GEO will "perceive that as rejection and act accordingly."

GEO will be holding a campus-wide labor rally on the Student Union steps at 12:00 noon on Wednesday. Isaacs said she hopes the rally will answer people's questions and stress the effect the trustees' stalling has on the campus community.

"This issue doesn't speak just to GEO problems, but how negotiating will be resolved for all unions on campus," she said.

All campus labor unions have been invited to participate in the rally. Several non-GEO affiliated speakers will be present, including Student Trustee Kevin Newnan and Chairperson of the Department of Linguistics Barbara Partee, who was involved in the drafting of the letter sent to the trustees.

Love will save everyone

Love can save you, yes it can. I'm here to let you all know because it sure saved me. Last week, I found myself losin' grip, staggerin' around Bartlett hall swiggin' Orangina from an open container. Now I know some fools will contend that Orangina is a natural, healthy beverage of sorts but do you think it's safe to consume any product with the word "angina" in the brand name?

Tony Westcott

Suddenly, the next thing I knew, the unbridled power of the aforementioned liquid kicked in and I was writhin' on the floor, droolingly famished. It was then my eyes recepted a dainty discarded crumpled foil ball that once housed a sphere of chocolate lookin' mighty tasty amidst tumbleweeds of dust.

My nerves were cables of chaos, anxiously awaitin' the ensuin' metallic interception. I plunked the tiny foil ball in the cellar of my mouth and swished the tiny foil ball around with my tongue. I began gently easin' the top row of my teeth down upon the lower row, then with a veritable explosion of courage, my teeth slammed together and ZING! The foil ball ejaculated a painful shiver reelin' down my spina! cord. Memories of my childhood dentist, Dr. Girard, hoverin' above me, singin' along to the muzak in the office, "Fillings' Nothing but fillings. . ."

Suddenly, ZAP! I received another shock. My reflex after initial contact was to repeat the procedure and I was graciously treated to the unexpected flurry of two in a row. I never knew Orangina was such an exemplary conductor.

Perhaps my nerves were tryin' to communicate to my conscious that they craved this stimulation, like it's a spring cleanin' for my nervous system as a whole. Then again, they could have been sufferin' from this rather painful and totally unnecessary torture and were vergin' on suicidal panic.

Suddenly, I overheard a group of males speakin' in the corridor. One had grown quite agitated and began to shout, "That is not true! Frog's legs don't taste like no frickin' chicken. I've had snake and that don't taste like chicken either. Beaver don't taste like chicken, squirrel don't taste like chicken, rabbit don't. . ."

Under the influence of the Orangina, I mustard up all the voice I could and callously yelped, "Yo, buddy, you wanna know what tastes like chicken? Your mother tastes like chicken!" It was then that everythin' went black and the dream commenced.

Her name translated from Greek as "joy" and a more apt moniker could not exist. I arrived on her doorstep with a rose between my teeth, and I couldn't have looked better if I'd come in walkin' on the water. I protruded forth, ducked under an imaginary archway and. . .

Suddenly, she grabbed me by the arms with both her shoulders, lifted me up and pressed her lips to mine. Suddenly, I became woozy as I felt myself care-freely set down gently upon my back and we began French Canadian kissin'. I could taste the blood from the freshly sliced slits in our lips that the thorns in the rose ripped open. Swoon enough, I opened my eyes to see blood spattered all over her grinnin' face. At that moment, a runnin' rivulet of red, white, and blue blood cells dribbled into my eyes and I was forced to close them again and submit to unconsciousness.

And as you may know, a dream within a dream is reality. I spat out that damn foil ball and made room for her in my heart. Love exists! You've just got to respect your woman or man and give them all the love you can manage. I had descended as low as I could and returned with a woman I didn't deserve but later earned through mutual respect, compassion, and warmth of soul.

So come on, Umass, get out of the bathroom already, away from the shavin' razors and tweezers and rubbin' alcohol and that damn water pik. Spend no more lonely hours rollin' a pizza slicer up and down your Adam's Apple. Love is all around, come on and let it show. The damn dawn is upon us already.

Anonymous or cowardly?

There's something cheesy about anonymous letters.

The one thing I don't understand in this place, the only thing I can't comprehend — is why people don't have the guts — or any other piece of anatomy — to sign a Letter to the Editor. It seems assinine.

Gayle Long

Okay, I've been writing for this wonderful publication for . . . let's see — seven semesters. In that time, anonymous letters have been run about rape, abortion, harassment, bigotry and many other wonderful and touchy subjects.

These are the kind of letters what make a person want to pick up the newspaper and say, "wow, how brave!"

I don't agree. Scribbling off one's innermost thought and sending them off to a newspaper without a name or a number — does NOT mean the person has a strong demeanor.

I've seriously been giving it a great deal of thought. Why write a letter to a newspaper, with no intention of taking credit for it?

I came up with a few possible answers to this phenomenon — which sort of also answers the questions about why people call up the Collegian and say they don't like Jim's Journal, the fact that Scorpio was cut out of the horoscope, or the newspaper in general.

(I've got a news flash for you. If you hate this newspaper, why in the world are you reading this as I write? If you hate Jim, the horoscope, or the crossword, why bother looking at them? It seems like a major waste of time.)

Okay, back to the 'wimp list,' as I choose to call it. There must be a good reason to be submitting letters with no name on them.

One. Freedom of Speech — this seems like a good one, right? Why not — it's a constitutional right. But why not put your John Hancock on it? HE wasn't afraid of the repercussions — why should you if you care at all about what your subject is.

Sure, you believe in animal rights, but instead of your name, a paw print appears. Have some convictions, take a stand, and quite simply, get a life.

Nothing is quite as bad as not being able to say what you feel. That's the stuff oppression is made of.

Two. Inferiority complex about writing, opinions or being different from your friends — one of the main problems with society today is people are so concerned about their friends and less concerned about what the real problems are they can't be smart enough to try and have an opinion.

Think your friend with the $100 sweater and a gold ring on each finger has a clue — or cares — about what you think? If your 'friends' would forget you for having your own opinions — take it from me — they're not your friends. They're oblivious.

Are you truly afraid of your writing? Then don't write your thoughts on a napkin from the Bluewall or toilet paper from the dorm. Put some time into it. If you care enough, are angry enough or have enough compassion, what you have to say will show through. Don't despair.

If you do start something and think it sucks, read any newspaper's Editorial page and be positive. See how others get their point across. Just don't give up.

Three. Just scared — my only question — WHY? This is a college newspaper, not the Congressional Record, and the rest of your life is not determined by what you said, what you did or how many times you were in the police log.

The Collegian is not to be used as an anonymous fight between two parties unknown to the editors of this paper and the campus at large.

So, get with it. Your name is a blessing, not something to hide. Use it, make a name for yourself and be proud of your work.

And I only say this because most people think anonymous letters are written by liars.

Dismay over recent vandalism

Our campus has a commitment to create an environment in which the freedom and dignity of every human being is respected. Each person is encouraged to have full participation in all aspects of campus life. Programs, activities and services on our campus support our commitment.

Last week, there was an incident of vandalism against the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual concerns. We are dismayed and deeply concerned that a member of our community would vandalize the building.

It is incumbent upon all members of the university community to promote respect and dignity as two of the core values that we affirm. Violence and harassment of any kind are not acceptable here and we will seek to punish the person identified as performing violent or harassing acts, including retaliation, or those found to incite others to such acts.

If any person has information regarding the vandalism, we encourage you to come forward and talk with the staff at the Dean of Students Office.

Italian-American cultural event destroyed by paranoid peer's actions

Friday evening, I held a Cultural Celebration in Honor of the Italian-American Heritage. I would like to vehemently thank all of you who participated and made it such an overwhelming success. I hope that you were all sufficiently entertained and edified.

My second point of order is thus: I would like to publicly apologize to the individual who was so urgently distressed by said festival that he/she felt that immediate police involvement was necessary. Had I known that I was generating such an abhorrent cacophony to cause someone to feel that the services of our admirable knights in blue were needed, I would have ceased the event immediately and would probably have hurled myself onto a bed of nails to atone for this grave transgression against a fellow student.

Luckily, when the police arrived and told me that they had received a disturbance of the peace complaint, they also quickly assured me that it seemed as though there didn't seem to be any reason for their being called to the alleged crime scene. Good Lord! Was I ever relieved to learn that they had only been called because the aforementioned Cultural event must have startled someone not familiar with my particular cultural traditions, including bizarre rituals such as: ballardare (to dance), ascoltare la musica (to listen to music) and divertirsi (to enjoy oneself). It was extremely ignorant of me to expect everyone to understand and appreciate la Dolce Vita (the Sweet Life) which I and my guests were enjoying.

Therefore I would like to extend an open invitation to anyone, at any time, to come to my room and inform me of the fact that my behavior is striking such fear into their hearts, that they feel that the police should be called. Please, I appreciate the fact that you may have assumed that someone's life was in danger and I thank you for your concern, but events were to the contrary. Therefore, please do not disturb the police in the future until you are a bit more certain, for there could have been someone, somewhere on this campus, in true danger, who might have been deprived of police assistance.

"Politically Correct" is not an elite organization complete with rulebook

Olivia Stewart-Liberty ("Will someone somewhere please politically correct me?", Feb. 20) just doesn't get it. She, along with countless other members of the media and the general populace, continues to rail against the dangers of the ever-growing menace of "political correctness". This "very elite group of people" has chosen the "title" of "politically correct" in order to enforce their "extremely exclusive doctrine."

What Ms. Stewart-Liberty does not understand is that the whole idea of a doctrine of political correctness, complete with rulebook and standing members, is a fantasy of those who disagree with certain ideas and theories. The term "politically correct" is used to lump people together in one vaguely negative category, thereby avoiding serious discussion on any of the issues involved

Take, for example, the situation described in the editorial. The author was riding a bus to Northampton and a seated man asked a standing woman if she would like to sit down. Although I was not at the scene, from the description of the event given in the article, the man was quite rude and the woman involved was attempting to squelch a potentially confrontational situation. To Ms. Stewart-Liberty, this woman's actions were full of "hypocrisy" and "cowardice", another victim of the ever-growing spectre of political correctness.

It's easy to lump every disagreeable situation together and label them all with one all-encompassing, meaningless term. The real world, however, does not conform to this type of manipulation. Until Ms. Stewart-Liberty, and others like her, realize that there is no such nemesis as "political correctness", intelligent and constructive debates on the issues buried underneath the rhetoric will be non-existant.

Rand presents comic culture documentary

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Watching Tales of the Lost Formicans is like getting the best of both worlds — twice.

In literal terms, the worlds we are presented with are those of the hapless human race and of the aliens who observe them. Much of the play takes the form of an off center documentary on our culture, narrated by detached, sunglass-wearing extra-terrestrials.

The subtler connection — and one which makes the broad premise so workable — comes from the way playwright Constance Congdon crafts her comedy. Shedding both the randomness of absurdism and the earthiness of drama, Congdon retains the finer aspects of both forms, to achieve a strange consciousness in which everything is impossible, yet makes perfect sense.

What is the play about? It's about the big picture. It's about aliens and humans, families and forgetfulness, anguish and euphoria, love and sex. It's about searching for order in a world gone mad, and eating Dilly Bars while the mall burns down.

Many of Congdon's ideas had their genesis at UMass, for it was here, during her graduate studies, that she first latched onto the idea of the shopping mall as a sort of cultural mecca. The wide use of the term "dead mall," to refer to Hadley's unpopular shopping center, intrigued her.

She became fascinated by the idea that a mall might be buried forgotten as a final remnant of some extinct society — that it might be unearthed by some future beings, and made to stand as our Parthenon or Pyramid. How would the archaeologists explain the significance of the mall aesthetics; indoor fountains, glass sculptures, and benches every five feet? What information about our society could they infer based simply on this information?

These questions gave rise to the more encompassing ones of Formicans, and led the play to worldwide success. In the five years since it's premiere, the play has won both the Arnold Weissberger Award and the Newsday/Oppenheimer Award for Best New Play. In 1989, it was chosen to represent the United States at the International Theatre Festival in Helsinki.

Now, with the upcoming UMass produciton, Constance Congdon has come full circle. After all, it was here that many of her first plays were produced, and it is fitting that the Theatre Department should return, a decade later, to a more mature writer.

Richard Trousdell is directing the Rand production of Formicans, 10 years after working with Congdon on the world premiere of her play The Bride.

When I spoke to him, he was eager to praise Congdon's abilities, noting that UMass "helped develop one of the best new playwrights in America."

Perhaps that is why the Theatre Department of the underfunded, underappriciated university has decided to break it's long run of chestnuts and dramas, and present an ultra-contemporary comedy. Times are tough, and like many characters in Formicans, we are lost in the sea of concerns. Why not cheer ourselves up a bit?

"Why not," as Trousdell says, "celebrate one of our own?"

Tales of the Lost Formicans will be performed at the Rand Theatre, Fine Arts Center, Feb. 27-29 and March 4-7. Tickets are available at the FAC Box office. There will be a special benefit performance for Alzheimers disease on Feb. 26. Admission to that performance is free, but patrons are encouraged to leave donations.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get down to brass tacks in business negotiations. Handle routine affairs carefully to avoid making costly mistakes. Your interest in mystical matters balances your shrewd, meticulous style.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stormy weather is possible at work. Keep a low profile in all employment affairs. Even minor errors could lead to major complications. Let sleeping dogs lie.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Innovative ideas abound. The trick is turning them to practical use! Seek new clues to a loved one's behavior. You may be overlooking something vital.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Refuse to let someone ruffle your feathers this morning. A measured response is essential even if your patience is running short. Afternoon is the best time for negotiating and signing contracts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The travelers among you will delight in finding interesting places to visit now. Listen to your inner voice if uncertain what to do about romance. A newcomer makes your heart skip a beat.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Continue to cultivate the ambition that has been growing within you. Now is the ideal time to intensify your studies. Seek family members' cooperation before revising a budget.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An excellent day for making new business connections and expanding your social horizons. Do not be shy about describing your talents or an exciting opportunity could pass you by.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your inventive streak helps your turn a job site into a smooth-running operation now. Be very careful if tempted to start an office romance; there is more at stake than you realize.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Clinging to fixed ways could create problems at work or home. Give yourself room to grow. A new business venture could be touch and go for a while. Skip the long-distance calls.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A day when pent-up energy could get the best of you. An exercise class or brisk walk will do you a world of good! The evening looks festive and romantic. Dress up.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your popularity is on the rise at work. Your good humor and common sense win accolades from associates of the opposite sex. Good vibrations are centered at home tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You bask in the spotlight at a business meeting or social event. The eyes of love are also upon you. Secret negotiations could lead to new career success. Use your shrewd insights.

Kim Kristofik and Jenny Moran were ice cold, shooting 5-for-16 in the first half and 10-for-31 for the game. It seemed at times that no one on the team could hit a basket. The Minutewomen shot 34 percent from the floor.

"We're not a good shooting team," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien. "We missed a few wide open shots."

Nevertheless, the Minutewomen were within 3, 29-26. Credit St. Joseph's assitant coach Frank Gaitley with keeping UMass within striking distance. Gaitley was assessed a crucial technical foul as the first half wound down.

As Jenny Moran hit a shot with 1:26 left in the first half, Laurie Dondarski was fouled. The officials ruled that since the events were simultaneous, the shot would count and Dondarski could shoot a 1-and-1 from the free throw line.

The St. Joseph's bench went crazy and were slapped with a technical foul. Dondarski hit both ends of the 1-and-1, and one of the technical foul shots. By then it was 27-25 in favor of St. Joseph's. A Maleeka Valentine free throw cut the lead to one before Audrey Codner (13 points) hit a basket at the buzzer for the 29-26 halftime score.

In the second half, it was all Codner and St. Joseph's. After the Hawk's Katie Curry hit a 3-pointer to open the second half, Codner hit 8 of the next 10 St. Joseph's points, the last of which gave the Hawks a 42-31 lead.

Cass Anderson and Anita Moore traded jumpers, and when St. Joseph's called a timeout, UMass looked like it was in the game. But the Hawks went on a 12-2 run punctuated by reserve guard Kerri Nemeth's two treys that sealed the game for St. Joseph's.

Player of the game

Will Herndon

University of Massachusetts forward Will Herndon gave the Minutemen all they would need in the first half as he scored 10 points, dished out four assists and grabbed three steals as UMass 6'3 Sr. Forward Pittsburgh, PA took a commanding 52-25 halftime advantage.
Herndon, who leads UMass in field goal percentage (.715), finished the game with 12 points, 5-for-5 from the field, 2-for-2 from the line.

Why UMass won

The Minutemen scored the first 9 points of the game and never looked back. Their press stymied the Bonnies, forcing 26 turnovers, 14 in the first half. The Minutemen in comparison turned the ball over only once in the first half and seven times total. While the Minutemen scored whenever they wanted, the Bonnies had trouble putting together a sequence of passes during any possession. UMass had five players score in double figures, the seventh time that has happened this season.

UMass' next opponent

The University of Massachusetts travels to Morgantown, W.V. for a game against the Mountaineers Thursday night. West Virginia beat the Minutemen 76-75 back in January when the Minutemen were ranked 25th in the nation. West Virginia provides matchup problems for the Minutemen. They are much like Temple in that they have size up front and speed in the backcourt. UMass will have to stop the Mountaineers' big men from scoring down low.

Minutemen whip Bonnies, cruise to 22nd win, 104-67

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Just before the tipoff of Saturday night's University of Massachusetts-St. Bonaventure basketball game, the capacity crowd at the Curry Hicks Cage began chanting, "It's all over."

They were right, as this was one of those games that to put it mildly was a mismatch.

UMass (22-4, 10-3 in the Atlantic 10) scored the first 9 points of the game and shot 54 percent from the floor, on its way to a 104-67 bulldozing of the Bonnies (7-17, 1-12).

With George Washington beating West Virginia yesterday 85-78, the win pushed UMass into first place in the A-10 and barring some unforeseen voting, should jump the Minutemen into the Top 25 when the Associated Press rankings come out tonight.

"[Being in the Top 25] doesn't worry me," said UMass guard Jim McCoy. "I think we're a mature team now. We weren't focused last time when we were in the Top 25. I think we were all concerned with the press and the glamour of being in the Top 25. This time I don't think we'll make any mistakes."

University of Massachusetts point guard Anton Brown leads the Minutemen down court in action last week at the Curry Hicks Cage. The Minutemen defeated St. Bonaventure Saturday night, 104-67.

"We all got carried away with being in the Top 25 last time," said UMass forward Tony Barbee, who scored a team-high 18 points. "It won't be new this time. We just have to go to the game and play, and not worry about where we are in the rankings."

It took a while, but the Bonnies, who turned the ball over 26 times to UMass' 7, finally scored with 16:27 remaining. They pulled within 6, at 11-5, but that was as close as they would get the rest of the night, as the Minutemen showed no mercy in winning their 22nd game of the year.

"They got the lead on us," said St. Bonaventure coach Tom Chapman. "It put us down and gave them confidence. They are a very confident team right now. They are hitting on all cylinders."

Leading 17-7, UMass went on a 10-2 run triggered by Mike Williams' layup and high arching shot in the paint. Williams finished with 5 points, 5 rebounds and 4 steals.

St. Bonaventure's Harry Moore (18 points on 7 of 20 shooting) got the Bonnies within 15, when he hit a leaner in the lane. But by this time, UMass had the game well in hand, even though there was 7:34 to play in the first half.

Kennard Robinson (a career-high 8 points) hit a jumper to up UMass' lead to 31-14. Then William Herndon (12 points, 5 assists) took a feed from Anton Brown (11 points) and ripped it through the cylinder, giving the Minutemen a 33-14 advantage.

A Tony Barbee trey made it 43-18 and by this time it felt like the end of a blowout, where both teams empty the benches and let the reserves play.

However, UMass coach John Calipari left most of his starters in for the first half. Just long enough to see McCoy rise above Nii Nelson-Richards for an in-your-face slam dunk.

"I usually leave the spectacular stuff for Will [Herndon]," McCoy said. "But every now and then, I have to get my pops in."

By halftime, everyone for UMass had played, and all that was left to see, was fan-favorite Francois Firmin hit a 3-pointer, as the Minutemen had a 52-25 lead at the break.

It was senior night for the Minutemen, as all four seniors were introduced separately before the game, and all four started including Firmin, who scored four points and dished out four assists.

"This is the first game since I've been the coach here, that I said, 'We have to win this game,'" Calipari said. "I wanted to put the pressure on them to get them ready. You are always one game away from being humiliated and this was one of them."

Reid accepts position with Richmond Spiders

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Former University of Massachusetts head football coach Jim Reid accepted an assistant head coaching position at the University of Richmond Friday under three-year head coach Jim Marshall.

Reid was offered a two-year deal, but signed a contract tied into Marshall's which expires in June 1993. Reid believes he will begin his duties in Virginia on Mar. 1.

Reid, who coached the Minutemen to three Yankee Conference Championships in his six years as head coach, officially resigned on Feb. 13 after verbally resigning Jan. 23 upon learning that he had to retract promises of scholarships to high school recruits.

"I feel good about going down there," said Reid, who is good friends with Marshall. "I feel sad about leaving [UMass], because I felt I was going to be here for the rest of my life. But, I also feel it's best to be able to go down there and turn a program around."

The Spiders, members of the Yankee Conference, were 2-9 overall last season.

Reid said he is looking forward to being an assistant.

"I'm glad to have the opportunity to just coach 'my guys,'" he said.

Reid, a native of Medford, Mass., said he is a little apprehensive about moving into a new area and doesn't anticipate moving his family yet as his wife and three children reside in Amherst.

Reid also said he is still frustrated about the happenings that led up to his resignation.

"A lot of people treat college sports as a business," Reid said. "That's fine and I understand that. But, that's not why I'm in it. I'm in it just because I love the competition and the young people.

"The things that motivate me are the players and to be a small part in their lives."

Women's basketball falls again

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The diehards who follow the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team probably thought they had seen Saturday's 73-47 loss to St. Joseph's before.

It featured poor shooting, turnovers, and UMass' ability to stay close within the first 20 minutes, followed by a second half of its opponent's touch passing and crisp execution en route to a blowout victory.

High Court refuses to halt repatriation

By JAMES ROWLEY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court refused Monday to halt the repatriation of Haitian refugees as Haiti's politicians reached an accord providing for the eventual return of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

The high court's 8-1 ruling upholding the Bush administration's program to forcibly return Haitian refugees shifts the debate to Congress, which this week will debate emergency legislation to temporarily halt repatriations.

The political settlement reached late Sunday in Washington between Aristide and his rivals in Haiti's National Assembly would set up a "consensus government" before the president's return to power.

The deal set no date for Aristide's return.

It called for the appointment of moderate communist leader Rene Theodore as interim prime minister.

It was unclear whether the accord would be honored by the Haitian military, which deposed Aristide in a Sept. 30 coup that brought down the first democratically elected government in the country's history.

"It's promising but very uncertain in that there are forces at play in Haiti that haven't come to terms in the agreement, including the army," Arthur C. Haelton, who monitors Haitian affairs for the Lawyer's Committee for Human Rights, said of the agreement. "It is not a crisis that has ended or likely will end for some time."

In Port-au-Prince, the communist party's second-ranking official, Max Bourjolly, said the army had accepted the agreement. Foreign Relations Minister Jean-Robert Simonise said there was strong opposition to Aristide's return and the consensus government "will not be easy to set up."

A knowledgeable diplomatic source said that the Haiti's top military commander, Gen. Raoul Cedras was satisfied with the package that contains a general amnesty and acceptance of all parliamentary actions since Aristide was forced into exile.

Aristide's acceptance of parliamentary actions was seen as allowing Cedras to remain, at least temporarily, as army commander, according to an Organization of American States source.

The amnesty provision did not apply to criminal acts and it was unclear whether Aristide agreed to give amnesty to officers who plotted his overthrow, said sources familiar with the deal.

At the Supreme Court, Justice Harry A. Blackmun was the lone dissenter from the decision to dismiss the Haitian refugee's legal challenge to the repatriation.

"If indeed the Haitians are to be returned to an uncertain future in their strife-torn homeland, that ruling should come from this court after full and careful consideration of the merits of their claims," he said.

Justice Clarence Thomas voted with the majority to reject the appeal but said in a concurring opinion that he was "deeply concerned" over allegations that repatriated Haitians suffered persecution for trying to escape.

Nader opens headquarters in Boston

By ELINOR MILLS
Associated Press

BOSTON — Delivering his trademark indictment of the current political system and calling for citizens to take back their government, Ralph Nader officially opened his Massachusetts campaign headquarters Monday.

"I think the root of the paralysis of policy" in the United States, he said, "is too much power and too much money in too few hands, greedily and wrongfully used."

Although the attorney and consumer advocate is not a presidential candidate because he missed the filing deadlines, his name appears first on Massachusetts' Democratic presidential primary ballot for March 10.

Nader said a vote for him would be a vote of no-confidence for the other candidates and an affirmative vote for an overhaul in the political system.

"I agree this is something new in presidential politics," he said.

He raised $30,000 from private donations and has more than 300 campaign volunteers representing all political parties, he said at a news conference in his donated two-room headquarters near Boston Garden. The campaign also may open offices in Springfield and Worcester in donated space.

Nader also said he expects to receive "tens of thousands of votes" in the Massachusetts Democratic presidential primary and would like to debate any of the other Democratic candidates while they are here in the state.

"We're going to take this campaign all over the state in the next three weeks," he said. "And we intend to make the candidates better."

Nader considers his campaign a movement that voters can join to change the present political sys-

Kennedy praises COINS Dept.

Senator urges financial support for comp. science

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy expressed support last week for the University of Massachusetts COINS department and its latest research activities in a letter to the National Science Foundation.

The senator was impressed with the department when visiting on February 14, according to Paul McOwen, deputy chair of Computer and Information Science Department. In a press release released by McOwen, Kennedy said, "obviously you are on the cutting edge of those futuristic technologies.

"This center here is obviously one of the very important assets not only for Massachusetts, but for the country," Kennedy added.

Kennedy backed his words in the letter sent four days later, urging financial support from the National Science Foundation, located in Washington D.C.

"The University of Massachusetts at Amherst boasts one of the country's finest research departments in computer science," wrote Kennedy.

"I wholeheartedly support the application of COINS at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and urge you to give their application every consideration," he added.

"Research umbrella"

The COINS department has been working with the Center for Research and Intelligent Complex Computing Systems on landmark research in computer vision, autonomous robots, advanced information retreival and intelligent tutoring systems, according to McOwen, who calls CRICCS the "research umbrella."

"We have been working on this for about three years in cooperation with the National Science Foundation," said McOwen. If the COINS department secures funding of $2.4 million from the foundation, they will have attained their goal of $7.2 million.

The other funding comes from state matching funds, also $2.4 million, and various medical-related industries including private hospitals, medical software companies and health maintenance organizations. McOwen said donations from the medical field have exceeded $2.4 million.

Also involved in the CRICCS project are Stanford University and Carnegie-Mellon, McOwen said.

Landmark Research

Research already under way is being conducted in two labs. The first lab is devoted to advanced process control, a computerized method to monitor manufacture of materials such as polymer blends. Technology being researched includes computerized vision, temperature sensors and specific gravity sensors, McOwen said.

The second lab research is conducted on advanced manufacturing automation, in which robots will be able to cooperate with each other. One potential product is a robot on an assembly line handing a tool to another, McOwen said.

The COINS department will know by this summer about the decision of the National Science Foundation, and begin work on its third lab — intelligent information retrieval.

Two other proposed labs are intelligent vehicle highway systems and intelligent tutoring systems.

"Innovative approach"

Kennedy noted the importance of research in the United States from sources outside business.

Heat lamps cause Plymouth blaze

PLYMOUTH (AP) — Heat lamps used to warm newborn calves sparked barn fires that killed 77 animals at Plimoth Plantation and five animals at a Dedham farm last week, officials said.

In the plantation fire, a lamp used to warm a pair of calves ignited straw and wood shavings used for their bedding, said Plymouth Fire Chief Thomas Fugazzi. The blaze Tuesday killed specially-bred cows, sheep, goats and pigs.

"We theorize that either the calves dislodged the lamp and it fell into the bedding or it was just too close to combustible material," Fugazzi said.

David Sears, owner of the Oasis Farm in Dedham, said a heating lamp placed in the barn by a farm employee should not have been used. The fire destroyed a barn and killed three horses, a pony and a calf on Thursday.

"He took it upon himself to use the device, and it wasn't installed properly," Sears told Monday's Patriot Ledger of Quincy. "I wouldn't have used it. I've talked to too many people who have lost barns that way."

The animals at Plimoth Plantation were rare breeds used to re-create life in a 17th century Pilgrim village.

Plantation officials have issued a plea for specially bred animals and farm equipment. They are also raising funds to restore a 10-year-old agricultural program destroyed by the fire.

'Wayne's World' examined by Yale professor

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — The chairman of Yale University's linguistics department is dying to see the movie "Wayne's World" - not!

Actually, linguistic Laurence Horn does plan to see the film, which is based on a "Saturday Night Live" send-up of teen-age heavy metal fans. But he's going strictly for academic purposes.

Horn is researching the origins of "not!" the popular catch phrase that figures prominently on TVs "Wayne's World." The word is tacked onto the end of a sentence like a surprise ending to convey the opposite of what was just said.

Horn has already discovered that "not" may be more than 20 years old.

"My specialty is negation," Horn explained. "I'm interested in the movie so I can transcribe parts of it."

As most teen-agers around the country already know, "Wayne's World" is a fictitious cable TV show featuring guitar-playing metal-head Wayne Campbell and his spacey pal, Garth Algar.

tem and to send a message to the other candidates.

"It's the history of modern politics in Washington," he said, "some [politicians] are Charlatans, some are crooked, some are weak and ineffectual, and some are honest. But all of them have one thing in common. None of them can deliver [on campaign promises] surrounded by power brokers and lobbyists for the Fortune 500."

He said his campaign appeals to citizens who don't vote and to those who are disillusioned or disappointed by candidates.

"The best way to send the Tweedle-Dee, Tweedle-Dum a message is to vote for the tools of Democracy which can strengthen our democracy at the base and make sure they deliver."

He has adopted a proposal called the Concord Principles which outlines his plans for a "new initiatory Democracy."

The proposals call for public financing of campaigns through voluntary taxpayer checkoffs on tax returns, 12-year term limits, a none-of-the-above option on the ballot, easier voter registration rules, a state-level initiative, referendum and recall authority and a national referendum procedure.

"As you are no doubt aware, U.S. industrial policy has lacked the important connection between basic research and commercial application. It is that gap that many of our foreign competitors have been able to fill, thereby taking away the competitive advantage of American basic science research," he wrote.

"This kind of innovative approach must be fostered and encouraged whenever possible."

McOwen said he is confident that the funding proposal will be accepted.

"It is a very strong proposal," said McOwen "It should be very competitive."

Ronkin's New
LSAT Premium Program:
The Best Way To Prepare For The LSAT

If you're one of the nation's 95,000 applicants determined to get into an accredited law school, you know the competition is tough. Since there are only 44,000 openings, a high score on the LSAT is crucial.

That's why Ronkin created the LSAT Premium Program which offers a choice of three varied levels of assistance.

• LSAT Preparation Course

Using the most recently updated curriculum, our 40-hour course stresses critical thinking, argument analysis and logical reasoning. Besides classroom time, our comprehensive LSAT course provides live tutorials, three diagnostic exams, three practice exams, a computer-based tutorial program, homework materials that include released LSATs, and a toll-free Dial-A-Teacher line. Two-day clinics, which are included in Ronkin's LSAT Gold and Platinum Packages, are also available for an additional fee.

• LSAT Gold Package

In addition to the 40-hour LSAT course, Ronkin's LSAT Gold Package includes our two-day LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics offered immediately prior to LSAT examination dates. These clinics concentrate on Logical Reasoning and Logic Games. The Gold Package also includes our Law School Success Program which covers law school exam preparation, legal writing, legal research, and career planning.

• LSAT Platinum Package

This plan provides everything you'll need to get into law school and to be a success. Enroll and you'll receive our LSAT Preparation Course, LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics, Law School Success Program, plus our Law School Selection and Application Assistance Programs.

So if you're looking for the best in LSAT and law school preparation programs, call The Ronkin Educational Group.

Select Board hears resident's complaint

Bars warned about noisy students

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

Responding to an Amherst resident's allegations of rambunctious behavior of students, the Amherst Select Board last night unanimously voted to notify downtown drinking establishments to adhere to laws regarding capacity and noise levels.

The meeting room of the Bangs Community Center was filled with concerned citizens and local business owners in anticipation of the Board's action regarding town meeting member Margot Parrot's complaints about downtown establishments violating capacity and noise permits.

Parrot, 43, has presented the Board with 18 pages of documentation in which she claims to observed permit violations.

Parrot, who spoke briefly at the meeting, said she felt the amount of noise and content of that noise produced from Twisters Tavern was "psychologically damaging" to residents who live near by and are awakened in the early hours.

At one point during her presentation Parrot was cut off by Select Board chairperson Elisa Campbell and was not allowed to play a tape recording she made of "a screaming fight between five young people."

Parrot's report, which calls Twisters "the main culprit" has stirred complaints from local business owners.

Mark Forsyth, owner of Twisters Tavern, feels his establishment has been unfairly targeted because of its location.

"It's not just a Twisters problem," Forsyth said, "It's a town problem."

Twisters, located at 30 Boltwood Walk and near an elderly housing complex, has received most of Parrot's criticism concerning noise and overcrowding.

"I feel the regulations which govern capacity are antiquated and should be changed to suit the times," Forsyth said.

Forsyth also added that residents are sending the wrong message to students.

"This is a college town and the students are the blood of Amherst," Forsyth said, "If we drive students out of Amherst then this town will fall apart."

The meeting was attended by many of the downtown business owners who remained silent and listened to the Board's decision.

Campbell said after the meeting that the Select Board wasn't out to close bars but instead wanted to show concern for residents.

"If establishments abide by the laws then fine," Campbell said. "But those that aren't are going to have to comply."

Jason Holland, the bar manager at Delano's Restaurant, said they do everything they can to keep the noise levels down when patrons leave in the early hours.

"We do what we can but there's only so much that can be done once someone leaves the bar," Holland said.

Town Manager Barry Del Castilho advised caution concerning steps taken towards establishments.

"Penalties may have detrimental effects towards business," Del Castihol said.

All of the Board agreed that consideration from patrons leaving downtown establishments could help alleviate the problem.

No further meetings have been scheduled to address the issue but local authorities will be monitoring downtown businesses for violations.

Doctor tries to snuff out smoking

NEW IPSWICH, N.H. (AP) — To prove a point, Dr. Joseph DiFranza once had his 11-year-old stepdaughter buy cigarettes. He wanted to show that selling tobacco to minors is a booming business despite laws forbidding it.

DiFranza, of New Ipswich, and his stepdaughter didn't have to go far to find lawbreakers.

They went to stores in Fitchburg, Mass., and found that 75 of 100 were willing to break the law and sell her tobacco. People must be 18 to buy tobacco in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

"As a physician I know that tobacco is the most common cause of preventable deaths in the United States," he says. "Yet children can go into many stores and buy tobacco, where it's sold as if it were candy."

DiFranza, an associate professor in family practice for the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, published his findings for the Journal of the American Medical Association.

His experiment was repeated around the world, with similar results, he said.

DiFranza says he found tobacco companies $1.25 billion a year selling to children. State and federal governments are realizing $400 million a year in excise taxes from the illegal sales.

He also found the states and federal government were

UMass prof testifies against plan for wetland changes

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor who is a nationally known wetlands expert will testify tomorrow before the U.S. House of Representatives about President Bush's proposed changes to the definition of federal wetlands.

Joseph S. Larson, a professor in the department of forestry and wildlife management, said he will be speaking against the proposed changes, which if passed will remove federal protection for more than 50 percent of the nation's wetlands.

Larson has called this plan a "major fallacy." He will testify before the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for five minutes with several other speakers.

"Nationally, it could remove a major portion of the duck-breeding habitats in the northern prairies," Larson said. "Their proposal is completely without scientific merit."

Larson, who is also director of the University Environmental Institute, said this would open up these wetlands to development and oil exploration and would damage sensitive wildlife habitats and increase water pollution.

"My suspicion is that it's really coming out of this group that Quayle is heading, the Council on Competitiveness — they are speaking for development interests," Larson said.

Saying the proposal would go against the Clean Water Act, Larson said enactment of these changes in the definition of wetlands would be followed by legal action by a coalition of environmental groups.

"My suspicion is if they proceed with it, there will quite likely be a major lawsuit filed," he said.

Since wetlands naturally capture sediment, filled

Survey finds 40% of Jews are harassed

By JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff

About 40 percent of Jewish students at the University of Massachusetts have faced anti-Semitic harassment by fellow students, and over one-half have expressed a lack of confidence in the University's ability to respond effectively to such incidents, according to a recent survey conducted by Project Pulse.

"I'm not really surprised at the results of this [survey] at all. I'm sad, but I'm not surprised," said Yehudit Heller, program director of Hillel.

The survey, in which 219 Jewish students were polled, investigated both Jewish and non-Jewish undergraduate student perceptions and observations of anti-Semitism on campus. In addition, Jewish students were questioned about their personal experiences of specific types of anti-Semitic harassment at UMass.

The results of this survey and ideas for combatting anti-Semitism on campus was the focus of a forum co-sponsored by the Jewish Awareness/Anti-Semitism Task Force and the Office of Human Relations last Thursday.

Dean of Students Sharon Kipetz said part of the problem is when an anti-Semitic incident is reported, the victim is never told of the consequences the perpetrator will face because of confidentiality.

The way the student code of conduct is written "keeps the victim in the dark," Kipetz said, adding that this problem is currently being looked into by University attorneys.

"Our disciplinary system shrouds consequences for the person who does it — the perpetrator," said Grant Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations.

Heller cited lack of awareness on the part of Jewish students about on-campus agencies that are available to help them. In addition, she added that often, the University has discouraged Jewish students from making an issue out of anti-Semitic incidents for fear of sparking futher incidents.

"If the establishment tells us there is a conspiracy of quiet about anti-Semitic events, where are we?" Heller asked.

The number of non-Jewish students also expressing a lack of confidence in the University's ability to respond effectively to specific incidents of spending nothing to stop the illegal sale of tobacco.

DiFranza set out to see if enforcement would make a difference.

The first step was to poll juniors and seniors in Leominster (Mass.) High School to see how many smoked. This would give him a base for a "before and after" comparison.

Store owners were given pamphlets about the problem, signs to put up for the customers and stickers to put on their cash registers to remind clerks to check identifications. Compliance checks were made.

Stores that stopped selling to minors received letters of commendation from the city and were written up in local newspapers. Those who continued their sales received warnings and then a fine of $25.

DiFranza went back to the high school students and found tobacco use had dropped 40 percent.

DiFranza also is working to ban tobacco advertising aimed at minors. His research on Camel cigarette advertisements showed that 94 percent of the children interviewed knew the camel character used to advertise Camel cigarettes. Many children thought he is "cool, interesting, rich and famous."

The American Heart Association, the Lung Association and the Cancer Association have called on the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and ban the ads, DiFranza says.

"With the number of smokers in the United States declining by about 1 million a year, the tobacco industry is dependent on its ability to recruit replacement smokers," DiFranza says.

anti-Semitic harassment was nearly identical to the number of Jewish students expressing this same sentiment. In addition, anti-Semitism in the classroom was also found to exist. About 24 percent of Jewish students said they had experienced stereotyping by course instructors, including teaching assistants, and 32 percent reported anti-Semitic classroom remarks not challenged by the instructor.

Of the Jewish students polled, 9 percent expressed experiencing anti-Semitic harassment by instructors and 7 percent reported experiencing anti-Semitic harassment by University staff. Over one-half of the Jewish sample said they had personally experienced other students stereotyping their Jewish identity, making negative remarks about Jews or telling anti-Semitic jokes.

When asked what they would do if they witnessed an incident of verbal anti-Semitic harassment, 72 percent of the Jewish sample reported that they would intervene directly, compared to only 51 percent on the non-Jewish sample.

Nearly two-thirds of the Jewish students polled reported they think anti-Semitism exists on campus at least "to some extent," while a little more than half of non-Jewish students expressed this same sentiment.

wetlands could force such pollutants downstream, with negative results on the ecosystem.

Larson said Bush has not fulfilled his campaign promises.

"There's very little evidence that he could qualify for the term 'environmental president.' "

Last fall, Larson testified before several House committees and subcommittees examining the issue of wetlands.

The Environmental Institute which Larson heads at the University, a "research arm" of the graduate school, conducts graduate research in the environment.

Learn German This Summer at URI

June 21-July 31, 1992

The Twelfth Annual German Summer School of the Atlantic at the University of Rhode Island in co-operation with the Goethe Institute Boston.

German will be the sole language of communication, and German life and culture the heart of this six week residency program on intensive language study.

You can earn up to nine undergraduate or graduate credits while living in the beautiful surroundings of our country campus, just minutes away from Rhode Island's magnificent beaches and historic Newport.

This program is ideally suited for anyone wishing to enroll in beginning, intermediate, or advanced German. Take advantage of this rare opportunity to participate in this total German language experience.

Efficient ways to stay warm on an cold winter's night

I.J. McKenzie

My bloodshot eyes crack the frozen crust that has formed on my eyelashes during the night. As I groom the loose granular from the slope of my eyelids, I can begin to make out a bright cloud of exhaled morning breath shining in a ray of light from the window. If hovers above me for a moment, and then begins to precipitate back to my chest in the form of snow. Yes, I think to myself, I have made it through another night. No, I am not a graveyard shift security guard for Fred's Frozen Foods. In fact, I'm not paid at all to endure this indoor winter wonderland. I, as well as my house-mates, choose to subject our bodies to this experiment in suspended animation. The experiment, sponsored by the CIA, NASA, the FBI and the AFL-CIO has been given the top secret code name of "Operation Off-Campus Icebox."

The experiment started last November when we decided to turn on the heat for the first time. After a few days with meager results, we decided to forget about the heat idea. It seems that whoever "insulated" our house had used marshmallow fluff or cotton candy, which had probably been eaten by the gang of outlaw mice that rode around the house on Harleys. But they are another story altogether.

The next logical step was to try to conserve natural body heat. Wool hats and sweaters became the norm and the word housecoat took on a new meaning. I think we might have been pioneers in the area of wool toilet seat covers. Although it was quite scratchy, it was a nice alternative to having one's bottom fused into place when attempting to avoid the chilly post-partum rebound. It was the nighttime, though, that sent the mercury plummeting.

As my room was basically constructed from a bunch of big weeds out back that were capped off with a roof and painted white, I had the greatest preparation to complete before skating off to bed. After eating some hot cocoa mix and pouring boiling water down my throat, I would sprint to my room and rip off my clothing to the underlying T-shirt and boxers, screaming at the top of my lungs to generate vocal heat and dive headlong into my Nocturnal Exoskeleton Climate Regulator System Device Apparatus (about nine T-shirts, four sweatshirts and three pairs of sweat pants). Lacking all motor coordination skills under this mass of textiles, I would flail wildly and hope to land on my bed of glowing hot coals which I had prepared earlier. If I hit the mark, it was lights out and pray to wake up in the morning. If I missed — let's not talk about it.

With all of this time spent merely trying to survive, our grades suffered and our parents threatened to move us back into the heated dorms. One Saturday night, it hit us. After confirming the initial data with NASA, we concluded that contact with another warm-blooded biological entity, a guest if you will, could increase the ambient under-the-covers temperature by 10 degrees Celsius or more. And thus, "Guest of the Month" was born.

Of course, having a bedtime partner is nothing new off-campus or anywhere else, but the time constraint is what makes this plan so appealing. The guest must realize from the very beginning that he/she is there for one reason and one reason only: warmth. If the guest is permitted or coerced into a longer stay, chances are that serious problems will develop, leading to a new biological phenomenon known as "infrigidation"; where the combined body temperatures are actually less than either one alone.

Other problems can arise quickly once the visit exceeds one month. The chance of it being your guest's birthday during his/her stay doubles from 8 percent to 16 percent instantly. This blunder can become quite costly if the November guest stays through until, say, December 25. An extra month of cohabitation before Christmas can translate into huge cost control problems. These drawbacks, however, can be easily avoided by following the master plan.

Used properly, the Guest of the Month concept is the most efficient way to stay warm on a cold North Amherst night.

Hey, look at me, I'm a virgin!

I'm sick of living with all the lies. I've been fabricating stories for quite a while to be accepted and to protect my masculinity, but no more. Today, I reveal my secret to thousands of Collegian readers that I. . . I am. . . a VIRGIN!

There. Now I want to clear up some things. I am not homosexual or bisexual. I drool over the sight of a gorgeous woman as much as any straight guy. So why am I 19 years old, attending the University of Massachusetts, the school where anyone can get laid according to my oh-so-sophisticated stepfather, and still a virgin. Well, in two words, I'm shy.

I have trouble talking to girls. Most guys get over this by ninth grade, but I never did. I just never know what to say around women and I get nervous. Although I have gone on some dates (but not many), I've never done more with a girl than kiss, and the girl has always had to make the first move. Maybe I'm too much of a gentleman. Maybe I'm old-fashioned. I don't like to rush into things.

Since September, I've been lying to my friends and associates. Due to peer pressure, I've told stories of wild parties, easy women and my many sexual conquests. Although a few of my friends are also shy with women (and are virgins, too) they even expected that since I was at the party school, I must get laid at least once a week. So I lied to live up to their expectations.

Of course, being shy isn't the only reason I'm a virgin. I wouldn't want to sleep with a girl right away anyway. Well, I would want to, because I'm a man, but I wouldn't because I believe sex is something that should be done when a couple is really serious about each other. I don't think they should wait until they're married, but they shouldn't screw on their first date, either.

Okay. So now everyone thinks I'm the biggest nerd they've ever heard of but I don't care. There are lots of girls I'd like to go out with but I'm too scared to ask them. I don't think I'm ugly. Girls have told me that I'm cute before. I just can't ask a girl out. I've been rejected in the past and it's not fun. Which brings me to my next point.

Girls, women, ladies (whatever you choose to be called), there are a lot of guys like me out there. You may like one of us and are just waiting for him to ask you out. Well, I say, don't wait. Ask him. It will save a lot of time and you'll both be a lot happier after. If they're like me, it'll be hard to tell if he likes you unless you ask him. When I like a girl, I've been known to stare at her when I know she can't see me, but if she's close, I'll ignore her except for an occasional glance. I won't talk to her and if she talks to me, I'll mumble a reply and probably turn red.

So, if you're interested, why not take a chance and ask that shy guy out? There's a 99.9 percent chance that he'll say yes.

The secret is out: There's no such thing as PC

On Feb. 20 on the Editorial page of this very newspaper, I discovered that the current fashion is to be politically correct and that PC is to be a white militant feminist lesbian who dresses like men ("Will someone please politically correct me?" Olivia Stewart-Liberty). Looking down at my white, feminist, lesbian, fashionably trousered and wing-tipped self, I realized WOW! That's me! I AM the elite, the pinnacle of society! I have The Word! What an honor.

Ms. Stewart-Liberty, since you are obviously a thinking, questioning human being (who is willing to be told what to think and feel, I might add), I will let you in on a little secret. But first, look around you and make sure no one is peeking over your shoulder because the PC are very elite and I have chosen you to be the One upon whom to impart this revelation.

The secret is that. . .there is no such thing as PC!

Think about it. Have you heard of anyone who self-identifies as PC? No! That's because the real PC are not white, militant, feminist lesbians who dress like men. The real elite are those who are the most rabidly anti-PC, rigidly labeling people so that they can then disqualify people's beliefs and assuage their paranoia about being PI!

Come to think of it you have already arrived as a member of the PC. You have cleverly labeled white, militant, feminist lesbians and then disqualified us by calling us rigid and exclusive and implying that all we live for is to dress like men!

And finally, I do not desire to be PC. It implies that there is one right and many wrong ways to live (and dress). Even if I were to aspire to be PC, I couldn't do it. As a white person, I enjoy many white-skin privileges that I would not want to perpetuate. As a lesbian, I do not enjoy very much power (at this time) to make people think and do what I want them to.

As a feminist lesbian, I am exploring a way to live my life that fits me best. This includes fighting racism, sexism, classism and heterosexism — and being vocal about it.

Maybe instead of spending your energy bashing my lifestyle, you should be exploring your own. What do you want out of life? What things can you do that make you feel happy and whole? What are the things you can do that will help others feel happy and whole?

Maybe if you focused on answering these questions you wouldn't feel so defensive when "white, militant, feminist lesbians who dress like men" let you know about how they answered them.

Give Morrissey a dull table knife

Michael Morrissey is oh so keen on seeing Jeffrey Dahmer put to death. In fact, he'd like to do it himself. Well, then, do it right. Lock Michael and Jeffrey in a room together and give Michael a dull table knife and let real justice be done. You see, all of society's problems will be cured if we just "exterminate" the bad elements.

Unfortunately, there are no quick 'n' dirty solutions. Solutions like this are short-sighted and tend to backfire and leave blood on your hands. Perhaps if everyone in this country (and the world) had the opportunity to have a good childhood, a good education and a good job people might harbor some hope and vision for the future — and there wouldn't be millions of "criminals" in prison.

The resources, human and otherwise, are there. What needs to be changed is this country's priorities.

DEANS LIST

One of the University's highest priorities is its commitment to provide opportunities for academic growth. I am pleased and proud, therefore, to recognize those of you who earned Deans List status for the Fall Semester 1991.

This level of achievement - 3.5 or higher semester average with twelve or more graded credits - is attained by fewer than 20% of the undergraduate student body.

Such outstanding performance is a source of pride to the faculty, staff, your student colleagues, and, of course, your parents.

Thank you for the credit you bring to the University through your achievement.

Richard D. O'Brien, Chancellor

PRESS RELEASES

To publicize your achievement, the University News Office will be issuing a press release to your hometown newspaper if you are a Massachusetts resident. Out of state students are requested to pick up a press release form at 200 Munson Hall (second floor). For additional questions, please call 545-0444.

ADDITIONS/OMMISSIONS

The Deans List was based on grades recieved and posted by the Registrar's Office by January 23, 1992. If you had a grade change after that date (including making up an "Incomplete" or had a missing or late grade recorded after that date), and believe you now qualify for Deans List status, please fill out a form available at the Information Data Bank, 2nd floor lobby counter, Whitmore, and attach verification. Reminder: only graded credits are calculated in determing Deans List eligibility. Pass/fail credits are not included.

The Deans List is prepared for publication by Student Affairs Special Services which pays for this listing as a service to the campus community. The cooperation of "The Massachusetts Daily Collegian" is acknowledged and appreciated.

Ice-T blows crowd away at the Vertex

By MIKE CARVALHO and SETH KAYE
Collegian Staff

Ice-T and Body Count
The Vertex (formerly Katina's)
Feb. 23, 1992

Ice-T, venerable rapper and now front man for the hardcore band Body Count, announced to the crowd at the Vertex on Sunday night that they were witnessing "the Ice-T nightclub lounge act, where anything can happen."

Flanked by turntable whiz Evil E and rapper Afrika Islam, the Ice-T posse did not disappoint the sellout crowd, performing in the first set several favorites from his past albums — "Colors," "New Jack Hustler," and "Peel Their Caps Back."

Throughout the show, Ice-T — sporting blue-striped boxers sticking out of the top of his jeans — became intimate with the audience, sharing some of his personal philosophies. When introducing "O.G. Original Gangster," he explained, "you gotta be a little bit of a gangster just to make ends meet."

Ice-T, adamant about not being a sellout to the pop music market, made off-color remarks about Vanilla Ice, among others. "I don't mean to dis pop," he said, "but, 'la da dee la da da.'"

After a brief intermission, Ice-T re-emerged, this time fronting his hardcore outfit, Body Count, introducing them as "the cop killers from L.A." Now lead singer Ice-T ripped into such soon-to-be classics as "Bowels of the Devil," "KKK Bitch," and what will undoubtedly become their "Stairway," "Mama's Gotta Die Tonight." Dedicated to Henry Rollins, "Mama's" is a detailed account of a rather extreme way to end racism — kill your racist parents.

Other crowd pleasers included "Evil Dick," "Body Count," and the closing song, "Copkiller."

"This is the last song we want to do. The cops said we couldn't do it or we'd go to jail," Ice-T said. The predictable response from the crowd would have made N.W.A. proud.

Opening the show on Sunday night was Hard Corps, who couldn't have asked for a more in-sync crowd. They had heads flying, bodies jumping and the audience generally getting into the groove.

Their energy remained fairly high until they brought several women from the audience up on stage in hopes of livening up an otherwise-mediocre song.

A singularly un-fantastic guitar solo almost brought the set to a complete halt, but they were able to end on a positive note. Promoting their album entitled, "Def Before Dishonor," they overcame their made-for-MTV name and thrilled the crowd.

Further extolling the premise "if you can't be good, be loud," Body Count will be releasing their first self-titled album on March 31.

Among other projects, Ice-T recently completed a movie with rapper Ice Cube in which "everybody dies. No message," he said.

"Rain" shows off Peabo Bryson's true talent

Can You Stop The Rain
Peabo Bryson
Columbia Records

Peabo Bryson's name may not be familiar to many, but his is the voice behind the theme song to the movie, "Beauty and the Beast," (a duet with Celine Dion). His new album Can You Stop The Rain includes a recently released title track of the same name.

With a voice that parallels that of Luther Vandross and Jeffrey Osborne, Peabo's album is a myriad collection of soothing ballads. Peabo thankfully doesn't fall into the trap that many soul singers do, in feeling compelled to include poorly mastered pop songs.

Instead, his effort is a richly orchestrated blend of serenades with strong back-up provided by such sultry singers as James Ingram, Regina Belle and Carl Anderson. Devoted to the typical theme of love, Bryson does rare justice to the emotion.

Each song on the album is dedicated to a different feeling associated with the complexities of modern romance. The first track, entitled "Lost in the Night", begins, "A light shines in my soul until my heart feels the fire/ tonight is all we know so let's take what we can/ and find a way to forget that we're all alone." This song deals with the frustrations and short-lived joy which accompany a trying relationship.

The next track, "Can You Stop the Rain" is one of the best ballads on the album. The song is a plea for help, a tribute to lost or unrequited love. Another track, entitled "Shower You With Love" was inspired by a friend's wedding that Bryson attended. A feeling of devotion is conveyed in the words, "You touched a part of me and gave the gentle love I'm missing/ I don't know what I said to make you think you want me/ I lie awake at night and think about it/ How you made me whole again/ Life can make you so afraid/ I just want to shower you with love."

One up-beat song on the album, "I Wanna Be With You" is rhythmic, but puts emphasis on Bryson's winning voice instead of on the pop beat. Included on the album is a rendition of Michael Bolton's hit "Soul Provider." You'll find that Bryson's version has more lilt than Bolton's brash voice could muster.

If you are looking for an album filled with soothing love songs, Peabo Bryson's new album could be it. The lyrics will capture your heart, the music will calm you, and the voice will knock you out.

Love songs are a dime-a-dozen, but true talent, such as Peabo Bryson's, is a rare find. What I found refreshing about this album was that Bryson didn't sell himself short by including low-quality pop songs in an effort to balance out the ballads on the album.

Road to Flippa serves up acoustic folk-rock

By RICHARD COHEN
and DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

There's a new road in Amherst where the sidewalks are lined with a unique group of dancing, singing music lovers, collectively known as "Flippaheads."

It's a road that begins and ends at Twisters Tavern each Monday night, and the street is paved with the sounds of the oddly named, powerful, folk-rock duo, Road to Flippa.

"What we do acoustically works because it's a party environment," says the driving voice behind Road to Flippa, Lisette Bellnier of Longmeadow.

Add UMass senior Colin Herlihy's guitar and soothing voice and the road leads its visitors on a guided tour past folk-rock luminaries. The stops include past greats like Harry Chapin and Janis Joplin, as well as present day artists including John Mellencamp and Melissa Etheridge.

A pitcher of beer and Herlihy's grilled chicken sandwich offered the opportunity to get acquainted with the newly-formed duo. It's clear the pair's off-stage rapport goes a long way to energizing their on-stage performance.

"We're identical," says Herlihy, from Wellesley. "One of my friends said we're the male/female version of each other."

"We're both goofs," laughs Bellnier as she lights a Marlboro.

Herlihy is a self-taught guitarist who began playing open-mike nights at Twisters last year and had seen Bellnier play in the area a few times.

"I've always wanted to play with someone else and I loved the way she sounded," Herlihy says.

The feeling was mutual and when Bellnier asked Herlihy to form a duo, the natural result was Road to Flippa. While Herlihy has limited experience in the music business, Bellnier has been testing the waters for six years.

A 1988 UMass graduate, Bellnier began singing at a summer camp in 1984 and the following year sang with the now defunct Shelflife (a 1985 Battle of the Bands finalist). Since then she has been steadily rising on the local music scene and is constantly playing area clubs with various musicians, including singing lead for Carpal Tunnel. Currently, Bellnier plays at September's every Thursday and Delano's each Sunday.

"She's a great singer who can really belt out a tune," says Bellnier's agent J'nanne Maxwell. "She's got a lot of feeling in her voice and her personality plays to the crowd."

A poster advertising Road to Flippa promises "a little something for everyone," and the duo delivers. Bellnier offers the key ingredient to the group's early success.

"It's like a sexual thing for me," Bellnier says. "You're very open and vulnerable [on stage] and I get off on it. I'm an egomaniac and an only child, I have to be on stage.

"I'm personable. I have fun with the audience," Bellnier says. "I love it when I look up and people are singing, it affects me."

Herlihy laughs and quickly points out, "Let it be known, I do not get off on it."

Regardless, Road to Flippa does get off on some incredible cover tunes including Herlihy's solo version of Chapin's "W*O*L*D," and Bellnier's soulful rendition of Joplin's "Me and Bobby McGee."

Both voices complement the other resulting in the capability to perform a wide range of songs.

"[Lisette's] voice is so captivating, when I heard it I said I had to sing with her," Herlihy says. "It's ironic I did."

You've Just Been Cleared For Take Off.

You can get a lot more out of life when you set your sights a little higher. Which is what applying for the American Express® Card is all about. When you get the Card, it's easier to do the things you want to do. And with the student savings that come along with it, you can do even more.

Fly roundtrip on Continental for less than $100 each way.

Student Cardmembers receive four travel certificates. They can be used to fly anywhere Continental Airlines flies in the 48 contiguous United States. Two for the school year, and two for the summer.*

Depending on where you fly, each school year travel certificate is good for $129 or $189 roundtrip—and each summer travel certificate is good for $149 or $199 roundtrip.

Savings that upgrade your lifestyle.

As a student Cardmember you get more than great travel savings. You also save money on everything from clothing to long distance phone calls. All for a $55 annual fee.

Obviously, savings like these say a lot about the value of the Card. And having the Card will say a lot about you. For one thing it says you have a handle on what you spend, so you don't have to carry over a balance. It also says you're smart enough not to pay interest charges that can really add up. So take a few minutes now to call (have your bank address and account number ready), and apply for the American Express Card.

With all that the Card offers you, not even the sky is the limit.

Airfare examples based on destination.

Roundtrips	Your School Year Fare	Lowest Available Airfares†	Your Savings
NY-L.A.	$189	$428	$239

American experiences

I am originally from China and I come from Hong Kong. This is the first time I come to the states. I just remember when the lady in the cluster office handed me my room key on my foreign students orientation. I knew that my friend and I were going to move in a coed dorm in Southwest; living on a floor with five big American guys and a sea of sex posters. That shocked me because I attended girls' schools during all my school years.

Things became worse at night. There was no women's bathroom on that floor, so we shared the men's bathroom, and using another woman as a guard, we were able to finish bathing safely. This was my third day in the states.

Julia Chu

One afternoon, before I went to buy some munchies, I realized that I did not know those coins well, I was not used to the currency system in the states, so I turned to a girl on my floor for help.

"This is one cent, one dime which is 10 cents and quarter which is 25 cents;" she pointed to the bronze, silver and the big silver one respectively.

Then, I went to the Munchy Store and got screwed up myself with those coins again.

"Well, practice makes perfect!" — I comforted myself afterwards.

I was always quiet in class because my oral English was not fluent. People always talk in slang and they speak so fast that I couldn't understand. One day my TA in graphics, Jen, happened to sneeze a few times and Steve who sat across me kept saying something to her. Later I caught the phrase "Bless you!" I was very doubtful, so I asked him why did he say that and he said: "I don't know. Anyway everyone says it."

Time really flies. When I recall these memories, they seem like they just happened yesterday. As the last fall semester went by, I learned so much from people around me and now I am used to the coed environment, I know how to identify the coins and learned quite a lot of slangs of my peers. Funky, isn't? Everyday is a new day full of unexpected experiences.

Americans are interesting people to observe. Some of them seem weird to me (or maybe vice-versa!), but nice people are in majority. If life is a train, then I am the driver. I have driven my train all the way form Mainland China to Hong Kong and across the Atlantic Ocean to this new continent. The people I meet are passengers who keep getting on and off as I go by different stops. However, there are always life-long passengers who will accompany the driver to the end of the journey."

Kuwait still needs to be freed

Ignorant or illiterate. . . What should I think of the people here? When I came to the United States in 1987, my family wanted to rent a car. We asked if they would accept a Kuwaiti driving license and the Avis girl asked us what state Kuwait was in.

What state Kuwait was in? Kuwait is an independent country in the Middle East, right beside Iran. We had to include Iran because at that time the Iran-Contra affair was very popular.

Safee A. Idrees

That was then, but later in 1991 when I landed at John F. Kennedy Airport, by looking at my visa, the immigration officer and the US Custom official both sympathized and curiously asked me how everything was there. They also consoled me and whole-heartedly welcomed me to the United States.

This spring semester I joined UMass and slowly with time began to mingle and settle in. My initial reaction about the people was very nice. All of the people were understanding, friendly, helpful and consoling. I especially have to thank my dean and professors for helping me out, giving me my time and making my academics worthwhile.

I slowly began to pick up the socializing patterns here; the D.C., Campus Center and the weekend parties. This is where I met most of my friends, noticed the true American society and its outlook of the world.

Whenever and wherever I was around I would always get into conversations, debates and sometimes arguments on Kuwait and the Gulf War. After talking to many students and faculty I concluded that there were three types of people; those who supported the troops and the cause to freeing Kuwait, those who believed that United States had no business in Kuwait and it was an Arab issue, and those who really didn't care at all.

All of these three groups could easily be pointed out. The first group would always wear yellow ribbons, little U.S. flag pins, and always boast on how good the US army was. The second group could be distinguished outside the Student Union from noon to 2 p.m. chanting "no blood for oil" and the third group were those who kept quiet, and thought that the other two groups were extreme radicals.

The sad part was that none of the groups knew exactly what was going on or the whole story. The United States does not care if Kuwait should be free or not. The war was a major socio-economic game for the US. The big facade of the "Free Kuwait" was nothing but show. If US wants a country to be free from dictatorship and have a democracy then; what is it doing about Haiti, Kashmire or better yet, occupied Palestine?

The answer to this question is that the people in Palestine, Haiti and Kashmire are unfortunate because they have to spill their blood.

The U.S. had no interest in Kuwait except that of economical. It wanted Kuwait's business and oil. But, we Kuwaitis are not stupid either, we used everything to our advantage. We had oil, money that U.S. wanted.

We hired their people to fight for us. They came and did a very good job. Their money is worth and now they say Kuwait is free. But, that is the greatest paradox. It yet has to be free of the Americans there.

Cultural diversity at UMass

Cultural diversity. Multiculturalism. These and other such slogans are becoming increasingly common on campus and in the national state of affairs. This phenomenon is due largely to the globalization of the world economy which has induced an increased exchange of culture through the international media and the heightened immigration of Third World people into the United States. This, in addition to the high birthrate of people of color in America is helping to transform the country into a true "melting pot," where the "minorities" will constitute a major portion of the national populace.

Martin F. Jones

Here on campus, there has been a transformation in the ethnic makeup of the student body over the generations. When established in 1863, this institution was exclusively attended by white students, a trend that continued well into this century. This all changed in 1967 with the creation of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students. Since its creation 25 years ago, CCEBMS has recruited hundreds of students of color into the university.

The establishment of CCEBMS was eventually followed by the creation of a Black Studies program, offering a bachelor's degree in the field. Today, the University offers students a variety of opportunities to learn more about the various cultures of our world. In the academic curriculum, there are programs of study that include Afro-American Studies, Asian Studies, Chinese, Japanese, Judaic Studies and Latin American Studies.

Another important aspect of the cultural diversity at UMass is the establishment of student cultural centers. In 1975, Black students at the university established the Malcolm X Center as a place to promote Black cultural activities on campus. Since the establishment of the Malcolm X Center, six other cultural centers have been established. The campus cultural centers play a major role in providing an actual base of activity and support for students of color at UMass. Unfortunately, last semester, three of these centers, (the United Asia Cultural Center, the Latin American Cultural Center and the White Eagle Native American Cultural Center), halted their activities as part of a protest toward the validity of UMass' policies concerning campus diversity and multiculturalism. Presently, the other four centers, the Malcolm X Center and the Sylvan, Anacaona and Martin Luther King cultural centers, are still open and functioning.

There are also a host of student organizations that provide social and cultural activities, many of which provide focus toward a particular ethnic identity. Some of these organizations include the Asian American Students Association, the Black Mass Communications Project, the South Asian Students Association, Hillel and AHORA.

One particular student organization is designed to represent the collective interests of the entire Third World community on campus. Named the Third World Caucus, this organization was established to maintain diversity within the Student Government Association and to promote the collective interests of the various student minority groups on campus.

May I know what's wrong, Puerto Ricans?

Well Puerto Ricans, I know that you are sick of reading about yourselves. Don't worry, this time no one will call you "paranoids," nor will say that you are "racially schizophrenic," nor that you belong to an "elite." No one will blame our Holy Sacred Coffee Shop nor our academic support program. Anyway, I hope this is the last editorial I write on you guys, at least for the semester. It is sad to say but many of you do not seem to appreciate what others do for you.

Right now I am really tired. I went to bed at 4 a.m. last night, I have a quiz and I am here, late in the night doing this for you. Why? I still have the hope that you boricuas are going to wake up from your indifference toward what affects you.

When guys? When are we going to decide what we want? When are we going to stop criticizing ourselves or calling each other half-breeds, "silver spoon kids," vendidos, acculturated people, vende patrias, confundidos, assimilists or whatever comes to mind? When?

I am really sorry, but this is really disgusting. It is something to be ashamed of. I know that many of you hate these kinds of articles in the Collegian, but never miss the Ed/Op and the Multicultural Affairs Page and have group discussions about it in the Coffee Shop at noon. I know that many of you do not care and you may be thinking, what in heaven does she thinks she is to be insulting us in a newspaper. I am just trying to cause a reaction on you, people. The purpose of these lines are to make you react and question if you are doing the best for yourselves as a group. I want you to be mad at me because I wrote the truth of many of yourselves's attitudes. Well, I do not care. It is for your own benefit.

Evelyn A. DeJesus

There is got to be someday in which we stop saying that Puerto Ricans raised in the states are not Puerto Ricans or that Puerto Ricans who come straight from Puerto Rico do not know what racism is or that they are "silver spoon" kids.

This attitude weakens our power as a group. If we complain about racism then, how are we going to fight against it if we are not together? If we want this to end we have to get together and forget our personal and political differences and work together as a group.

If you want our cultural center open, then stand on your chair and find someone who can write a letter asking for it to be reopened, type it, then look for hundreds of signatures and take it to Academic Support Services. Before you leave the place, please, don't forget to ask how you can get the key to the center so you can reopen it. Yes kids, you will do it only if you want to. You can do it now if you want.

I can't forget to say that I have talked to some of the students who worked in the center. I will not write any names so they will not be prosecuted by the campus mafia, but many of them still don't have jobs and, of course, they do not support its closing. Nice way of protesting my cultural center's leaders!

Well puertorros, these lines are written to challenge you. I am going to do my best to keep my promise of not writing about you, because you requested it. I am doing this in a paper, with a circulation of 19,000, to encourage you to get together. Some of us tried to talk to you, but you didn't listen. Some of us tried to work for you, but you didn't support their activities. Some of us tried to do the best for you, but you buried them by criticizing. I am telling you to stop this crap and work, to go up. This is what you needed to listen to.

A tribute to the late, great Marley

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Correspondent

Since Black History Month is almost over, I thought I'd get my last few cents in, and pay a personal tribute to one of my favorite Black musicians, Bob Marley.

Before I go any further, I must explain that until I attended a lecture and video presentation about Bob Marley, Peter Tosh, and Bunny Wailer at the Student Union a couple weeks ago, I was not nearly as appreciative of Marley as I am today.

I was one of those people who popped a tape into the stereo and enjoyed the music not really contemplating all of the people, places, and influences behind it. I had not fully realized the magnitude of his achievement not only in the music world, but a triumph that reached the political and social realm as well.

It was a long, cold walk to the Student Union that night, but it was well worth it. (I trudged across campus, bundled in one of those coats that is so bulky that when I finally got everything zipped, buttoned, and tied, my arms stuck almost straight out.)

The presentation was given by Pioneer West coast Reggae D.J. and fan, Roger Steffans. Steffans has devoted his career to discovering all that he possibly can about the lives of Marley and his group, The Wailers, ever since he first heard them play in 1973.

Steffans' collection of music and video tapes was impressive, and the footage that he had of Marley and the Wailers performing such classics as "Get Up, Stand Up," the beautiful, tear-jerking "Redemption Song," and Marley's rendition of "Zimbabwe" (which he performed upon the gaining of independence of that nation in 1980) were rare, and enabled me to realize how serious Marley was about his work, and how every drop of energy was absorbed into his music while he was performing.

I finally got to see the man who I had for so long admired but could only hear.

In an interview with the former Wailers, Steffans gave great insight as to what Marley's contemporaries and companions though of him and of the band. None could agree on a favorite song, but members rated "Natty Dread" and "Roots" highly. I sensed the love and respect with which the men spoke of Marley, and in a different interview taken some years before, Tosh echoed these sentiments by explaining to Steffans that The Wailers were a family.

Despite the competition between Tosh and Marley after the group broke up in 1973, it was clear to me that Steffans and most everybody else in the Student Union Ballroom felt that Marley was, and will always be the King of Reggae.

Throughout his presentation Steffans presented a Bob Marley that I think few people knew. From the age of three Marley became known in his home village, Nine Mile, Jamaica. He possessed mystic powers, and was able to read palms and foretell the future.

Marley had a difficult time growing up the son of a white father and black mother, and encountered rejection from both races. He was abandoned by his father at the age of seven, after he told Bob's mother that he wanted to give the child a chance by enrolling him in school in Kingston, Great Britain. Bob was instead taken to Kingston and left to take care of a dying woman.

It was then that he developed a "saintly compassion for the sufferings of all people" according to Steffans.

Marley returned to Jamaica a short time later knowing that he wanted to be a musician. He met Tosh when he was nine, and Tosh's father married Marley's mother. The two boys along with their teacher, Joe Higgins, started an impromptu college of music in the middle of the ghetto, often practicing to keep their minds off of their rumbling stomachs.

Although their first song released, "Judge Not," failed, Marley and the band remained determined and eventually signed with a local producer, Leslie Kong. Their first album, Catch a Fire proved successful, and the rest, as they say, is history.

What most amazes me is the effect that Marley had upon politics in Jamaica. An assassination attempt was made on Marley's life in December of 1976 by opposers of Marley's supposed political ties to the former democratic-socialist Prime Minister, Michael Manly.

On the night of his "Smile Jamaica" concert and the night of the election of the new Prime Minister, Marley, his wife, Rita, and his manager were shot at and wounded at Marley's home during a rehearsal. Marley played two days later in spite of a minor arm wound, practically daring his enemies to return and finish the job. Marley was joined on the stage by hundreds of supporters, including the Prime Minister, and sang of peace, love, and the power of music.

In 1978 Marley was given an award by the United Nations for his life-long quest for peace. I had not known of the intensity with which he fought for social harmony, nor realized how many people heard and responded to his message.

"Bob Marley was Malcolm X with a band. Make no mistake about it," asserted Steffans.

Judging by the thousands who flocked to his concerts and bought his records, I have no doubt that Marley was one of the most influential black social leaders of our time.

Marley died of Melanoma cancer on May 11, 1981. Shortly before his death he left words of wisdom to his two sons. To one he said "Money cannot buy life." To the other he told, "On the way up, lift me up, and on the way down, don't let me down." To his mother he simply said, "Mother, don't cry."

Marley left behind him a grieving Jamaica, whose Parliament took a two week recess, dedicated a stamp and statue to him, made his birthday a national holiday, and is now considering putting Marley's image on national money.

Bob Marley had such a huge impact upon the world because there was truth in his message. He believed so strongly that peace was possible despite the many instances of racial turmoil that cost so many people of every race and every color their lives. We see that message in songs like "Get Up, Stand up,""I Shot the Sheriff," "Redemption Song," and countless others.

"[Colin's] voice is really confident and strong," Bellnier says, returning the praise. "The songs he chose showed taste and quality.

"Any band's greatest assets are tightness, organization, and professionalism, and the vocals are definitely an important part," Bellnier says.

Although both have similar tastes, Herlihy and Bellnier draw their inspiration from different sources.

"Everyone thinks I listen to James Taylor," Herlihy says. "But my influences were more Led Zeppelin, the Beatles and Mrs. Neise."

Mrs. Neise?

"She was my fifth grade music teacher," Herlihy explains with a boyish grin.

"I like Janis, Ricky Lee Jones, Bonnie Raitt and Arlo Guthrie," Bellnier says adding that Eric Clapton is her personal hero. "Slowhand, he's the best. I want to sing with him."

That's only one of Bellnier's aspirations in the industry.

"I want to make it big," Bellnier says. "I want to be the next Bonnie Raitt."

But the dream for Bellnier goes even further.

"I'd like to have my son or daughter hear one of my songs playing and say, 'That's my mother,'" Bellnier says focusing her brown eyes somewhere down the Road to Flippa.

For Herlihy, the ultimate goal is quite different.

"I've started a little late," Herlihy says. "If something happens then great, if not, then I've got my degree.

"I still have a tough time playing," Herlihy says. "I really have to think about what I'm doing."

"He's really loosened up a lot," Bellnier says. "But for me, I've been singing long enough that I don't even think about it."

"I can be singing and at the same time listening to a whole table's conversation," she says.

Soldiers center of fight for congressional seat

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Massachusetts won back its 11th congressional seat, at least for now, in a federal court decision last week that hinged on whether overseas federal employees, especially the military, should be counted in allocated U.S. House seats.

A three-judge federal panel, in a decision written by U.S. District Judge Douglas Woodlock, ruled the federal count of overseas service men and women was so flawed it should not be used in determining how many representatives a state should get.

News Analysis

The decision, if it withstands potential appeals, will mean Massachusetts will not lose a seat, as originally scheduled, and Washington state will not gain one.

Woodlock provided an interesting historical perspective on the issue.

The bottom line — in most census home states did not benefit from members of the U.S military serving outside the boundaries of their states.

"With the exception of 1970 and 1990, such persons have been counted where they are serving, but have not been allocated to individual states for apportionment purposes," Woodlock said.

He said that from the nation's beginning, there have been soldiers posted to duty stations outside the admitted states of the union.

"Throughout the 19th century, those persons serving at forts and posts in the western territories, for example, were counted where they were stationed," he said. "Similarly, despite the apparent short-run political disadvantage to the states which had not been a part of the Confederacy, northern troops serving in the occupied southern states were apparently counted in 1870 at their sites of posting in the former Confederacy."

Land-based members of the military, Woodlock said, including the Coast Guard, continue to be counted where they are permanently stationed, providing it is within the United States or its territories, and not as residents of their home states.

Starting with the 1900 census, he said, all overseas federal personnel were counted at their duty stations as part of the nation's total population, but were not allocated to states for apportionment purposes.

The one exception, Woodlock said, came in 1970, at the height of the Vietnam War, when overseas personnel were allocated for apportionment purposes, but no other.

The 1980 census returned to the historic practice after discovering military records were not entirely reliable when it came to determining where people lived.

Woodlock said when the 1990 census procedures were formulated, it was with the understanding that the Defense Department would, in fact, conduct a census of overseas personnel, a move it abandoned.

That inadequate count was what caused Woodlock to rule that overseas military personnel should not be counted for census purposes.

Justice stricken by cancer

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens has prostate cancer but will continue working and is expected to recover fully, a court spokeswoman said Monday.

Stevens, 71, one of the conservative court's most liberal members, was appointed by President Gerald R. Ford in 1975.

"Justice Stevens is expected to continue to participate fully in all cases to come before the court during and after his radiation treatment and to make a full recovery without any residual effects," spokeswoman Toni House said in a prepared statement.

She said he had begun treatment at Georgetown University Hospital.

Stevens participated in the three hours of oral arguments the court heard Monday, and was expected to participate in Tuesday's public session as well.

"At the time of his last annual physical examination, a routine screening blood test, the prostatic specific antigen was found to be mildly elevated," House's statement said. "A biopsy of prostate demonstrated localized early adenocarcinoma and a staging evaluation indicated that the tumor was limited to prostate."

One other current and two retired Supreme Court justices have had prostate problems, not uncommon in elderly men.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun, at 83 the court's oldest member, has suffered from recurring cancer of the prostate, and was treated for it most recently in 1987. No further problems have been reported.

Retired Justices William J. Brennan and Lewis F. Powell also received medical treatment for prostate problems.

Stevens is known to court watchers as "the justice in the bow tie."

First year in majors, Hobson warms to Sox

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Boston management has done the big math, coming up with around $40 million to field this year's team, a sum made more reasonable by factoring in inflation and the New England-wide psychological depression over the 74 years since the Red Sox last won a World Series.

The details are being left to Clell Lavern Hobson Jr., better known as Butch, a baseball fundamentalist from the hardscrabble minors, where guys are kept digging on as little as several hundred dollars a week and a faint promise of the big leagues.

Now he takes over his first major league club, which includes guys like pitcher Roger Clemens, who made $1,300 per pitch last year, and which has, as do all teams in the majors, an uncertain temperament.

The attitude should be the easy part, at least to start.

Much advance work has been done by Hobson's reputation for hardball, a case which he thinks may be a bit overstated.

"Look around," he said as pitchers and catchers reported to Chain O'Lakes Park before Monday's first spring training workout. "I don't see any mud pits, any tires with ropes on them, any barbed wire out there. Most guys know I'm fair."

Still, the powerfully-built former Red Sox infielder and football player for Bear Bryant at the University of Alabama is known as unflinching in his strong work ethic and as someone not to be trifled with.

Hobson is also polite and outgoing. And he could be easier to get along with than the tempestuous John McNamara and the sometimes hard-to-figure Joe Morgan, who preceded him as Boston manager and experienced open confrontations with players and more quiet plottings at overthrow.

At 40, Hobson is also closer in age to the players, and has played recent winter ball in the Senior Pro League. He was a fine player in the major leagues who could hit with power, but he concedes, "some of these guys have done things in the big leagues that I can only dream about."

Hobson managed for the Mets Class A team in Columbia, S.C., for two years, and then for two years with the Red Sox AA team in New Britain, Conn., before moving up to Pawtucket, R.I., last year.

He expects from Boston the same good effort he got from players in the minors and proficiency at basic skills like baserunning and bunting.

"I believe in being in shape and working on fundamentals," said Hobson, who played for the Red Sox from 1975-80, and in 1977 set a team season record for a third baseman with 30 home runs and 112 RBI.

Sox' Quintana injured in automobile crash

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Boston Red Sox first baseman Carlos Quintana underwent surgery Monday for a broken left arm suffered in an automobile accident in Venezuela as he was rushing to a hospital with two of his brothers, who had been shot.

"Doctors have assured me that he will not lose his career," said Narciso Quintana, whose son also suffered a slight fracture to the big toe of his right foot.

Damaso Blanco, a friend and former shortstop in the San Francisco Giants organization, said doctors had told family and friends that rehabilitation could begin in four weeks, but that Quintana might not be able to play for the Red Sox for several months.

Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman said the team would probably try to get Quintana to the United States as soon as he can begin rehabilitation.

Quintana, who throws with his right hand, broke his left arm in the humerus, the bone extending from the shoulder to the elbow. Quintana also bats right-handed, and the left arm leads the swing.

Blanco, speaking by telephone from Quintana's hospital room while surgery was being performed, said Quintana was injured when he struck a bridge in the western Venezuelan town of Tacarigua de Mamporal, about 80 miles from Caracas.

At the time, Quintana was rushing his younger brothers, Roberto, 21, and Eddie, 19, to the Clinicas Caracas Hospital after they had been shot at a party, one of many going on during the carnival period in the family's hometown in Mamporal.

"They were at a party, and a guy just came in shooting. It seemed it may have been an old argument between them. The Quintanas did not have guns," said Blanco.

"It was raining, and I guess he was desperate — the kids were bleeding," said Blanco, a sportscaster who had scheduled Quintana to appear on his radio show Monday.

He said Quintana's wife, Solys, who was also in the car, broke both her legs. The brothers were being treated for gunshot wounds. One brother was struck in the leg, and the other was wounded in the hand.

Quintana was scheduled to leave Tuesday for spring training camp here. Pitchers and catchers began workouts Monday and other players are due to report Friday and begin practicing Saturday.

Quintana was expected to face a battle again for playing time at first base with Mo Vaughn. Gorman noted that slugger Jack Clark could also play first.

Quintana, an excellent fielder, hit .295 with 11 home runs and 71 RBIs last season, but his playing time was reduced to give the promising Vaughn his chances.

Quintana's agent and the Red Sox are currently negotiating a one-year contract.

"We expect to settle soon," Gorman said.

Quintana became the team's regular first baseman in May 1990 after several years in the minors and several trips between there and the majors in 1990, he hit 287 with 7 homers.

UMass prof sees cultural lessons in Madonna

AMHERST (AP) — With Madonna mixing up sex roles and Michael Jackson homogenizing racial characteristics, what's a curious college student to think? Ask David Lenson, who teaches Rock and Roll 391.

The 46-year-old scholar-musician at the University of Massachusetts believes the superstars of popular music reflect social confusion about what makes us different and the same in the areas of gender and race.

"One of the hottest topics in comparative literature is now - believe it or not - Madonna," Lenson said in a phone interview Monday.

"She is a kind of amalgam of much of our popular culture history. She is not only sex confusion, but star confusion - part Marilyn Monroe, part little tramp, part Marlene Dietrich," the professor said.

Lenson said the pop singer has confused traditional gender with appearances in male clothing and her aggressive sexuality superimposed on the traditional female sex goddess-like actresses Monroe or Dietrich.

The professor points to pop singer Prince with his makeup and cross-dressing as another example of a singer who blurs the traditional gender lines.

"There's almost no unambiguous representation, especially when you get to the category of superstars," Lenson said.

He said such performers reflect the uncertainties of a society torn between traditional gender roles, the tenets of feminism and an anti-feminist backlash of recent years.

Lenson said a similar melding of distinctions has occurred along racial lines in popular music.

"There is a kind of homogeneity going on, and you might see it in the kind of racial ambiguities that Michael Jackson has cultivated," Lenson said of the singer who has created a look that seems to cross racial boundaries in some ways.

The professor says his course also examines the origins of rock music in founders like Little Richard, the black rocker who wore mascara and a pompadour hairdo.

Lenson says much of his course, which is taught for credit in the comparative literature department, deals with the history of rock music. His 35 students read selections from sociologists, music historians, and cultural critics.

As a rock and blues saxophonist, Lenson himself mixes traditional distinctions between academia and the world outside. He has played with bands based in Boston and western Massachusetts. His considerable talents have provided him the chance to back up such blues greats as Buddy Guy, John Lee Hooker and Junio Wells.

Lensen has been been know to carry his class notes in a guitar case.

He has also published poetry, written scholarly works and serves as president of the local chapter of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, a labor organization.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A stroke of luck awaits in the domestic or employment arena. New challenges or responsibilities may be involved. Hold the line on spending.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not sit idly at home today. Channeling your energy into community work or athletic games helps you brush up on your skills. You will feel exhilarated by how much you accomplish!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A highly productive day lies ahead. You can make big gains at your job by focusing on good public relations. Someone you thought gone forever makes a dramatic reappearance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Once you set your mind to something, your plans will fall into place. You feel drawn to someone who is very different from you. A lasting relationship will be difficult but not impossible.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work tasks provide a wonderful outlet for your creativity today. Look sharp on the job — you are in for a run of good luck! Giving someone for a helping hand lets you mend some fences. Speaking of fences, remain on the side of the fence away from the large animals — it's unnatural otherwise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Confidential chats could lead to a financial boon. Cultivate good relations with your co-workers. Stick to elegant simplicity when decorating.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Acting on impulse could land you in hot water today. Postpone making major financial decisions. Make sure your expectations about romance are realistic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An important work project can be easily advanced or completed now. A romantic lunch provides a nice midday break. Be more creative in your dealings with a stubborn relative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Curb a tendency to clash openly with people in power — it could jeopardize your reputation for good sense. Seek out people who share your concerns and plot a common strategy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An excellent day for career discussions and financial decisions. A joint venture may be signed, sealed and delivered. Influential people will stand behind you. Salute them!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You seem to know all the right things to say now. Why not vocalize your ideas and concerns to VIPs? Rave reviews and increased power could be yours before you know it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A business venture is given the green light, helping to solidify a new partnership. Show your strong support for a loved one's efforts. Take a friend to dinner and talk candidly.

What do the Huskers have UMass doesn't have? Hype. The Big 8 has a reputation as a tough conference, while the A-10 is well-known for schools threatening to abandon it. Six of eight Big 8 teams have been ranked. UMass, meanwhile, is the only A-10 school to crack the Top 25 all season long (after beating Oklahoma, no less).

The Big 8 might be overrated this year. The Big East certainly is. Who has No. 18 Georgetown beaten besides Big East schools? No one. Syracuse has lost four straight. UConn hadn't won all month until beating Providence. But the Big East has the benefit of the doubt in the basketball media because of it's reputation. As for the A-10? What do you think?

UConn is the by far the biggest beneficiary of Big East hype. The Huskies started out strong, to be fair. Then again, if like UConn, UMass had been ranked in pre-season (which is ALL media hype) before anyone had played a game, then beat up on Yale like UConn did (wheeee!), the Minutemen might still be ranked too.

There's only one sure way UMass could be ranked ahead of UConn this year. But no, Jim Calhoun was too damned scared to play us. [Insert chicken noises here]. In a perfect world, after hammering the Huskies by, let's be fair and say, 30 points, UMass would be where UConn is now — in the Top 25.

In the NCAA selection process, whims like conference reputation are replaced by actual conference won/loss statistics. Instead of asking "who are you," they ask "who did you beat?" While being ranked helps, UMass' record should get them into the Big Show barring disaster at the hands of West Virginia, Duquesne and Rhode Island.

Even the losers get lucky sometimes: When a crowd chants "it's all over" before the opening tip, you know the opposition has been through a rough year. For St. Bonaventure, the rough years just keep coming one after another, and judging by their showing against UMass, that trend shows no signs of reversing.

The Bonnies should really consider joining a conference closer to their speed. The Metro Atlantic would be perfect for the Bonnies, for instance. They would fit well in the MAAC, which is largely made up of small Catholic schools like St. Bonaventure.

Cage suggestion: Install electric prods in the paying seats to keep the fans on their feet. If you aren't going to stand, give your ticket to someone who will.

Bon appetit: Have you tried the pizza at the Cage? It's pretty good, and they'll even deliver it to where you're standing.

Women's gymnastics squeaks out victory

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Going into last Saturday's meet at Northeastern University's Cabot Gym, University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics head coach Alfie Mitchell thought if his squad could hit all its routines and keep the same intensity level it has had the past two weeks, it would have no problem beating the Lady Huskies.

Much to Mitchell's dismay, the Minutewomen were not intense, nor did they hit all their routines. Much to Mitchell's delight, his squad still squeaked out a victory, 181.10-181.00.

"It can't get any closer than this," Mitchell said of the Minutewomen's .01 point advantage. "The whole meet, from start to finish, was extremely competitive and we really didn't even perform up to par.

"What I'm so happy about," he said, "is that we can have a mediocre meet like this and still come home with a victory."

Despite its mediocrity, UMass did manage to produce some strong individual performances.

Junior Tammy Marshall had a great meet for the Minutewomen, as she won the vault (9.55), the bars (9.55) and the all-around scoring (37.7).

UMass' Margaret Furtado was impressive as well, scoring a 9.50 in the bars and a 36.40 in the all-around, good enough for fourth place overall.

Gina Demeo also performed well for UMass scoring a 9.25 in the bars to round out a team score of 45.55.

"We didn't have too many high scores so there was a lot more pressure put on us," Mitchell said. "We had to use most of our low scores that usually we are able to throw out. So, the meet was a lot closer than I would have liked."

At the University of Rhode Island's Mackal Gymnastics Center last Wednesday, UMass used momentum from the Southern Connecticut meet and a solid team performance to overcome URI, 183.25-182.10.

Their loss to the Rams two weeks ago at the Pitt Invitational meet (179.30-179.25) was still fresh in the minds of the Minutewomen so this victory was sweet indeed.

"We never should have lost to them [URI] at Pitt," said Mitchell. "If we had performed well at that meet, we should have had no problem beating them. Fortunately, the second time around, the girls came out determined to win."

Leading the way again for UMass was Marshall, who blew away the field with a 9.6 in the vault, 9.6 in the Bars and most impressively, a 9.75 in the floor routine.

Marshall also won the all-around with a 38.1.

"Tammy had a good meet as did [sophomores] Angela Jent, [Margaret] Furtado and [freshman] Heather Madden," said Mitchell.

After the first two events, UMass was trailing URI mostly because of strong performances from the WRams' Shannon Erwin (9.6 in the vault and 9.45 in the bars) and Jodi Aliberto (9.45 in the bars).

The UMass gymnasts recovered in the next two events, scoring 45.50 in the beam and 46.40 in the floor event. UMass also captured third place in the all-around as Furtado scored a 36.6.

"We just kept plugging away and finally it paid off in the end," Mitchell said. "It helped that they had a terrible performance on the beam [seven falls] and that we hit most of our floor routines.

UMass men's track loses first

Minutemen overmatched by Dartmouth, 84-43

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

Heading to Hanover, N.H. on Saturday, University of Massachusetts men's track coach Ken O'Brien knew the team's chances of running its record to 9-0 were about as good as those of St. Bonaventure beating the UMass basketball team that evening.

The Bonnies wound up losing by 37, and the UMass track team by 41, as the Dartmouth Big Green beat up on the Minutemen 84-43, dropping the Minutemen to 8-1, as they prepare for this weekend's New England Championships at Boston University.

"I'm as pleased as I can be in terms of going up against a team of that ability and losing 84-43," O'Brien said. "We didn't have a bad day. We we're just overmatched."

Dartmouth, the defending New England Outdoor Champions, won 11 of the 15 events, including a sweep of the top three spots in both the shot put and the 800-meter dash.

UMass placed first in four events, with Kevin Walters accounting for almost a quarter of the Minutemen's total points with first place finishes in the 55 and the 200.

Other first place finishers for the Minutemen included Kristian DiMatteo in the triple jump, and Joe Kourafas, who finished the regular season undefeated in the long jump.

"We had some good performances that I was really excited about," O'Brien said. "The jumping crew and sprinting crew looked really good, and they got the majority of our points."

The Minutemen's strongest event proved to be the triple jump, where the team of DiMatteo, Tom Galligani, and Andrew Yahner swept the scoring accounting for 9 of UMass' 43 points.

While UMass dominated the jumping events, its performance slipped in the middle distance and distance events, although Dartmouth boasts these as its strongest events.

"Dartmouth is a real tough team for us to look good against in the middle distance and distance events," O'Brien said. "Because they are one of the best team's in the area in those events.

"They took away some of our potential in those events," O'Brien said. "They are a tough team to match up against. They basically doubled our score, and they are basically two times as good a team as we are."

The Minutemen's next meet is this Saturday and Sunday, as they compete in the New England Championships, where O'Brien expects a top 10 finish.

Cullen joins Reid in Richmond

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Former University of Massachusetts assistant football coach and player Joe Cullen, who directed UMass' defensive line last season, accepted the position as assistant and defensive line coach at the University of Richmond yesterday.

Joe Cullen

Cullen, who was a four-year starter at nose guard for UMass from 1986 to 1989, joins former UMass head coach Jim Reid, who was named an assistant at Richmond last Friday under three-year head coach Jim Marshall.

Cullen fills the vacancy created by two Richmond coaches who departed at the end of the 1991 season.

"I'm going to love being part of it [at Richmond] and help them turn the program around," said Cullen, who began his coaching career for the Minutemen in the spring of his senior season as an undergraduate assistant.

"I decided the move was best for Joe Cullen and based it on the present situation [at UMass]," said the captain of the 1989 Minutemen. "It's best for my career."

"He's an outstanding defensive line coach," said Marshall, whose team went 2-9 last season. "And he coaches with the same enthusiasm he had when he played."

Cullen said he still would have accepted the job at Richmond had Reid decided not to go, but is now looking forward to coaching alongside his former head coach.

"People have influenced me in this profession and Coach Reid is one of them," he said. "There's nobody I'd like to work for more than Jim Reid. He's one of the reasons I got into coaching and he's had a big impact on my career."

Cullen said he knew of the openings at Richmond for some time and visited the campus last Monday.

Two seasons ago, Cullen, who was a two-time All-New England selection, was the running backs coach for the 8-2-1 Minutemen who ranked first in the Yankee Conference in team rushing and ninth in the nation.

Snubbed!

Local media and fans were certain the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team would return to the Associated Press Top 25 poll yesterday. Even Tamir "I'm getting out of here" Lipton (apologies to Dave Scott) wrote that barring "some unforseen voting," UMass' three-victory week, coupled with losses by Top 25 schools such as Syracuse, Connecticut, Florida State and Cincinatti, would propel the Minutemen into the rankings. Only UNLV has more wins than UMass among the Top 25, and it might as well play in the NBA Pacific.

But the Minutemen remained at the very edge of the glass ceiling, at No. 26. And you, your mom, your pets and the Campus Center late-night maintenance staff want to know how the hell a first-place, 22-4 team could be passed up by DePaul and Nebraska in the polls, and more incredibly, why UConn didn't fall out of the rankings for its pitiful performance the past month.

Greg Sukiennik

The problem lies in the loosely defined criteria writers use to determine whose better than who. Unlike the NCAA Tournament selection committee, which uses specific guidelines to determine team strength, the writers who vote on college polls rely on snippets of conventional wisdom mixed with equal parts of regional alliances and team/conference reputations.

Take 25th-ranked Nebraska, for example. The Cornhuskers, 17-6, play in the well-regarded Big 8 Conference while UMass plays in the Atlantic 10. Nebraska, like UMass, has had surprising success against Big 8 teams, including third-ranked Kan-

Kerrey takes lead in South Dakota

By KAREN BALL
Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. — Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska seized the lead Tuesday in South Dakota's primary, bidding to boost his standing in the Democratic presidential race. President Bush was the unopposed Republican winner, but was buffeted by a protest vote.

CNN projected a Kerrey victory based on exit polls, broadcasting the result with almost a third of the polling places still open. The same survey pointed to a close contest for second place between Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, with Paul Tsongas and Jerry Brown trailing.

Bush was alone on the Republican ballot, this time without his conservative challenger, Patrick Buchanan. A Bush victory as a foregone conclusion, but CNN said exit polling indicated as much as one-third the GOP vote could go uncommitted.

Early returns gave Kerrey 36 percent of the Democratic vote, compared to 30 percent for Harkin and 18 percent for Clinton. Tsongas and Brown trailed.

Bush was winning 69 percent of the vote. Uncommitted had 31 percent.

Kerrey campaign manager Tad Devine called the South Dakota vote an "impressive victory" and said he hoped it could be parlayed into campaign momentum in Colorado, Georgia and South Carolina, all of which vote in the next week.

Tsongas offered Kerrey congratulations. "It's obvious that the negative advertising worked, and we'll take that into consideration," he said. Tsongas got one bit of bright news — an endorsement from Gov. William Donald Schaefer one week ahead of Maryland's primary.

Front runners Tsongas and Clinton spent less time in the state than their Farm Belt rivals, relying more on television advertising to make their cases.

With 15 Democratic and 19 GOP delegates up for grabs, South Dakota marked the end of an early round of single-state nights in which few delegates were at stake.

Unlike New Hampshire, unemployment is low in South Dakota.

That reinforced the preeminence of agricultural issues in the run-up to the primary, and as senators from neighboring Nebraska and Iowa, Kerrey and Harkin depicted themselves as the best candidates for farmers.

Kerrey and Harkin criticized Tsongas in a debate televised statewide on Sunday. Kerrey targeted Tsongas for supporting votes in the Senate he said were injurious to farmers, while Harkin criticized Tsongas' support for a phased, 50-cent per gallon increase in the gasoline tax.

Kerrey, a former governor, confessed during that day that a win "would certainly help carry the campaign on."

Harkin said that win or lose he was in the race to stay. "My campaign is not about trying to figure out where I am at the moment in this race," he said.

Board of Education to question candidates

By JON MARCUS
Associated Press

BOSTON — The state Board of Education voted Tuesday to delay hiring a new education commissioner, opting instead to question finalists about their views on three educational reform proposals now under consideration.

Angry dissenters on the board accused their colleagues of shortchanging schoolchildren by leaving the position unfilled for at least another month.

The last commissioner resigned in August 1991.

"A lot of us realize that the department needs a direction," said William K. Irwin Jr., vice chairman. "Children need a direction. And that's basically what we're here for. We're here for the children."

A search committee had urged naming Norwalk, Conn. school superintendent Ralph E. Sloan to the commissioner's position. Instead, the full board voted Tuesday to postpone their final vote until March 31, and did not rule out reopening the search entirely.

"This could go on forever," Irwin said.

But Martin S. Kaplan, an attorney from Newton and a member of the education board, said, "I find it troubling that this board chose as a commissioner a person whose views in depth we do not yet know on the subject of school reform."

Three dramatic school reform proposals now are on the table, one each proposed by Gov. William Weld, the Legislature and the Massachusetts Business Alliance.

All of Weld's appointees to the Board of Education voted to press Sloan and the other finalist, Falmouth Superintendent Robert Antonucci, for their views on the governor's proposal and the competing plans.

The board members voting to end the process and install a new commissioner immediately all were appointees of former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

"To continue this process just hurts the students, hurts the educational system," said John D. Cashman, a Marblehead High School junior and the Board of Educations's student member.

For his part, Sloan did not attend the meeting Tuesday. Told by a reporter of the board's decision to extend the search, he said only: "I need to reassess my position."

Sloan said he had seen the three reform plans briefly, but "wouldn't want to comment on them now."

A Philadelphia native who moved to Salem as a small boy, Sloan attended Harvard University and served as deputy superintendent in Wellesley and superintendent in Concord.,

Sloan was widely praised by board members.

"His feet have been wet for some time," said John J. Gould, the chairman of the search committee. "He gets very high marks across the board."

Sloan, 51, also applied unsuccessfully this year for the jobs of commissioner of education in Rhode Island and Connecticut.

He would have to take a pay cut from his current $116,500-a-year salary to take the Massachusetts education commissioner position, which pays $77,546 a year.

Housing proposing GLB corridor

By TAMI MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

A proposed special interest corridor for gay, lesbian, bisexual students and allies to possibly be located in Northeast or Orchard Hill Residence Areas is being discussed by top Housing officials as a means for combating homophobia and heterosexism.

The plan is "to create a supportive environment and end the isolation gay, lesbian and bisexual students feel in a predominantly heterosexual world," said Stephanie Carnahan, residence director of Pierpont/Moore, who proposed the program.

Carnahan said the proposal was a follow-up to similar proposals of the past, including one submitted last year.

According to the proposal, known as the Special Interest Residential Program, it would encompass an academic component which would consist of either a class currently being offered in Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Studies or a one-credit colloquium focused on contemporary issues of concern to GLB students.

Anne Miller, associate director of Housing Services, said, "There are a couple of loose ends to be put into place. I'm fairly confident that those loose ends will be put into place."

Carnahan said that the questions of location and staffing were still open-ended. She has recommended a separate selection process and training for a resident assistant.

Denise Lane, a junior chemical engineering student and member of the GLB R.A. Matters group said that it makes sense to create a floor specifically to deal with heterosexism since there has always been housing to deal with racism.

"I see problems because homophobia is trendy, whereas it's less socially acceptable to be an overt racist. Having a safe space will help deal with that homophobia," Lane said.

Lane added the floor would require a strong, committed and aware R.A. and special training to deal with the unique issues that would arise.

Junior legal studies major Tom Cummings said, "It's important for the University to recognize the need for safe space for gay, lesbian and bisexual students in the residence hall system."

Carnahan obtained support signatures from students in the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Alliance and related campus organizations. Carnahan also spoke with and received signatures of support from members of the Diversity Corridor in Brett Residence Hall.

The Diversity Corridor is an already-existing SIRP that drew many gay, lesbian and bisexual students, although that was not its original purpose, because there was nowhere to have their particular needs met.

Miller said that two of Residential Educations goals are creation of community and identity development and she feels this program would connect with those two goals.

Carnahan said she hoped the creation of the SIRP called "Two in Twenty: Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Issues Program," would help the Diversity Corridor get back to its original intent which is to educate on a broader range of diversity issues.

The title refers to a study by some researchers that estimates that one in ten persons is gay, lesbian or bisexual.

John Balboni, a junior theater major said, "It could be good for community support but it could lead to separation and isolation rather than acceptance by the general populace."

It's wonderful. It's about time," said Carolyn Conrad, a senior cultural anthropology major and also a member of the GLB R.A. Matters group. Conrad also said that students she spoke with yesterday talked of moving back on campus to be a part of this program.

Felice Yeskel, director of the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns voiced her support by saying, "I'm really pleased. It will give gay, lesbian, bisexual and ally students a new option for living in a supportive context."

Ronkin's New
LSAT Premium Program:
The Best Way To Prepare For The LSAT

If you're one of the nation's 95,000 applicants determined to get into an accredited law school, you know the competition is tough. Since there are only 44,000 openings, a high score on the LSAT is crucial.

That's why Ronkin created the LSAT Premium Program which offers a choice of three varied levels of assistance.

• LSAT Preparation Course
Using the most recently updated curriculum, our 40-hour course stresses critical thinking, argument analysis and logical reasoning. Besides classroom time, our comprehensive LSAT course provides live tutorials, three diagnostic exams, three practice exams, a computer-based tutorial program, homework materials that include released LSATs, and a toll-free Dial-A-Teacher line. Two-day clinics, which are included in Ronkin's LSAT Gold and Platinum Packages, are also available for an additional fee.

• LSAT Gold Package
In addition to the 40-hour LSAT course, Ronkin's LSAT Gold Package includes our two-day LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics offered immediately prior to LSAT examination dates. These clinics concentrate on Logical Reasoning and Logic Games. The Gold Package also includes our Law School Success Program which covers law school exam preparation, legal writing, legal research, and career planning.

• LSAT Platinum Package
This plan provides everything you'll need to get into law school and to be a success. Enroll and you'll receive our LSAT Preparation Course, LSAT Intensive-Study Clinics, Law School Success Program, plus our Law School Selection and Application Assistance Programs.

So if you're looking for the best in LSAT and law school preparation programs, call The Ronkin Educational Group.

MSP, labor union supporting Story

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Amherst's Ellen Story, the Democratic candidate for the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat, gained two endorsements yesterday in her bid to fill state Sen. Stanley Rosenberg's seat in the Massachusetts House of Representatives yesterday.

In a press conference at her headquarters across from the Amherst Town Common, Story was endorsed by the Massachusetts Service Employees International Union and the Executive Board of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Tom Coish, a staff attorney at the University of Massachusetts Legal Services Center and president of the Local 509 chapter of the SEIU, said the SEIU's endorsement was based on Story's support for adequate funding of and accessibility in public higher education and progressive tax reform.

The SEIU, which has 800 members in the Amherst-Pelham District and over 10,000 statewide, only makes endorsements on a statewide level, according to Coish.

MSP Vice-President Robert Rothstein, a professor of Slavic Languages and Literature at the University, announced that the MSP's Executive Board voted last week to support Story, calling it the "obvious thing to do."

Story beat Jon Hite of Amherst by slightly over 100 votes in the Democratic primary last Tuesday.

Story will face Republican Mark Enoch of Amherst and Independent Larry Kelley, an Amherst businessman, in the March

Minorities in Israel addressed

Hillel speaker discusses challenges of coexistence

By JEREMY BORENSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

A peaceful coexistence between minorities is possible in the State of Israel, said Zeidan Atashi to a small but captivated crowd at the Hillel lounge last night.

Atashi, a Druze Israeli and former member of the Israeli Knesset who is currently a member of the Israeli mission to the United Nations, spoke on the challenges of coexistence in Israel.

"Israel is a modern liberal nation," Atashi said. "Even though it is a Jewish state there have been no attempts to restrain civil liberties. Religious freedom has been extended and secured in Israel to all in spite of conflicts."

In Israel there are two official languages and two systems of education: one is Hebrew, one is Arabic, Atashi said.

Minorities are equal under law, but "one hundred percent justice in Israel can not be found."

Although Druze, as do most Israeli citizens, serve compulsory conscription in the Israeli army, resources needed for settlements, such as water and electricity, are given to the Jewish settlements first, Atashi said.

Even in regions where Druze settlements are considerably older than newer Jewish settlements, the Jewish settlements receive first priority, he said.

The Druze are related to the Arab world by culture and language, but severed their ties with the Islamic religion one thousand years ago, Atashi explained.

In more recent times, since the clashes of the 1920s and 30s, the Druze have allied with Israel. They are not seeking a national homeland, rather a peaceful coexistence on the land, regardless of whois governing it, he said.

Today, seventeen percent of Israeli citizens are Arab Israelis, Atashi said.

"Since the beginning of Israel in 1948 when Arabs became a minority, it was a shock which they must learn to live with," he said.

"The process of Israelization was not used efficiently to integrate Arabs," he said. "More cohesion could have been created between ethnic groups."

When Arab nations accept Israel as a legitimate nation, and when Israel recognizes the Arab self-determination, then a breakthrough in the peace process can happen, Atashi said.

He further added if this multi-ethnic cooperation occurred, it could be used as an example for other Middle Eastern nations disputing over fundamentalism.

Atashi likened Israel's problems of coexistence to those of the United States where prejudice also exists.

However, he added, that peaceful coexistence is more likely to happen in a state like Israel because it is only forty-four years old and is a pluralistic society where all citizens are equal under law.

Bad things, good people topic of Rabbi and author Kushner

DANA L. FORRAR
Collegian Staff

"There is only one question which really matters: why do bad things happen to good people?"

Why was Martin Luther King, Jr. assassinated? Why was Hitler allowed to persecute millions of Jews? Why was Christa McAuliffe chosen for that ill-fated launch? Why do roses die?

Rabbi Harold S. Kushner will embark on a narrative journey discussing the topic of why good people suffer, tonight at Bowker Auditorium.

He will discuss his two bestselling books, When Bad Things Happen to Good People and When All You've Ever Wanted Isn't Enough. The speech is welcome to everyone and is free.

Kushner is a native of New York and now has a synagogue in Natick, Mass. He has been speaking for years and this will be his first time speaking here at UMass.

Although Kushner is a rabbi, his books are more philosophical and insightful than they are religious. He never becomes overbearing. His topic is as broad as the horizon, dealing with loss and suffering as everyone has, and something is to be gained by any who reads or listens.

The speech, brought to UMass by the Distinguished Visitors Program and Hillel, is an opportunity to see one of the widest read self-help authors, along with Robert Fulghum and L. Ron Hubbard.

Fulghum, a favorite on campuses nationwide, has often been compared to Kushner and therefore gives us the opportunity to see the real thing. It's like getting a Coke when you've been drinking Pepsi.

Kushner's first book is summarily about the death of his son Aaron, who, at the age of three, was diagnosed as having progeria, commonly known as "rapid aging."

It is dealing with the pain and loss, and his restructuring of his personal beliefs accordingly that fires the soul into pushing back the tears and awakening a smile.

Kushner's speech won't answer these questions for you, but he'll offer you a path to your own answers. He won't prolong the death of that rose but remind you to remember its beautiful life.

Doors will open at 7:30 and Kushner will begin around 8 p.m.

The Distinguished Visitors Program is a registered student organization which has brought such speakers as John Updike and Ralph Nader to UMass.

Intermarriage focus of group

by JULIE ROSS
Collegian Staff
and
DAVID MOHEBAN
Collegian Correspondent

Growing up the child of a Jewish-Christian intermarriage in a predominantly Christian neighborhood, left Lisa Lipshires without a strong sense of religious identity, and feelings of not belonging.

"I didn't have any inner conviction," said Lipshires. "I didn't have a community that I knew of that I felt in connection with to fall back on for support."

Born to a Jewish father and a Catholic mother, both of whom abandoned their religious upbringing in college, Lipshires, 35, of Northampton, considered herself an Atheist until the age of 23.

As a child, Lipshires never developed a strong sense of religious identity, and as a result she recalls feeling paralyzed when other children made anti-Semitic remarks. "I didn't know how to cope with anti-Semitism," she said. "I didn't have that positive feeling, that identity of being Jewish." She adds that although she thought of herself as half-Jewish culturally, she was afraid to identify herself as a Jew because of the anti-Semitism she had internalized. "I wasn't sure how positive it was to be a Jew," she said.

Recently, Lipshires has joined a support/rap group for the children of Jewish-Christian intermarriage, and has rediscovered some of her religious identities.

The support group is facilitated by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, Director of Hillel at the University of Massachusetts, and focuses on participants, their lives, and their search for identity. It next meets at Hillel today at 2:45 p.m.

For children of Jewish-Christian intermarriage, it is not uncommon for issues such as lack of identity, confusion over which religion to choose, or feelings of not belonging to present themselves, said Perlmutter, who has a masters degree in social work.

Some children of intermarriage have a clear Jewish or Christian identity, while others are happy with a mixed identity, Perlmutter said. For those who are confused about their identities, the group has been very helpful.

"Before I joined the support group I didn't feel like I could know about Judaism or Jewishness — I felt it was closed to me." Lipshires said, adding that she is currently learning what it means culturally to be a Jew.

"I do feel like I'm reclaiming my Jewish identity, maybe not religiously, but at least culturally."

During the past century, there has been a steady increase in the number of Jewish-Christian intermarriages, according to Tamara Barbasch, who is currently researching this subject. Barbasch estimates that at there are now 375,000 Jewish-Christian couples in the United States, more than half of whom married in the last 20 years. As a result, the number of children of Jewish-Christian intermarriage has dramatically increased.

Barbasch is currently looking for children of Jewish-Christian intermarriage between the ages of 18 and 23 to participate in a research study. Those interested should call 584-1038.

17 general election.

The Amherst-Pelham seat was vacated when Rosenberg was elected to the state senate last fall to fill former state Sen. John Olver's seat. Olver is currently serving in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Story called both the endorsements "special," noting that both had personal meaning for her.

"If I worked on campus [at UMass], SEIU would be the union I'd be in," said Story, who is on leave from her job of 18 years at the Western Massachusetts Family Council.

Story also noted that much of her family has been involved in public higher education, making the MSP endorsement important to her.

The MSP represents approximately 1,400 faculty and librarians at the University.

• Is Lou Roe the Freshman of the Year in the Atlantic 10? You get the feeling Coach John Calipari believes so.

• I had a brief visit with the $96,000-man, David Bischoff, the Dean of the School of Physical Education and I almost felt sorry for him, almost. As he patiently explained the power structure of the decision-makers at this university, I got the impression that Bischoff was just as confused as I am about the current economic crisis facing the athletic department.

I truly believe that there is just one human who actually understands how things are supposed to work and no one can find this person.

I had to ask Bischoff the all important question, "Do you like your job?"

"It's a lot better to build than to take away," Bischoff said.

Unfortunately most of the recent decisions have taken away more than just programs and funds. Good luck in Richmond Jim Reid.

• So what if the basketball team didn't crack the Top 25. The situation was too similar to their debut at No. 25 earlier this season. They played West Virginia that week and lost. The team travels to Morgantown Thursday and without the pressure of the Top 25 moniker it will be much easier to get the "W."

The real recognition will come with a fourth or fifth seed in the tournament.

This may be weird, but I think UMass needs a loss in one of the next three games. Why? A 12-game winning streak (A-10 champs) would be too much pressure going into the tournament.

"The Red Hot Minutemen," and "Can Anyone Stop this Cinderella Team?" will be the headlines and that's not what this team needs.

• Roger Clemens will be at "The Velvet Elvis" in Houston tonight for a charity event and that is the reason he is not with the Red Sox in Winter Haven. Could be a rough year for new skipper Butch Hobson.

• With Carlos Quintana out for four months or more, it's time for Mo Vaughn to take the stage at first base.

• Jerry Tarkanian resigned as head coach at UNLV and now he wants to rescind his resignation. The program is sinking faster than Will Herndon's shorts and yet Tark still wants to be a part of it.

• Imagine the lines at The Cage if the A-10 final is held here in Amherst. Coach Cal might have set a dangerous precedent when he opened The Cage at midnight for the distribution of Temple tickets.

• Lisa Olson settled out of court with the New England Patriots and Victor Kiam had the gall to say he thought the Patriots would have won the case. Olson is in Australia now and Kiam remains in the U.S. There is no justice.

• Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on "Joe Walsh for President."

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Bush is a lot like Clouseau

In this, an election year, President Bush may be in any ways like Blake Edwards' infamous chief inspector Clouseau. Yes, it is true that, for political reasons or not, he is finally having to recognize that there is something drastically wrong with the country and that something needs to be done. He and his merry band of trickle-downers have set out on the case and are trying to figure out why the prophecy according to economist Arthur Laffer failed so miserably during that wild and crazy decade of me, myself and I called the 1980s.

Jeff Atwater

The clearest suggestion so far by Mr. Bush is that America doesn't need any "quick fix" solutions to jump start a sagging economy and that "prosperity is just around the corner." Although this may seem like hogwash to an average, wage earning American, Mr. Bush might just be right, except for the arrogant bit on prosperity. The country does have potential for prosperity, but unfortunately it is not just around the corner and our infrastructure will need to undergo change in removing the ever growing discrepancies between the different income brackets. It will also take a difference in attitude of seeing people not just in dollar terms and outputs in an economic trash disposal. We need growth in our education systems and other long term investments and less concentration on short term monetary profits. The interesting thing about Bush's seeming lack of interest in the domestic situation is, like Clouseau, he is oblivious to the actions around him, but might be able to pull the country out of a rut with even some marginal cooperation from Congress.

Even though most Americans feel Bush doesn't pay enough attention to the domestic situation, most fail to also realize that he could be helping America more in the long run with his open foreign relations. Now with the EC starting to take shape and the current trade disputes with Asia and Japan, a strong, positive force for continued foreign relations is more pertinent now if America wants to hold onto its portion of the world trade pie. The American people must come out of the 1950s and see that there is no more exclusive U.S. economy, but that we are just a part of the ever increasingly linked global community. However, with isolationist Democrats to the left and the more conservative Republicans to the right, the Bush administration has to be careful not to succumb to the political pressure of those advocating a radical, isolationist "America First" program. It may seem like the "right" thing to do to jump on the nationalistic bandwagon thinking that this action will turn the economy around. According to the book of diplomacy authored by David Duke, there is no other method. The truth is that we could buy all the American autos, clothing, Big Macs, flags and apple pie we want to and it wouldn't make a real big difference, except we might be a little more arrogant and ignorant. The simple reasoning for this is isolationism sends out negative signals to our trading partners which, with the current balance of trade, is not a road to healthy recovery. We can clearly not afford to lose valuable export revenue.

A couple of weeks ago the Japanese noted something very interesting about the U.S. labor force. The statement asserted that average U.S. workers were extremely inefficient due to the fact that 30% of them are illiterate. This struck quite a chord amongst Americans and spurred such eloquent statements as "Who do them Japs think they is," or "Where the hell do them little rice burners get off?" To pacify these people our wonderful bureaucracy in Washington D.C. tried to justify our position by saying that our experts estimate only 22 percent of the labor force is illiterate. No, we wouldn't want Japan to exaggerate the situation. The Japanese statement could be just the wake up call that the U.S. needs. Ironically this "call" might not be heard because the same people making the eloquent statements about Japan are the same people who are picking up unemployment checks and driving off in their Isuzu 4x4s plastered with "America's #1" bumper stickers. If we want a real "America First" program, we must upgrade our educational institutions and give tax credits to corporations and households interested not in short term profit goals but rather in growth and development. The one thing to remember is that hate and ignorance thrive on economic hardship. If it isn't Japan, it is someone else. In other words, we shouldn't take our ball home because we don't want to play anymore. It would be much more beneficial to learn the new game and adjust with the times. True, fairer trade is needed, but growth is much more needed. This is why Bush might be the lesser of two evils in an election year when we can only ask "Where the hell is FDR when we need him?"

ANY QUESTIONS?
DOES THIS NARROW THE FIELD?

Sometimes identity is lost in this college for the masses

I am usually the kind of person who deliberately "burns their bridges" after crossing them. Perhaps it is not always the best way, because you never know when you might need to go back. I prefer going forward, even if that means taking the longer road. It builds character, or, at least patience. However, I think this time I may have to make an exception. Simply because I have very possibly made a huge (but not entirely unfixable) mistake.

I transferred into UMass because I needed a change, a different experience, and I wanted the chance to seize some opportunities that might not otherwise have been available to me. I don't want to sound like the rest of the slew of people who throw names and degrade this university, because that is not what I wish to get across. I just want you to stop and think for a minute.

Certainly UMass has it's good points, which are in fact pretty good when you think about them collectively. UMass has several different colleges; some of these offer majors taught by fine professors known nationwide. That's impressive. There are tons of programs, clubs, organizations, lectures by famous people and activities that can open up your mind and enrich the general population with ideas and experiences. How many colleges do you know off of the top of your head that bring students the chance to see respected greats like Ray Charles, Bobby McFerrin and John Denamore? What about our huge library? How about the Collegian? I would not be here now talking to all of you if this wasn't one of the largest circulating college newspapers. Of course, I could not forget those excellent Earthfoods bagels.

Lorrie Cozzens

These are all things that bring definition and diversity to this university. But on the other hand, I can not help but think I made a blunder in coming here when I decided to transfer. "Why," you ask, "did you just list all those nice things if you don't like it here?" I did not expect my first semester to go great, because I figured there was a necessary adjustment time. I did not expect it to bomb, either. I will say that this is undoubtedly a college for the masses. This is not the place to be if you're an individual who will not just blend in with any group. While it is commendable on being free to be who you want, that identity gets lost in the crowd. Those crowds can be demanding as well. Every group is after recognition, or power or something. No one can let someone else have an opinion, idea or preference different from their own. Why doesn't everyone relax?

Then we have our faculty. They are overworked, understaffed and underpaid. I'm sure they try to be as helpful and nice as possible, but I can see how it is easy to get irritable. I would be, too. The library's programs and essential services are being continually slashed. Tuition is going up and up. Classes are getting less and less personal. Nothing matters here anymore.

I'm asking all of you, especially those who transferred in, are you really happy with the state of being UMass is in? Please feel free to drop me a line, because I may follow up on this. I'm asking because I am seriously thinking of going back to the school where I started at. I'm not student #XYZ729 there. I'd transfer back because I did something worthy there: I made a difference.

Signing off...

Proudly anonymous

There's something wrong with an editorial page that fails to recognize the need for privacy under certain circumstances. I'm referring to Gayle Long's column, "Anonymous or Cowardly?" (Feb. 24).

Ms. Long forgets the primary reason why letters are written anonymously: protection of privacy, not just for the author, but for all the people involved. I have seen the letters written on rape, abortion, harassment and bigotry and I have written one of them. I wrote my letter anonymously because I didn't want to betray the confidence and privacy of the persons involved. Honestly, I didn't ask their permission and I couldn't sacrifice identification for integrity. I won't specify which letter I wrote, but any fool can see I have been personally involved. I wanted to express my opinion in the fairest, most effective way; it was the message, not the author that was important. I wasn't after any credit nor trying to escape any blame. In fact, I was disappointed that the newspaper didn't print any letters in response to mine. I have no "inferiority complex" about writing, nor am I afraid of my writing or of other people's opinions. I've written several letters to this paper over my career here and will probably write more. So for you, Gayle, here's my "John Hancock".

Arts section is weak

I have been reading the Collegian for three years. As an arts management major, I am especially interested in the Arts and Living section. Unfortunately, I feel there is a lack of coverage of this material. Where are the reviews for residential gallery exhibitions? The residential arts galleries, Hampden Gallery, Wheeler Gallery and Augusta Savage Gallery provide students with the opportunity for exposing themselves to outstanding visual and performing art displays. The Collegian should show more of an interest in these places and the events they offer. How about a "UMass Arts" section?

If the Collegian wishes to call itself a TRUE daily newspaper, it should show more of an interest for all diverse activities and events, especially an interest in Residential Arts.

Bobby McFerrin not done justice

We felt compelled to respond to a review written by Deric Blaire in Tuesday's Collegian of the performance given by Bobby McFerrin and Voicestra. The fact that it was poorly written is merely secondary to the fact that it lacked insightful content and sensitive appreciation. We can't help but wonder, Deric where were you Thursday night?

Blaire covered the factual elements, yet failed to convey the intensity of McFerrin's powerful performance and its inspiring effect on the audience. Blaire's review would have been slightly more effective had he invested less energy on McFerrin's wardrobe and more instead on the real details of the concert. How about the originality of "sound?" Or perhaps the individual performances?

The reader is left empty, without a clue as to what actually took place. We didn't like the concluding image of a "peering" mob on stage left gawking in the dust. Rather, we found ourselves in the absolute last row of the auditorium dancing and singing and clapping as though we were on stage, among those who needed to embrace the experience even closer.

New World Order: a way of war and a way of life

"It is an anoma' ' of war that those who have suffered the most have been hea d from the least."
["Life Under an Air War," Harper Books]

Or have received the least attention from the perpetrators of their suffering.

Part I: An agrarian society — Laos, 1964 - 1969

In northeastern Laos, the central Xieng Khaouang province, lies an elevated plateau called the Plain of Jars. In Sep. 1969, the 2,000 year-old society of the Plain of Jars disappeared.

This was the result of a new form of warfare, conducted by the United States, ignored by the media, researched little by academics and war historians, and almost completely unknown to the majority of Americans.

Named after large clay receptacles believed to be the funeral urns of an ancient race, its natural resources and strategic location made the Plain of Jars one of the most fought-over areas in South-East Asia, throughout history right down to this century.

Eager to fill the power vacuum left by retreating French colonial forces in 1954, the United States decided to seize the Plain of Jars for espionage against China and sabotage in Vietnam.

There were two obstacles — a peasant population of a quarter million, and elements of Pathet Lao ("nation of Laos") guerillas.

The solution was chilling in its magnitude. In an air war, from 1964 to 1969, 150,000 tons of bombs were dropped by 40,000 sorties. In 1969 alone, the tonnage of bombs dropped exceeded that over Nazi-occupied Europe in any World War II year.

Nothing was spared — homes, schools, pagodas, warehouses, farms, livestock, and civilians were subjected to a merciless hail of high explosives, fragmentation bombs, anti-personnel bomb pellets, napalm, strafing, white phosphorus, and toxic defoliants. By 1968, the entire infrastructure of society was obliterated.

In a manner similar to the herding of survivors of the Native American genocides into "reservations," the few tens of thousands of survivors were crammed into concentration camps ringed by barbed wires, dubbed "strategic hamlets" or "restoration zones."

The Plain of Jars earned the distinction of being the first society in history to be victimized by a new form of warfare — near-total destruction and demoralization of a civilian society through a massive air war on its entire social infrastructure.

It was not the last.

Part II: An industrial society — Iraq, 1991

The Gulf War was fought — pick your reasons — to defend Saudi Arabia, liberate Kuwait, protect freedom everywhere, control the world's oil reserves, safeguard American jobs, etc.

Nonetheless, Operation Desert Nintendo was one of the most barbaric and cowardly wars of all.

110,000 sorties pounded the Iraqi civilian support infrastructure out of existence. Facilities for day-to-day amenities of civilian life were deliberately and systematically annihilated. For Iraq, one of the most industrialized Third World states, the results were "near apocalyptic," in the words of a U.N. team. Iraq was bombed back into the previous century.

Madanmohan Rao

The reality on the ground today is numbing. Close to 300,000 Iraqis dead. 100,000 children dead in 1991 alone. One million children, or one third of all children in Iraq, malnourished. More than half the drinking water contaminated with fecal matter.

Tripling of typhoid and quadrupling of diarrheal disease cases. No soap to wash the blood in maternity wards. Shortages of medical supplies. 90 percent unemployment. Poverty levels approaching India. Wages among the lowest on earth.

The United States blames this on Saddam, but maintains the embargo to try to blackmail Iraqis to oust him.

And yet, a recent report from a visiting U.S. professor reveals great popular support for Saddam, and commendations from international organizations for Ba'athist relief measures.

Still the people of Iraq pay the price of defiance: death. Iraq is not the first society to meet this horrendous fate through a U.S. air war, the newest form of mass murder.

AP photo

Iraqis gather for water around a Red Cross tanker in the village of Medina in southern Iraq last Saturday. There are acute water shortges in Iraq due to damaged waterpipes caused by allied bombing during the War.

It will certainly not be the last.

Part III: The United States of America

This is not just another tale of death and destruction. This is not a dry, academic exercise comparing two instances of warfare, or predicting future onslaughts on the Third World.

This is an indictment of the people of the United States of America, who enjoy the fruits of their country's actions, but do not care to even know the cost of those actions.

Let's begin with the Happy Valley. The time for yellow ribbons, flags, protests, teach-ins — has come and gone.

Having recovered from the worry, or duty, of facing the bullet, Americans turn to their next priority, the wallet.

Is there any real interest in the aftermath of the war?

A recent presentation on the situation in Iraq by members of the Harvard team which visited Iraq twice last year was attended by less than two dozen people, a mere handful of them students.

Where are the political science and history departments? What can those terms really mean to those able to ignore all this?

And how about the readership of this august publication, a free daily with a circulation of 17,000 in 9 towns? So far, on the anniversary of the war, not one letter has been received from any reader about any aspect of the war, let alone its civilian toll.

As for the Third World community here, its deafening silence speaks volumes, but more on that in a later edition.

It would be arrogant, self-righteous, and improper for those of us from the outside to ask Americans to come to terms with their responsibility for their country's actions.

We leave it up to them to continue to do what they do best — lead the good ol' American way of life, or believe that any form of dissent absolves them, or try to convince us that some of them are actually as underprivileged as the masses in the Third World, or point fingers at their government, their military, their media, their educational system, and their economic condition.

The New World Order has refined innovative and diabolical forms of warfare which are characterized by scant regard for not just the legal and moral norms of humanity, but any commonsense notions of decency.

Simultaneously, the citizens of the empire display a chilling lack of desire to learn the cost the preservation of their lifestyle incurs on the peoples of the Third World.

The ongoing Gulf War is definitely not the first time that Americans have refused to admit tacit complicity in the unspeakable war crimes committed in their name.

It will certainly not be the last.

Israeli state terrorism, 'without pity or remorse'

Appearing out of nowhere on a quiet road in the Lebanese hillsides, Israeli helicopter gunships swooped down on a small group of cars, blasted them into charred wrecks of twisted metal, and flew off from whence they came.

Inside the burning vehicles, Sayyid Abbas Musawi, at least six of his bodyguards, his wife Siham and his five year old son Hussein were roasted alive. The sheer horror of the murders shocked even the war hardened Lebanese public, with television stations declining to show the grisly remains of the cleric and his family, particularly the "incinerated torso, like a charred log" of the five-year-old Hussein.

Israeli government spokesman Yossi Olmert gloated the next day, Feb. 17, on BBC World Service that Israel would continue to do what it pleased, "without pity or remorse," boasting that the terrorist attack was premeditated and deliberate.

Following an exchange of artillery fire, Israeli troops launched an assault from within Israeli-occupied south Lebanon, lashing out at scores of Shi'a villages, killing dozens of innocents, and driving at least 100,000 terrified civilians before them, fleeing from the all too familiar Iron Fist of Israel.

Israeli tanks smashed through U.N. barricades, shooting two Fijian peacekeepers and beating others. 30 villages were shelled in one day alone. The home of another cleric, Sheikh Izzidin, was rocketed, severely injuring his 12-year-old daughter. For the Lebanese, it was yet another encounter with the ruthlessness of Israeli colonial behavior and state terrorism.

Not surprisingly, this cowardly act of murder was greeted with howls of delight in the United States. After all, went the logic, isn't this Musawi guy just a terrorist himself who deserved to get his. His organization, Hizballah, is held in the United States to be an incomprehensibly and irrationally anti-American group, driven by religious dementia, anti-Western fervor and sheer bloodlust.

In fact, Americans know almost nothing of Hizballah, its history, mission or worldview, and are unlikely to be enlightened by the plethora of hysterical, racist "terrorism experts."

But, ironically, this organization that Americans and Israelis so despise, is, in part at least, their own creation, a product of and response to the incredible abuse that the Lebanese people have suffered at their hands. Historical context explains all.

Hizballah was established in 1982, primarily as a reaction to the savage violence of the U.S.-backed Israeli assault on Lebanon.

June 1982, without warning or provocation, Israel began an intense bombing campaign against Lebanon, escalating into a full scale military invasion that remains one of the most brutal in recent history. In an attempt to smash organized Palestinian national resistance, and at least as importantly, to seize control of the precious Litani river that it had long coveted, Israel killed more than 20,000 men, women and children, injuring 30,000 and displacing 750,000. South Lebanon was devastated, the cities of Tyre and Sidon destroyed, and numerous atrocities committed.

Beirut, one of the world's great cities, was subjected to one of the great seiges of modern times, cut off from water, food and electricity, and bombed day and night by land, sea and air.

Resistance forces evacuated the city on agreement that the Israelis would not occupy it. The Israelis promptly broke their word and presided over an infamous massacre of thousands of Palestinian civilians "protected" by U.S. guarantees. U.S. marines were sent into Beirut as the Israelis withdrew, and became full participants in the war when the USS New Jersey began pounding villages with shells as large as Volkswagens.

It was at this stage that various Shi'a groups, threatened by the formation of a "national salvation committee" they did not trust, needing a vehicle to express their pro-Iranian sentiments, and ready to struggle against the occupation forces of Israel (still there), and the U.S. marines (now gone), formed Hizballah.

Elements of the Da'wa party, alienated members of the pro-Syrian Amal movement and a group of Najaf-trained scholars led by Sayyid Abbas Musawi joined to form the new group. Their spiritual leader was and remains Ayatollah Muhammed Fadlallah.

To fight the occupying forces, Hizballah established the Islamic Resistance Forces, which have since boldly carried the fight against Israel in Israeli-occupied south Lebanon, earning the eternal gratitude of all patriotic Lebanese. Contrary to the typically false impression given by the Western press, the IRF has confined itself to defending the sovereignty of Lebanon, and until the murder of Sayyid Abbas, never attempted to cross the border or attack Israel itself.

Since the 1982 horrors, Israel continues to occupy south Lebanon, brutalize its inhabitants, many of whom have fled, and kidnap hundreds of Lebanese hostages, including countless innocent civilians. It also has abducted scores of U.N. workers, of whom dozens remain held hostage. It has established one of the world's most brutal and notorious prisons, Khiyam, in south Lebanon.

In the process, Israel has built up one of the most impressive records of state terrorism extant. Whatever the terrorist account of Hizballah, or related groups, its record can scarcely compare. There is no difference between a bomb planted in a civilian area by a "terrorist" (read Third Worlder), and a bomb dropped on a civilian area by an American or Israeli F-16.

Not that the Americans and Israelis are averse to planting bombs as well as dropping them. In a 1985 terrorist attack on the apartment building where Shi'a spiritual leader Fadlallah lived, the CIA murdered 80 innocents and injured over 200. He survived.

Simply, the litany of Israeli and American terrorism in Lebanon, and the rest of the Middle East, is both too voluminous to recount and has a quality and quantity of its own. Is the U.S. not holding the entire nation of Iraq hostage at this very moment?

Obviously, as long as the U.S. and/or Israel continue to abuse and victimize the Arabs peoples, they are liable to experience resistance of all kinds, including their own terrorist tactics.

However, since this enmity is clearly the result of a long and agonizing history of colonial abuse, it is to be expected that tensions will decrease if and when the state terrorism abates.

In the words of Hizballah spiritual leader Fadlallah: "I am against violence, but what can you do when violence is imposed on you? American policy is viewed as one of the region's major impediments to freedom and independence. We reject American policy in its disdain of people's interests and in its protection of dictatorial regimes. We are not against the American state or the American people. We differentiate between our rejection of American policy and our respect for the American people.

"We could be friends of the U.S. if its view of human rights in the world evolves. If the world acts on the basis of mutual interests and justice, there could be a new order where people are together in love and cooperation, and for peace instead of war."

HSCN's crazily entertaining

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to yet another installment of the Campus Cable Connection. This week, there are so many flicks you won't want to miss. Then again, there are those you'll be sure that you DO want to miss. So keep it tuned here for my own personal picks and pans. Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, Feb. 26.

The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the Eighth Dimension (a.k.a Buckaroo Banzai) — Peter Weller, John Lithgow, Ellen Barkin, Jeff Goldblum. Bizarre cult hit about a hero who's a physicist, rock star, surgeon, rocket car driver, and a government troubleshooter. Whew! It's somewhat hard to follow, and not particularly enjoyable, but it's kinda fun if you like that type of movie. **

Armed and Dangerous — John Candy, Eugene Levy, Robert Loggia. It's too bad these stars were wasted on such a lame script. Sigh. Candy and Levy play two guys who end up leaving their old jobs to work as security guards. They get involved in a tangled, yet ridiculously stupid plot, but some parts are amusing. *1/2

Boyz N The Hood — Ice Cube, Cuba Gooding, Jr., Morris Chestnut, Larry Fishburne. A touching, down to earth film about a father-son relationship as it endures time as well as negative and positive outside influences. It addresses (tastefully) the issues of AIDS, drugs, and street violence. A top choice movie. ****

Children of Paradise — Jean-Louis Barrault, Arletty, Pierre Brasseur. A delightful and wonderful love story of a beautiful woman and a pantomime. You'll smile, you'll cry, and you'll want to see it again. Barrault is magic. ****

Coming to America — Eddie Murphy, Arsenio Hall, James Earl Jones. Surprising role-reversal for Murphy, as no four letter words emerge from his mouth! He's a sweet prince from a royal family in Africa who decides that he wants to be his own person and choose his own wife. Arsenio is hysterical, and Murphy is charming (did I really just use that word to describe Eddie?). Anyway, you can't miss it. Oh, and don't forget to look for the cameo appearances of two roles from Trading Places. 1/2

The Grifters — John Cusack, Anjelica Huston, Annette Bening. I give Cusack credit; his roles are getting much more challenging as the years go by. He is wonderful in this film about a small-time professional con artist who'll do just about anything to make a buck. Huston (as Cusack's mother) is so sly, she seems to just ooze across the screen. Beware of the ending scene — it's a shocker! An all-around cinematic masterpiece. ****

The Odd Couple — Walter Matthau, Jack Lemmon. Based on Neil Simon's play about two divorced men living together. They don't write 'em like this anymore! (Made into a TV series.) ****

Regarding Henry — Harrison Ford, Annette Bening. Ford is a man obsessed with his career who finds little time for his family but is engaged in an affair when he gets shot in a convenience store. He loses his memory and must relearn how to read, write, etc., and he turns into a really nice guy. A film that grabs the heart and doesn't let go. ****

Roxanne — Steve Martin, Daryl Hannah, Rick Rossovich. Call me a softie, but the song that plays when the ending credits roll does something to me every single time I watch it. I cry every time. This movie is a modern version of Cyrano De Bergerac with Martin as a large-nosed fire chief and Hannah as a beautiful, blonde astronomer. The film is sweet and romantic, but it misses something along the way that I can't quite put my finger on. An enjoyable effort nonetheless. ***

Stand By Me — Wil Wheaton, River Phoenix, Corey Feldman. Has anyone out there NOT seen this movie? It's actually based on a novella by Stephen King called "The Body," and I'm told that it is a true story. If you don't know the plot, call me, and I'll tell you. And don't you agree that River Phoenix was much cuter at thirteen than he is now? 1/2

The Producers — Zero Mostel, Gene Wilder, Kenneth Mars. One of director Mel Brooks' satirical triumphs about a scheming producer (Mostel) who cons an

Last Saturday night, Feb. 22, Southwest's Hampden Theatre once again transformed into the "Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Cafe." Anyone expecting the usual hot java and cool comedy was presented instead with salty pretzels and deep reflection.

Each of the three performers used a different means of expressing their experiences within the gay community.

The first performance, a senior thesis written by Hampshire College student Cara Page and directed by Monica Slade, was titled "In the Blood of Black Women."

Page used song and the spoken word to declare that Black women "carry, we lead, we remember. . . our blood sisters. . . our blood brothers. . . We were never meant to survive. . . [Yet] the physical pain. . . makes us stronger. . . Our spirit endures."

Five Black women made these declarations on stage, each holding a candle, each carrying a legacy, each capable of passing on that legacy to the next generation.

The next person to take the stage was Steven Riel, who read some satirical poems from his upcoming book of gay poems How To Dream (Amherst Writers and Artists' Press, 1992).

Each poem expressed his feelings about growing up gay. One poem, titled "Almost Sisters," centered around his need for acceptance and wholeness.

"How you kept my secret in the basement [fashioning make-believe gowns]. . . I don't need your

New World Order: a way of war and a way of life

"It is an anomaly of war that those who have suffered the most have been heard from the least."
["Life Under an Air War," Harper Books]

Or have received the least attention from the perpetrators of their suffering.

Part I: An agrarian society — Laos, 1964 - 1969

In northeastern Laos, the central Xieng Khaouang province, lies an elevated plateau called the Plain of Jars. In Sep. 1969, the 2,000 year-old society of the Plain of Jars disappeared.

This was the result of a new form of warfare, conducted by the United States, ignored by the media, researched little by academics and war historians, and almost completely unknown to the majority of Americans.

Named after large clay receptacles believed to be the funeral urns of an ancient race, its natural resources and strategic location made the Plain of Jars one of the most fought-over areas in South-East Asia, throughout history right down to this century.

Eager to fill the power vacuum left by retreating French colonial forces in 1954, the United States decided to seize the Plain of Jars for espionage against China and sabotage in Vietnam.

There were two obstacles — a peasant population of a quarter million, and elements of Pathet Lao ("nation of Laos") guerillas.

The solution was chilling in its magnitude. In an air war, from 1964 to 1969, 150,000 tons of bombs were dropped by 40,000 sorties. In 1969 alone, the tonnage of bombs dropped exceeded that over Nazi-occupied Europe in any World War II year.

HSCN's crazily entertaining

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hello, movie lovers, and welcome to yet another installment of the Campus Cable Connection. This week, there are so many flicks you won't want to miss. Then again, there are those you'll be sure that you DO want to miss. So keep it tuned here for my own personal picks and pans. Now, here are the movies that will be shown beginning on Wednesday, Feb. 26.

The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the Eighth Dimension (a.k.a Buckaroo Banzai) — Peter Weller, John Lithgow, Ellen Barkin, Jeff Goldblum. Bizarre cult hit about a hero who's a physicist, rock star, surgeon, rocket car driver, and a government troubleshooter. Whew! It's somewhat hard to follow, and not particularly enjoyable, but it's kinda fun if you like that type of movie. **

Armed and Dangerous — John Candy, Eugene Levy, Robert Loggia. It's too bad these stars were wasted on such a lame script. Sigh. Candy and Levy play two guys who end up leaving their old jobs to work as security guards. They get involved in a tangled, yet ridiculously stupid plot, but some parts are amusing. *1/2

Boyz N The Hood — Ice Cube, Cuba Gooding, Jr., Morris Chestnut, Larry Fishburne. A touching, down to earth film about a father-son relationship as it endures time as well as negative and positive outside influences. It addresses (tastefully) the issues of AIDS, drugs, and street violence. A top choice movie. ****

Children of Paradise — Jean-Louis Barrault, Arletty, Pierre Brasseur. A delightful and wonderful love story of a beautiful woman and a pantomime. You'll smile, you'll cry, and you'll want to see it again. Barrault is magic. ****

Coming to America — Eddie Murphy, Arsenio Hall, James Earl Jones. Surprising role-reversal for Murphy, as no four letter words emerge from his mouth! He's a sweet prince from a royal family in Africa who decides that he wants to be his own person and choose his own wife. Arsenio is hysterical, and Murphy is charming (did I really just use that word to describe Eddie?). Anyway, you can't miss it. Oh, and don't forget to look for the cameo appearances of two roles from Trading Places. 1/2

The Grifters — John Cusack, Anjelica Huston, Annette Bening. I give Cusack credit; his roles are getting much more challenging as the years go by. He is wonderful in this film about a small-time professional con artist who'll do just about anything to make a buck. Huston (as Cusack's mother) is so sly, she seems to just ooze across the screen. Beware of the ending scene — it's a shocker! An all-around cinematic masterpiece. ****

The Odd Couple — Walter Matthau, Jack Lemmon. Based on Neil Simon's play about two divorced men living together. They don't write 'em like this anymore! (Made into a TV series.) ****

Regarding Henry — Harrison Ford, Annette Bening. Ford is a man obsessed with his career who finds little time for his family but is engaged in an affair when he gets shot in a convenience store. He loses his memory and must relearn how to read, write, etc., and he turns into a really nice guy. A film that grabs the heart and doesn't let go. ****

Roxanne — Steve Martin, Daryl Hannah, Rick Rossovich. Call me a softie, but the song that plays when the ending credits roll does something to me every single time I watch it. I cry every time. This movie is a modern version of Cyrano De Bergerac with Martin as a large-nosed fire chief and Hannah as a beautiful, blonde astronomer. The film is sweet and romantic, but it misses something along the way that I can't quite put my finger on. An enjoyable effort nonetheless. ***

Stand By Me — Wil Wheaton, River Phoenix, Corey Feldman. Has anyone out there NOT seen this movie? It's actually based on a novella by Stephen King called "The Body," and I'm told that it is a true story. If you don't know the plot, call me, and I'll tell you. And don't you agree that River Phoenix was much cuter at thirteen than he is now? 1/2

The Producers — Zero Mostel, Gene Wilder, Kenneth Mars. One of director Mel Brooks' satirical triumphs about a scheming producer (Mostel) who cons an

LBGA Cafe

By WENDY JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Last Saturday night, Feb. 22, Southwest's Hampden Theatre once again transformed into the "Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Cafe." Anyone expecting the usual hot java and cool comedy was presented instead with salty pretzels and deep reflection.

Each of the three performers used a different means of expressing their experiences within the gay community.

The first performance, a senior thesis written by Hampshire College student Cara Page and directed by Monica Slade, was titled "In the Blood of Black Women."

Page used song and the spoken word to declare that Black women "carry, we lead, we remember. . . our blood sisters. . . our blood brothers. . . We were never meant to survive. . . [Yet] the physical pain. . . makes us stronger. . . Our spirit endures."

Five Black women made these declarations on stage, each holding a candle, each carrying a legacy, each capable of passing on that legacy to the next generation.

The next person to take the stage was Steven Riel, who read some satirical poems from his upcoming book of gay poems How To Dream (Amherst Writers and Artists' Press, 1992).

Each poem expressed his feelings about growing up gay. One poem, titled "Almost Sisters," centered around his need for acceptance and wholeness.

"How you kept my secret in the basement [fashioning make-believe gowns]. . . I don't need your Brain power. Now available on the installment plan.

Here's a way to learn faster and work smarter without putting a lot of cash down. It's called the Apple Computer Loan.

Right now, qualifying students, parents borrowing on behalf of students, and faculty and staff members with an annual income of at least $15,000, can purchase an Apple® Macintosh™ computer system using a special financing plan set up just for you.

Apply to borrow from $1,500 to $10,000 for a Macintosh computer, other Apple products—including the AppleCare® extended service plan, and up to three software packages.

If you're a student, you'll be able to defer principal payments for up to 48 months while in school, making interest-only payments until 30 days after you graduate or leave school. Interest rates are surprisingly low, and you can take up to eight years to repay.*

So stop by today and fill out a loan application.

Because this is one way to afford a Macintosh, even if you can't afford a Macintosh.

* The interest rate is the average of the higher of the 30-day or 90-day commercial paper rates as reported in the Wall Street Journal, plus a spread of 4.75%. After June 30, 1992, the spread may increase if program costs rise more than allowed by law, and 15% of eligible borrowers could be required at least 30 days in advance. The loan may be prepaid at any time without penalty. For the month of October 1991, the rate was 10.06875, with an annual percentage rate of 11.44%. This rate would result in monthly payments of $10.63 for every $1,000 borrowed. The total finance charge for each $1,000 borrowed would be $362.87. If you elect to defer principal payments for four years, the APR on your loan will be 11.44%, your monthly payments during the deferment period will be $9.38, and your first monthly payment of principal and interest will be $28.67 per every $1,000 you borrow, will be $66.72. The interest rate is subject to change after June 30, 1992, may be subject to a higher loan origination fee. The loan origination fee will be added to the requested loan amount and refund over the life of the loan. ©1991 Apple Computer, Inc. YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An older person has some wonderful news to share. Listen closely — it could mean greater security for your family. Curb a tendency to talk shop when socializing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Paying bills on time protects your credit rating. A close friend or relative may be willing to arrange a short-term loan. Check both train and flight schedules if planning a business trip.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A new financial partnership begins to yield handsome profits. Your personal contacts bring you wonderful luck. Substitute long-distance phone calls for expensive travel.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Meeting a deadline will put you head and shoulders ahead of your competition. Improve your communications skills — they will help you land a top job! A long-distance romance begins to intensify.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Learn to express your feelings in a calm, positive manner. Enrolling in night school or attending a seminar will boost your earning potential. Your reliability helps you move up the ladder of success.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An excellent day to dispose of unwanted items cluttering up the basement or attic. Renovating your home will add to your comfort while increasing its value.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Home projects could lead to a second income. Seek the cooperation of family. Some surprising news elicits an unexpected reaction. Improving your appearance will boost your ego.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your mate may urge you to act in a more conservative manner. Learn from your experiences. Do not sell yourself short. Your creativity commands top dollar!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Although you have undertaken a rather tough assignment, any difficulties are offset by the promised rewards. Be careful not to act over-confident. Romance takes on a rosy glow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your associates may not be able to help out today — rely mostly on your own efforts. Your clever handling of a personnel matter wins you new respect. Spruce up your appearance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Resist the urge to roll over someone who crosses you today. Although you are irritated by other people's lame excuses and shortcomings, this is not the day to say so.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Business must come before pleasure, especially during office hours. A co-worker's ideas tend to be on the extravagant side. Be tactful when offering an alternative suggestion.

dolls anymore/I refuse to leave my gown behind to be an uncle/I led a double life too long to believe in make-believe."

The final performance was done by two performance artists from The Big Apple. Titled "Two Women Delving Into the Mysteries of Life." Most audience members seemed to share the consensus that a more apt title would have been "An Audience Delves into the Mysteries of the Meaning of this Performance."

Clare Venoit and Laura Lanza wrote and starred in the one act soliloquy containing true stories from the performers' lives ranging from child abuse to careers.

Like the first performance, it relied on music and the spoken word to convey its theme. However, it was difficult for one to say exactly what the theme was.

Perhaps the most enlightening moment came when Lanza asked, "What is the point of a Lesbian strip show? Our bodies all share the same secret."

Lanza left us to reflect on this intriguing question while she transformed herself from a "butch" in leather and denim to a "femme" stripper in draping chiffon.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

WHY YOU SHOULD START PLANNING FOR RETIREMENT WITH YOUR EYES CLOSED.

For retirement to be the time of your life, you have to dream a little—about the things you've always wanted to do: travel, explore, start a business. Just imagine...

With a dream and a plan, you can make it happen. Your pension and Social Security should provide a good basic retirement income, but what about all those extras that make your dreams possible? You'll probably need some additional savings.

THE DREAM IS YOURS. WE CAN HELP YOU WITH THE PLAN.

TIAA-CREF Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs), tax-deferred annuities for people like you in education and research, are a good way to save for retirement and save on taxes now. SRAs are easy—you make contributions through your institution before your taxes are calculated, so you pay less tax now.

You pay no tax on your SRA contributions and earnings until you receive them as income. And saving regularly means your contributions and their earnings can add up quickly.

What else makes SRAs so special? A broad range of allocation choices, from the safety of TIAA to the investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity; no sales charges; a variety of ways to receive income, including annuities, payments over a fixed period, or cash. You may also be able to borrow against your SRA accumulation before you retire.*

All this, plus the top investment management that has helped make TIAA-CREF the largest retirement system in the country.

So start dreaming and planning for the time of your life. Because the sooner you start your SRA, the greater your savings and your retirement will be.

Dear Kristen,

My roommate just left for Rio. 15 members of his host family will meet him at airport! I'm off to the Amazon tomorrow. Archbishop Desmond Tutu just boarded the ship. Can't believe we will spend 10 days crossing the Atlantic hearing him lecture on South Africa and talking informally at dinner on deck.

countant (Wilder) into helping him sell a play that's sure to bomb. This film earned Brooks a well-deserved Oscar for his screenplay. ****

Top Secret — Val Kilmer, Lucy Gutteridge, Christopher Villiers. Let me tell you, any film that the Zucker brothers direct has potential (Airplane, The Naked Gun, etc.) I feel that this movie did not get the credit it deserved. Kilmer is a rock star who becomes embroiled in espionage while touring in East Germany. It seems to lack an ending, but there are some unprecedented funny scenes. 1/2

Three Fugitives — Nick Nolte, Martin Short, Sarah Rowland Doroff. Director Francis Veber's remake of his own French comedy, Les Fugitifs. Nolte is an ex-con who is innocently mistaken for a bank robber when he is taken hostage by the bumbling Short. The film is cute, and the little girl is even cuter (you just want to hug her and take her home with you), but the ending will make you say "duh." Too bad, but I did like the movie. 1/2

The Verdict — Paul Newman, Charlotte Rampling, Jack Warden. Very few "court" movies have packed as much punch as this one did. Director Sidney Lumet took the screenplay — by David Mamet from the novel by Barry Reed — and transformed it into a powerful courtroom drama about a down-and-out Boston lawyer who finally has a case he believes in. Simply wonderful. ****

Young Frankenstein — Gene Wilder, Peter Boyle, Marty Feldman. You can ask any of my friends. . . I can recite this movie word for word. This film is an absolute RIOT! Director Mel Brooks has done it again; he took the original Frankenstein and made such a parody. . . oy gevalt! I'm getting shplikies just writing about it (sorry, it's a Jewish thing). Feldman as Igor (pronounced "Eye-gore") is beyond hysterical. ****

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles — Judith Hoag, Elias Koteas, Voices of Bobbie Rist, Kevin Clash, Brian Tochi, David McCharen, and Corey Feldman. Comic book creation of Kevin Eastman and Peter Laird, this movie is definitely aimed at the younger crowd. Oh, sure, there's a few of you my age who are die-hard TMNT fans, but this movie annoyed me. It was badly directed, poorly acted, and if I hear the word "cowabunga" one more time, I'll have to shoot somebody. Great costumes by Jim Henson's people, though. *1/2

House Party — Christopher Reid, Robin Harris, Christopher Martin. Featuring real-life rapper Reid, who plays Kid, the movie is a humorous tale of teenagers and the events of one night before, during, and after a house party. ***

Harper eyeing A-10 Player of the Year

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

When he first came to the University of Massachusetts two years ago, Harper Williams was a lanky kid from Bridgeport, Conn., and UMass was a second-rate basketball program in a second-rate conference vying for respectability.

Times sure have changed.

Now, the Minutemen are staring at a probable NCAA tournament invitation, the team is ranked 26th in the nation in the latest Associated Press poll and Williams is a top candidate for the Atlantic 10's Player of the Year award.

"The first time I saw Harper, I wasn't convinced he was going to be able to play here," said UMass coach John Calipari. "I saw him at a camp and I liked him. But I wasn't in love with him. Then I watched him play in a high school game and I went 'Oh my God, this kid is for real.'"

Williams, who has bulked up since his freshman year, has steadily improved year-by-year, something that has not gone unnoticed by coaches in the A-10.

After his team lost its first game ever to UMass, Temple coach John Chaney said the Minutemen "will go as far [in the post season] as Williams takes them."

"I hope that's true," says Williams, who was last season's A-10 shot blocking champion. "Because I'm going to give 110 percent. Hopefully the rest of the team will do the same.

"I'm really not thinking about the award," he said. "I just want to finish the season strong."

Williams, who is averaging 13.8 points, 6.9 rebounds and 2 blocked shots per game this season, is humble when he talks about awards, but did say it would be quite an honor.

Ironically, Williams' numbers are virtually the same as last year, when he averaged 13.9 points and 7.7 rebounds per game, prompting questions like why is Williams being considered for Player of the Year, when he was not considered last season?

The answer: There is no dominant player in the A-10. No Keith Hughes and no Mark Macon. In addition, Williams does things that don't show up in the box score, such as intimidate shooters, forcing them to change their shot.

As the Minutemen prepare for tomorrow's game at West Virginia, a game that will most likely determine the A-10's regular season champion, Williams goes in realizing his main competition for the award is West Virginia's Ricky Robinson (14 points, 7.4 rebounds).

"Ricky Robinson is physically stronger than Harper," Calipari said. "He's a better athlete. But Harper has a big heart. He has good skills, probably better skills than Ricky Robinson."

In their first meeting, a 76-75 West Virginia win at the Curry Hicks Cage which knocked UMass out of the Top 25, Williams had 23 points and four rebounds, while Robinson had 14 points and eight boards.

"He had a good game the first time," Williams said. "But he's got to go up against me again. This time, I'm ready for him."

At times throughout the year, Calipari has been more animated at practice than usual, this week being one of those times, as he recognizes the importance of tomorrow's game.

Animated practices mean lots of yelling. And much of the shouting is directed at Williams.

At Monday's practice, after he screamed at Williams for not cutting in the right direction, Calipari did his best imitation of the junior center, stomping his feet and staggering up the floor with his hands on his hips. The mockery brought smiles to the rest of the team, but Williams wasn't amused.

Next time down court, Williams up-faked Kennard Robinson, and dunked with authority.

"Harper is the one guy that will get upset when you criticize him," Calipari said. "But then he'll respond. That gets him going. He might say, 'I could do it if you just talked to me.' But, I've been around enough years [to know how to handle players like Harper]. There are other players who will pout just to prove a point. He's not that way. He understands I have a job to do, to make him a better player, even if that means I have to jump him."

"It bothers me when he yells at me during the practices and the games," Williams said. "But at the end of the day, I don't hold any animosity towards him. He's just doing his job. Sometimes he just gets a little too excited."

. . .maybe enough to earn him the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year award.

Men's gymnastics places first

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team won four of six events last Friday in a triangular meet against Cornell University and league rival West Point.

The Minutemen, on a comeback from their first loss of the season last week against Temple, finished in first place with a score of 263.10 points. West Point placed second (258.25), followed by Cornell (254.70).

Although UMass head coach Roy Johnson was happy his team brought home the victory, he was not satisfied with its overall performance.

"We won, but it wasn't pretty," said Johnson.

The win may not have been pretty, but it is a win, and even Johnson admitted, "some positive things did come out of it."

For starters, the team set a school record in the floor exercise with a total score of 46.65. The previous record had been 46.20.

The record-breaking performance was highlighted by scores of 9.45 from juniors Cal Booker and Steve Christensen, and a 9.50 from sophomore Jason Braud. Sophomore Joe Haran, who has been struggling through an injury-plagued season, scored a 9.15.

Another highlight of the meet was the overall improvement of the team on the parallel bars, an event which has been a trouble spot for the UMass gymnasts since the beginning of the season.

"We did a much better job on the parallel bars than we have all season," said Johnson. "We still have a way to go, but it was nice to see the improvement."

Christensen led all competitors on the parallel bars with a score of 9.40, which paced him to a second place all-around score of 53.10.

Along with all of this, UMass finished first on the pommel horse with a score of 43.30 points, and first on the still rings with a score of 43.85.

So with all those things going well, what went wrong?

There were last minute changes in both the lineup and individual routines, a few sloppy performances, and a 41.05-point, last place performance on the high bar.

As the end of the season and the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships approach, the team can not settle for anything less then its best.

"We need everyone to hit their routines at the same time," said Johnson, who has been concerned throughout the season with the inconsistency of the team.

"We need to score between 46 and 47 points consistently on the floor exercise," said Johnson, "and at least a 45 on all the other events."

The Minutemen are hoping to score 270.00 points on Friday when the team ends its road trip at Syracuse University. An overall team score of 270.00 would be a school record, and according to Johnson, "that's what we need to score if we want to give Syracuse a great meet."

SPORTS NOTICE

Student tickets for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball game against Rhode Island on Wednesday, Mar. 4, will be handed out this Thursday, Feb. 27, between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage. Tickets will be handed out to students in possession of a valid undergraduate I.D.

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team hosts Springfield College tonight at 7 p.m. at Boyden Gymnasium.

It's time to introduce a new character into this space. It's an introduction which is long overdue.

First, there was Earl "The Pearl" Monroe and now we present Shirley "The Shirl" Scott. Other than being my mother, The Shirl possesses a vast knowledge of sports, and offers the women's view this space needs. Here's some of The Shirl's Pearls of Wisdom:

• "The Winter Olympics are horrible, what a bore. The opening ceremony was the best part. Did you see the costumes? Beautiful."

David Scott

• The Shirl on the Red Sox: "Spring training already? Didn't they just break our hearts. They never have pitching and they always let you down."

• The Shirl on the Celtics: "They need Larry, he's the leader. These fourth quarters when they're falling apart are his time of the game. Even he's not like he was. He's an inspiration. With him, it's the Eastern Conference Finals. Without him, first round elimination.

• Watch for the Shirl on ESPN with Dick Vitale in the coming weeks.

Amherst man dies in jump from bridge

By DAVID RIVERA
Collegian Staff

A prominent 82-year-old Amherst resident took his own life Tuesday when he jumped 178 feet into the Connecticut River.

Walter C. Jones, of 134 Montague Road, died Tuesday due to injuries sustained from a fall off the French King Bridge on the Erving-Gill line, state police in Athol said.

According to witnesses, at approximately 10:30 a.m., Jones pulled his car over to the side of the bridge and stepped over a 4-foot rail, falling to his death.

Several emergency units from the area were called to assist, including the Northfield Dive Team.

The patriarch of one of Amherst's oldest families and father of Amherst real estate owner D.H. Jones was remembered today by family and friends as a pioneer in Amherst's history.

Nuclear plant dismantled

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

BOLTON — The Yankee Atomic Electric Co. announced Wednesday it will permanently shut down and begin dismantling Yankee Rowe, the nation's oldest commercial nuclear power plant.

The utility's board of directors voted unanimously against restarting the 185-megawatt plant, which has been closed since last October. They emphasized that economic decisions, not safety questions, prompted the decision.

"You can honestly say that we're a victim of this recession," said plant spokesman William McGee.

Officials cited a dwindling demand for electricity as well as the expense of addressing concerns raised by Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff and others about the condition of the 32-year-old reactor vessel.

The utility voluntarily shut down the 185-megawatt plant last October to allow for additional inspection and treating of the reactor. McGee said plant officials had expected to spend $23 million on the effort in the next six months without guarantees it would meet the NRC's technical criteria.

At issue was whether the 33-foot-high, 8-inch-thick steel vessel had grown more brittle and likely to fail with age because it had continually bombarded with neutron radiation.

"The technical criteria we must meet and the path we must follow to restart the plant are not sufficiently defined to justify that amount of money," Andrew C. Kadak, Yankee Atomic president and chief executive officer, said in a statement.

"As a result of the continuing regulatory uncertainty and unfavorable economics, it is clear that the interests of consumers would be best served by permanently shutting down the Yankee plant and buying less costly, available power over the next eight years" left on the plant's original 40-year operating license, the statement said.

William Sheperdson, spokesman for the New England Power Pool, said the plant closing would not have a major impact on the region's power supply.

"It is a relatively small unit," Shepardson said. "Secondly, demand has been decreasing the last two years here in the region."

Industry sources and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission praised Yankee Atomic Wednesday.

"They have acted in a most responsible manner with the NRC. They have had a long and excellent record," said Joseph Fouchard, an NRC spokesman in Washington.

Rabbi predicts return to religion

By OLIVIA STEWART-LIBERTY
Collegian Staff

Rabbi Harold S. Kushner, author of the best-selling book When Bad Things Happen to Good People, predicted last night that "new and exciting" things will herald the religion of the future, as society teeters on the threshold of a millennium.

"I'm a terrible predictor of the future. I'm always wrong," Kushner told an audience crammed into Bowker Auditorium. He said that ten years ago he predicted by 1992 America would be without orthodox religions in any form due to increased education and a general rising of social status.

"We were totally wrong," Kushner said, "1992 has seen a complete resurgence of religious fundamentalism," in the form of a return to traditional values. Kushner cited Orthodox Judaism as the most outstanding example of this, citing the Kosher meals at Hillel House as a local example.

Kushner said what he called the "vulgarity" of American society as shown in the magazines and on television is in part responsible for this retreat from the secular to the spiritual.

"In this time of rapid social change, people want stability," Kushner said, because people are unable to find "solidity" in the new liberal churches. Many people are leaving the churches and synagogues spiritually hungry, Kushner believes. Thus, as American culture becomes more consumerist, more Jews and Christians alike are tempted to "up and out" of secular society completely, according to Kushner.

Kushner said although he believes this resurgence of orthodoxy has already peaked, beyond the turn of the millennium lie new values and important equalities in the field of religion, which will give it a more universal and central position in society.

Student Senate passes new SGA constitution

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

After several hours of contentious debate, the Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted overwhelmingly to accept a newly-created Student Government Association constitution, and will now seek unprecedented approval for their document by Chancellor Richard O'Brien.

The constitution, which states in part that "The Senate shall be the official representative body of the undergraduate community and may state official undergraduate opinion on all matters concerning the undergraduate community at the Amherst campus," passed by a vote of 41 in favor, five opposed and five abstentions.

The Undergraduate Student Senate, which has never had a constitution recognized by the University administration, will now send the document before the Area Governments. If four of the seven Area Governments approve the revised constitution, it will go before O'Brien for final approval.

It appeared from the outset of the meeting that the senate would be in for a very long night. Senator Jeffrey Markuns, chair of the Residential Student Association, asked Senate President David Gagne why area governments were to be excluded from "the amendment process" under the constitution, and the question set off hours of angry debate.

"Right now, we have a difference of opinion as to how the area governments should receive money and the structure they should be under," said Gagne. "I don't think it is appropriate to include them" under the constitution.

Gagne said area governments are part of the Residential Student Association, which receives money from University Housing Services. Because Gagne said he and other senate officials feared that Housing Services would assume control of the area governments, he wouldn't support a proposal allowing them to vote on undergraduate policies.

Gagne said if the area governments return under the control of the Senate, he would introduce a proposal requiring two-thirds of the senate and four of the seven area governments to amend the SGA constitution.

"I think it is unfair for us to have to go to an outside structure to amend our own process," Gagne said.

Senate speaker Bob Monaghan was even more vehement in his opposition to the inclusion of area governments as voting bodies under the constitution. Citing violations of both the student government association and area government constitutions, Monaghan spoke of the Residential Student Association as a tool of Student candidacies announced

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

Two longtime student activists announced their candidacy for Student Government Association president and student trustee before a group of supporters yesterday outside the Financial Aid office in Whitmore.

Current Student Trustee Kevin Newnan entered the race for re-election, while Commuter Area Government President Jen Wood announced her candidacy for SGA President. Current SGA President David Gagne, who announced he is not seeking re-election, endorsed the two candidates.

Opposing Wood for president is junior Jeff Markuns, currently a student representative on the state's Higher Education Coordinating Council. Running against Newnan for trustee is junior Chris Moran. The election for SGA president will be held March 10 and the election for student trustee will be on March 10 and 11.

Newnan, a senior political science major, will be staying at the University a fifth year. Wood, a junior Japanese major, is currently an SGA senator.

Newnan said he looks forward to working with all UMass students.

"We have the experience, the organizational abilities and we've gone through the learning, so we can jump right into the fight," said Newnan. He said he is anticipating "a year that will prove to be pivotal [to the future of the University]."

Wood, a former MassPIRG chairperson, who said she considers herself an organizer and an activist, said, "We have to organize campaigns so student government can serve the students. Only organizing and activism can bring in new students."

By "changing the ballgame even further," Newnan plans to work on what he considers important issues such as tuition retention, which he said expects to be implemented in the near future.

"We must build on leadership success of last year and our own experiences and added facets of organization and mobilization so we can be better connected to the student body," said Newnan.

Newnan aims to change the "Armageddon of student versus student conflicts and focus on issues that affect all students, not just certain groups of students.

"We have a serious need to build a grassroots organization. We have the ability to mobilize students," Newnan said.

In support of his decision not to run for another term, Gagne said he feels "student leaders have always done what's best for themselves. They always keep it to themselves, and don't allow new blood. That's why I'm stepping aside and allowing new people to come in.

Red Sox owner dies of stroke

BOSTON (AP) — Jean R. Yawkey, majority owner of the Boston Red Sox and the only woman ever to serve on the Baseball Hall of Fame board of directors, died Wednesday from the effects of a stroke suffered Feb. 20. She was 83.

Mrs. Yawkey, a onetime fashion model in New York, died at Massachusetts General Hospital at 2:45 p.m.

She was a trustee of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and of the Yawkey Foundation, which supports a 40,000-acre wildlife center in South Carolina and provides endowment funds for minorities and others needing scholarship aid.

She also was a strong supporter of the Boys and Girls Club of Boston, amateur baseball in Boston, the New England Sports Museum and the Boston Pops and Boston Symphony orchestras.

After the death of her husband from leukemia, she prevented the sale of the Red Sox to other prospective interests by joining with two longtime friends, Haywood Sullivan, a onetime reserve catcher for the team, and Buddy LeRoux, a former trainer, in retaining control with a purchase agreement.

In 1978, the three put up $1 million each to become a general partner in ownership of the franchise founded with formation of the American League in 1901. Mrs. Yawkey also put up Fenway Park and other assets and became president of the club. To help complete the deal, worth an estimated $20 million, 30 limited partnership shares were sold for $500,000 each.

Differences of opinion in the operation of the club split the general partners, with Mrs. Yawkey and Sullivan often voting 2-1 against LeRoux, the chief architect of putting together the package for purchase of the Red Sox.

Then, in 1983, LeRoux, acting at the insistence of limited partners he had brought in, attempted to seize control of the club. Mrs. Yawkey and Sullivan went to court and won a brief struggle with LeRoux. She and John Harrington, the Red Sox treasurer when the team was purchased in 1978 and her close adviser, were the principal witnesses in Suffolk Superior Court.

Mrs. Yawkey formed the JRY Corp. and became chairperson of the board of directors as the sole owner. She named Harrington president with the right to represent her when she did not attend meetings.

Mrs. Yawkey also exercised her right and purchased limited partnerships from dissident owners and, in 1987, purchased LeRoux's general partnership, giving her and Harrington majority rule over Sullivan.

Housing Services.

"The idea was that area governments would get financial autonomy from everyone else by going under housing and getting a contract with housing which would establish freedom for our money, in which housing couldn't touch that money," he said.

Monaghan said the Area Governments don't have the legal authority to enter a contract such as the one with Housing Services, and therefore the agreement is non-binding. As a result, Housing Services effectively controls the area government's money, according to Monaghan.

"It is our feeling that Housing has begun to dominate area governments, and that they will continue to dominate them down the line," he said. "There's no way we can accept Housing's control of our structure."

Markuns, the Residential Student Association president, defended his organization's ties to housing, saying that their relationship "is not an issue right now." He urged senators to think carefully about the constitution before accepting it.

"Instead of railroading the constitution through the senate in one night, we ought to take time to digest it and absorb it," Markuns said.

GEO rally demonstrates outside support

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

A small yet spirited turnout marked yesterday's noon Graduate Employee Organization labor rally on the Student Union steps.

Several GEO supporters, including local labor union officials and University faculty and staff, spoke before a crowd of approximately 80 onlookers, flanked by a GEO banner reading "An Insult To One Is An Injury To All."

The rally was held as a response to the University Trustees' refusal to approve GEO's first member-ratified contract on Feb. 6.

"I can smell the stinking rot from the shore," said David Mitchell, chief steward of the physical plant and member of AFSCME local 1776. "It's a leviathan that stinks of hypocrisy and cynicism

Mitchell told the graduate students in the crowd that they were workers, and as such would "always face opposition" when standing up for their rights.

"It's class warfare," he said. "When you are on a lower level, you are more prone to attacks, but you can fight back."

Writing Program Director Anne Harrington spoke to express her support for the efforts of both GEO and the administration, saying the trustees should ratify the contract.

"Ratification is due," she said. "[Further refusal] would have a chilling and demoralizing effect, one more blow, one more sign that efforts on campus are useless."

Barbara Partee, chairperson of the Linguistics Department, spoke of the graduate students as "valuable commodities" to the University that shouldn't be abused.

"Their contributions are irreplaceable," she said.

Sheila Griffith, president of United Staff Association union, referred to University Attorney William Searson as "the one individual tying things up with bad faith."

GEO co-speaker Emily Isaacs gave the crowd background to GEO's present situation of stalled contract approval, and appealed to GEO members in the crowd to participate in a bus convoy to Worcester to attend this morning's Trustees' meeting.

The rally ended with a performance from the "Union Blues Band," featuring GEO co-speaker Peter Underdown singing a revised version of "Return to Sender."

Student Senate, local business promote studies

The Undergraduate Student Senate has initiated a pilot program in conjunction with the Ronkin Educational Group in Amherst that will allow students to take a graduate school preparatory course at a reduced price.

"This is a great way to further a student's education and career," said David Gagne, president of the Student Government Association.

Students take prep courses to enhance their chances of doing the optimum best on standardized tests which are required for one to gain admittance to most, if not all, post-graduate education.

"Especially in this time of recession it is a good way to save money," said Gagne.

It has been labeled the RSO Scholarship Challenge, but it will not be limited to Registered Student Organizations. It will be open to all campus organizations.

"I and my campus representatives are excited about this new program," said Keith M. Hensley, director of the Ronkin Educational Group in Amherst.

"It is a win-win situation for anyone who participates, and I am looking for a successful two-month program," said Hensley.

The contest will begin on March 9th, and will end on May 1st.

The RSO Scholarship Fund has been modeled after a similar program that was instituted at Ohio State University last September.

"The program has not received a great publicity feedback so far here at OSU," said Matt Fordham, finance committee chairperson for the Student Government Association at OSU.

"But if you were to talk to me five years from now, I am sure that it will a be a great success, because what they are building and starting is a special thing," said Fordham.

The contest is set up so that all participating groups will be able to achieve success, even if they do not receive first or second prize, said Hensley.

Each participating group will have an account file, and all the money in the account will be able to be used towards defraying the cost of a prep course offered by Ronkin.

Ronkin will donate $100 for the initial account, and will also add an extra $15 for each member of the organization that goes to Ronkin and takes a free diagnostic test and attends a free counseling session.

The diagnostic test is used to find a student's particular weakness on their testing, and the counseling period allows the student to find and understand these weaknesses, said Hensley.

Prep courses offered by Ronkin for students graduating from college include the GMAT for business school, GRE for graduate school, MCAT for medical school and the LSAT for law schools.

Trustee position open to contest

Legal language makes student position uncertain

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Because of the deletion of one word from the University Reorganization Bill, the position of Student Trustee at the University of Massachusetts — traditionally held by an undergraduate — could be contested by graduate students in future elections.

The word "undergraduate" was deleted from the bill July 1991 after graduate students lobbied the administration, according to Mark Kenen, president of the Graduate Student Senate.

Kenen said the graduate students wanted their own representative on the Board of Trustees, but that it wasn't considered feasible within the administration.

David Gagne, president of the Student Government Association, said although no graduates have turned in nomination papers for the trustee election to take place on March 10 and 11, it could eventually lead to infighting among student ranks.

"It's a concern for the future," Gagne said. "If the undergraduate screws up, there could be tension."

When the Commonwealth passed legislation reorganizing the State's higher education system last July, graduate students lobbied the University administration for a separate Graduate Trustee, according to Kenen.

"It wasn't our idea to share the position," Kenen said. "We didn't appreciate the competition with the undergraduates."

Kenen said the position has great influence outside of the University.

"Student Trustee is the only student voice on the Board of Trustees," Kenen said, "and this arrangement will work out well because graduates can vote [in the election]."

Gagne and Kenen both expressed concern about future infighting, however.

Gagne cited the role of Trustee as being focused on fighting undergraduate tuition and fee increases. He said he was concerned a graduate trustee would not be as concerned with these issues as would an undergraduate.

Kenen also said there is potential for conflict, but the undergraduates running for the post this semester will have to be aware of graduate issues.

"This is going to be motivation for the Graduate Student Senate and Undergraduate Student Senate to work together," Kenen said.

"It can either be a curse or a blessing," he said.

The position of Student Trustee was established in the early 1970s, according to current Student Trustee Kevin Newnan.

Newnan said because of the five-campus system, only two of the five student trustees vote each year.

This year, the trustees from Lowell and Dartmouth have the voting privilege, and next year, the Amherst and Worcester campuses will be the vote, Newnan said.

Tribunal presents evidence of alleged crimes in Gulf War

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

Testimony and evidence of alleged U.S. war crimes committed during the Persian Gulf War will be presented in public at the International War Crimes Tribunal this Saturday in New York.

A commission of inquiry for the tribunal was founded by former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who traveled around Iraq during the height of the U.S. bombing last winter. Since then, several fact-finding teams have visited Iraq to gather more evidence.

Based on these reports, Clark has exposed what he has called U.S. "lies" about a "surgical" war, and drawn up 19 specific charges of alleged war crimes and crimes against peace and humanity, based on the Geneva Convention, the Nuremberg Trials and the United Nations Charter.

Evidence and testimony has been gathered leading some to believe that during the war, the U.S. may have killed up to 300,000 Iraqis, used illegal and barbaric weapons, tripled Iraq's infant mortality rate and bombed Iraq back to a pre-industrial period, according to Ramsey.

So far, 30 hearings for the tribunal have been held across the U.S. and in 20 other countries worldwide. The accumulated material, including videos and photos, will be presented to a panel of judges tomorrow and to the public on Saturday.

The panel of international judges will include V.K.

University student pleads for donors to save his brother

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Paul Colbert said he watched his 1-year-old brother, Danny, ambitiously take his first wobbly steps and instead of wondering when he would play catch with his brother, he just hoped his brother would make it to his second birthday.

Danny has a rare form of leukemia and will die within months if he doesn't have a bone marrow transplant, said Colbert, a sophomore CASIAC major.

Colbert said Danny has spent more than half his life in a hospital undergoing chemotherapy treatments, which have failed. "[My family] needs to find a bone marrow donor in three weeks to a month or Danny will die," said Paul.

Colbert said he has posted flyers in residence halls and around the campus asking people to become bone marrow donors or to donate money. He said the test that determines whether the donor matches Danny's marrow costs $60.

"Three thousand people have been tested so far, which has cost over $200,000," said Paul. The chances of a match being found are one in 20,000, he added.

Colbert said there are nine thousand people waiting for bone marrow donors. "When a person

Open letter to Amherst

The next time you're uptown and need to relieve yourself, have a good look around. Someone might be watching you.

"Secret Agent 106, come in."

"This is agent 106. Over."

"106, have you reached the destination yet?"

"Yes, I'm hiding in the bushes next to Twisters. Oh, wait, here come a couple of them now. Hold on, they're coming this way . . . they look kind of smashed . . . uh-oh, one of them's approaching my position."

"What's he doing?"

"He's saying something about 'draining the lizard.'"

"106, you are in danger! Get out of there at once!"

Greg Sukiennik

First they took our bus stop at Fearing St. They let slumlords get away with fire code violations, with deadly results. A year after the North Pleasant St. tragedy, Amherst fire officials estimate 10 percent of the town's residences do not have smoke detectors. Next, they infringed on our rights with keg licenses.

Now they're watching us.

"106, are you inside the bar yet?"

"Yeah, it's like a cattle call in here."

"What's going on?"

"You won't like this. They're actually having fun."

"Oh, the horror! The horror!"

"You don't know the half of it. Someone just tried to buy me a Long Island iced tea."

We're past the polite formalities. This is war, undeclared war on students by the Town of Amherst, members of its Select Board and private citizens who must have watched a lot of "Mission: Impossible" and "Get Smart" in the 60s.

The message they send isn't a kind one. Oh, they appreciate the millions of dollars UMass pumps into the local economy, but heaven forbid we actually pretend we live here. Resent? Try xenophobia on for size. Read the "letters to the editor" section of the local papers (including ours) and you'll occasionally see people who would rather do without UMass. Consider the bylaws and town decisions the Select Board has leveled directly at us.

By us, of course, I'm referring to UMass. You'll never hear residents complain about Amherst College because, as we all know, their students are perfect in every way. Even in UMass' home town, the state's favoritism of private education over public education comes shining through. Which I respond to by noting our baseball team kicks the Lord Jeffs' butts every spring.

"106, what's going on?"

"They're all drunk. Drunk, drunk, drunk."

"Those damned kids."

Amherst residents should realize where their town would be without UMass. Driving up 116, you wouldn't be able to tell if there was a town between South Hadley and Sunderland. You'd drive past Bub's BBQ and realize "Hey, I think we missed it."

Do you know what recession-striken cities like North Adams or Lowell would do for the millions of dollars UMass provides the local economy? Perhaps we should pack the place up brick by brick — which, given the physical condition of the campus, shouldn't be so difficult — and find a place where we're loved.

Of course, it's a two-way street. Students at this University should recognize many of their peers have serious problems with public drunkenness and the random violence it brings. Students can blame the alcohol policy if they want — but a good, hard look in the mirror just might reveal the most effective solution to the dilemma presented by thousands of thirsty college students.

As for local residents, they should know the Common once was grazing land for farm animals. Without UMass, mooing cows and braying sheep would replace Friday night serenades downtown.

The reflection of an addict

Entering the bathroom has to be the most common routine in life. You go for one reason and then leave quietly. No interruptions, no conflicts. Not difficult.

That's what I thought.

Visiting my uncle in New York one weekend, we went to a bar in Manhattan. I was having a great time until I went into the bathroom. What kind of mistake could that be? One that has slightly altered my outlook on life.

Cocaine has been around the United States for a little over a century. Stemming from Erythroxylm Coca leaves, it was first used as a local anesthesia for its ability to interrupt conduction in the nerves, especially in the eyes, nose and mouth area.

Felice Cohen

The room was small — two toilets, a sink and a mirror. But this huge mirror had one specific feature: a green, size twelve velour jump suit, planted into two bright, white walking sneakers. Topped off by a mass of blonde curly locks and painted with glistening, cheap lipstick, her face sparkled with the added touches of a shiny, silver nose. Instantly, I had the feeling our purposes for being in the bathroom were not one and the same.

Today we have discovered other ways to use or abuse cocaine. Snorted through the nose, cocaine constricts blood vessels, causing ulcerations in the nasal cavity, immediately causing a rush and an elation, like an automatic dizzy spell.

Averting my eyes from the reflection, I went ahead with my own intended purpose. Finished and washing my hands at the sink, my eyes locked once again onto the still-busy reflection. The "silver" nose was none other than a small, metallic spoon, held closely under her two nostrils: two tiny dust busters.

Other ways of taking cocaine are by mixing the cocaine in a solution and then injecting it into the body or smoking it in a chemical form called "Freebase." (I always thought freebase was what a batter got when hit by a pitch.)

Staring as each of her dust-buster snorts sucked up the snow-white contents of the spoon, it was obvious she didn't care that I was watching. In fact, noticing my stare, she cut the silence with the biggest lie this side of New York, "Hey, it's all right baby. I'm only doing this this one time."

Denial. A sure sign of drug dependency.

Exiting the bathroom, words somehow found their way to my tongue as I blurted out, "Well, take it easy. Don't get hurt."

The uses of cocaine are dangerous, resulting in auditory, visual or tangible hallucinations. There are two distinct groups of users; a small group created accidentally by medical prescriptions during illness. The other group, addicted because of association with other addicts.

Get hurt? She was a total stranger. Why should I care what happened to her, if she didn't? Here I was, a naive college student visiting the Big Apple, unprepared, with no knowledge about cocaine. I should have expected to see this. The truth is I hadn't. At least not in a public place, not in a bathroom, not when I wasn't in a movie theatre or reading about it in a book.

There is treatment for both. The accidental addicts usually initiate the treatment themselves. The heavier addicts require much more treatment, but are generally 100% effective.

Leaving, I felt not just the effect of the one drink I had, but a rush of life. Heading to my seat, memories of childhood raced around my head. Suddenly all my friends, who seconds ago were laughing and playing, were called inside from recess. . . "All right kids, time to grow up."

Dealing with environmental problems through drugs, as did the woman in the bathroom, is not the smart approach. Obviously people are going to continue doing what they want to themselves even if it means destroying their bodies.

"Hey," I heard myself say, "are recess and show-and-tell over? No way, this isn't fair. I want another chance!"

But another chance at what? To be a kid again? To regain my innocence and youth? Becoming a kid again is impossible, I know, but regaining my positive attitude on life is not. Difficult, but possible.

Until we run out of Erythroxylm Coca leaves, cocaine will remain an ugly issue we must face, like the one in the mirror with the silver nose.

Pro-democracy Campaign's job

We in the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign must respond to Mike Levy's Feb. 21 editorial, "Moneybags Story used artificial factors in victory", in which he hopes the "Pro-Democracy campaign will take. . . action against Story." We must reemphasize that the Campaign is a totally non-partisan organization which neither takes action, nor endorses any candidates. The campaign is committed to taking action against only the current system of privately financed elections, that is, a system of 100% public financing. In case anyone got the idea from Ellen Story's victory (or Levy's depiction of it) that there is a positive relationship between money and women's access to political power, we wish to point out that it was under the system of private financing that we got a 97% male Congress, and that today money is the biggest obstacle in the way of challengers (i.e. women) trying to unseat entrenched encumbants. In the Amherst-Pelham race, the Pro-Democracy platform was supported by all major candidates, including Ellen Story, despite her decision not to limit her spending.

A healthy venting off

Sometimes it's really healthy to sound off about things. Since I love to spend hours composing essays, I rarely give myself a chance to just "vent." But today that's what this column's gonna be. If anyone out there doesn't like it, heck, they can go earn their own column space. I bust my butt for this one.

First of all, about lesbians. We're probably the least powerful social group in the entire world. We're the wrong gender, wrong orientation, have very little money, and if we're not white, add on a whole 'nother set of strikes.

Trystan Skeigh

Time for a reality check! Northampton may be reputed to be one of the most visible lesbian communities in the United States, but what does this really mean? We get a couple of dance nights and a pool table, one tiny bookstore, a summer softball league and three hours of college radio a week. Wow — I can really understand why straight people are so afraid of the "militant" lesbians. Like maybe we'll all pool our resources and send you a nasty postage-due postcard or something.

I write one column a week. (That's right, just one.) Over the past two years I've gotten a lot of stupid flak from folks who say they are "sick of having homosexuality shoved down their throats." Well, you poor choking individuals — perhaps you should recall some sage advice from Mary Poppins . . . Besides, you really should count your homophobic blessings. If the number of articles in this paper accurately reflected our statistical presence in the population, there would be two or three a day! So, shut up!

Next, about lesbian/gay allies. Whether you're heterosexual or bisexual, if you call yourself our ally, this means you support lesbian and gay rights. Those include our right to express our opinions freely, live in safe residence halls, choose same sex partners, etc. etc.

If you think it's okay to use your position as an ally to pressure gays and lesbians to change their political views, you're not really our ally, you're an oppressor. In other words, although you certainly don't have to agree with everything lesbians and gays say or do, to be an ally you need to support our freedom to say and do them. Got it?

Now, on Housing and a GLB floor. Their old argument that a gay floor would be "too dangerous" was insensitive, illogical, and extremely homophobic.

Like breaking GLB residents into tiny groups of three or four per cluster and sticking them with roommates who were raging homophobes was a better idea?

It's wonderful to note that with Asst. Director Larry Moneta's departure this dangerous and illogical rationale disappeared as well. Thank you new Asst. Director Anne Miller for bringing sanity to Housing's attitude concerning GLB residents!

Last, but not least, let's talk about sex. Face it, folks, lesbian sex is absolutely wonderful and you're all just jealous. You know this is true, otherwise all you straight folks wouldn't put so much of it in your porn videos. (Hah! Gotcha!) But it sure does make some people awfully nervous to hear comparisons. Funny, I've gotten a lot of feedback from indignant men, but not a single letter from a woman . . . Makes you go hummmm, doesn't it?

Okay, 'nuff. If I go on much longer I might get addicted to this venting stuff and give up trying to write serious essays forever. This is too much fun. But seriously, I think it all boils down to everybody facing the fact we live in an extremely diverse world, with many different opinions, beliefs and lifestyles. We can choose to shout each other down and fight for dominance, or we can start listening to each other and open up to learning new ideas. The world is not all white, male, straight, beef-eating or Christian. Thank goodness. If it was, this op-ed page wouldn't be any fun at all!

Bruno as Brew-chanan – thoughts of a roommate

I — raised on good-old New England liberal values — have had the great pleasure of rooming the last two years with Bruno — raised on anything but values.

Brew (as his pals have aptly named him) is your typical jock/reactionary/protectionist/megalomaniac/young republican.

Thus essentially we're the ultimate odd couple, but as roommates go we get along reasonably well.

Though on occasion we have had some differences.

I can recall one time, following the seasons first snow fall, when Brew decided to sled his way down Van Meter Hill using our dorm room door as his craft of attack. After removing it (hinges and all) he proceeded to luge his way into a dumpster at 60 miles per. Of course as "roomies" we had to pay $300 to replace the newly splintered door-sled.

Then there was the time when ol' Brew decided that then Chancellor Duffey was a "[expletive] wimp" and, following an evening which consisted of much liquid courage, he decided to let the ol' Duffster know exactly how he felt — on his front lawn — at 4 a.m. That little adventure cost me 20-bucks bail and a week of Amherst jail stories.

But last week Brew, once again, was able to amaze me.

David Rivera

It was early evening and having nothing better to do, Brew interrupted me while I was studying for my Chemistry for poets exam.

"Yo Dave, who are ya gonna vote for president," Brew said addressing me in his standard Southwest patois.

"Well Brew," (taking my time, knowing all too well that this could be a dangerous subject). "I really haven't given it that much thought," I said, hoping that he wouldn't continue the topic.

"WHATDAYAMEAN ya haven't given it much dhawht!! Dis is one of da most important decisions yu'll make as an American, and ya haven't dawht about it?" Brew yelled shaking his head.

This bold social stance was something new for Brew. He hadn't been this upset since Morton Downey Jr. was taken off the air.

"Dave, I'm proud ta say dhat I'm part of da UMass movement dhat is supportin' Pat Buchanan for President and I dinck it's time ya get with da team and vote Pat for Pres in '92," he said while pinning a "Buchanan for President" button on my shirt.

With my jaw agape, Brew a one-time Bush supporter, I tried to understand why he had given up on his idol. Hadn't Brew been the main organizer of the George Bush theme party, at which dark pinstripes suits and golf attire was mandatory for all who wanted to attend?

"Dave let me tell ya, George Bush has sold owwa country to da Japs and Krauts."

I seldom try to correct Brew, mainly because he's much larger than I, but I gave him a quick lecture for using derogatory terms like "Jap", and "Kraut" because they weren't very PC — for which he immediately accused me of trying to change the subject to computers.

"I'm talkin' high treason, and Bush should be shot!!"

After his temple veins returned to normal size, Brew calmed down and I tried to explain why I think Pat Buchanan is a mindless dolt with no real platform.

"Dave, ya dunno what you're talking about," and with that final remark, Brew swung open the door and began marching down the hall chanting his new mantra. "BU-CHA-NAN, BU-CHA-NAN, BU-CHA-NAN, BU-CHA-NAN . . . . ."

Now I've never been passionate about politics but after I read that ol' Pat wanted to seal our borders with a huge wall, (Cold War-esque), I realized that this guy was stuck somewhere in the 1970s and obviously still having wet dreams about his old boss Tricky Dick Nixon.

Brew has become one of the newly conformed young republicans that have jumped onto the Buchanan bandwagon because old George is far too — liberal?

So if you see Brew and his pals handing out Buchanan propaganda, don't run away laughing, listen to what they've got to say and just appease them with a kind and understanding smile.

Evil-smelling prose

What exactly is beneath that evil-smelling, steaming patch of earth next to the FAC bus stop? Is it a shallow common grave, filled with festering, frothing corpses floating fitfully under the fruity soil? Is it the yawning orifice of some burgeoning and fiery Faustian hell, waiting to erupt forth with the dead and decaying to devilishly devour the depraved souls of the damned? Is it a geyser? Is there, bubbling underneath the putrid mud, a germinating geothermal well of sulfurous hot mud, a vile, voluting, voluminous, volleying vat of violent volcanic vehemence? Or is it a broken pipe? I am merely curious. Whatever lies beneath the pungent turf, it is exuding a most appalling odor.

The reliability of the Old Testament

"The evidence is sufficient to convince any man who is not already set against it but, the evidence does not force a man into the kingdom that will not go," said Blaise Pascal, famous mathematician and philosopher who became irrevocably convinced about the claims of Christ and converted to Christianity.

Pascal's quote is referring to the claims of Jesus Christ. Pascal was no fool. He knew the Bible was reliable and Christ's promises were true. Pascal, like many other Christians then and now, was not a blind follower. Rather, he decided to act on what Christ had said: "Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your MIND."(Matt 22:37) The Bible plainly gives the believer a faith and hope that is true. Why else the challenge to believe with our minds?

C. Sanders, military historian, explains the basic principals of historiography: the bibliographical test and the internal and external evidence tests. The Bible passes these tests with flying colors. According to Josh McDowel, F.F. Bruce and many other theologians, these are some reasons for Old Testament reliability.

The bibliographical test concerns the reliability of the number of existing manuscripts (MSS) and the time period between the original and existing copies. McDowell points out, "Until the recent discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the oldest complete extant Hebrew MS was around A.D.900. This made a time gap of 1.300 years(the Hebrew Old Testament was completed about 400 B.C.) . . . With the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, however, a number of Old Testament manuscripts have been found which scholars date before the time of Christ." Considering the minimal MSS, this evidence does not seem very convincing, however, the rigid preservation of the books tells us that the copies in existence are reliable.

Gleason Archer is quoted as saying " . . . Even though the two copies of Isaiah discovered . . . were a thousand years earlier than the oldest dated manuscripts previously known . . . they proved to be word for word identical with our standard Hebrew Bible in more than 95% of the text . . . the 5 percent variation consisted chiefly of slips of the pen and variations in spelling."

The internal evidence test concerns determining the extent of credibility of the original work. University of Chicago history professor Dr. Louis Gottschalk points out a guide used by many regarding historical investigation: "the ability of the writer or witness to tell the truth is helpful to the historian to determine credibility," and this ability "is closely related to the witness's nearness both geographically and chronologically to the events recorded."

The following are only two of the numerous reasons dealing with internal evidences that point to the Old Testament's reliability. The Pentateuch itself affirms Moses as the author (Exodus 17:14, Num. 33:1-2, Deut. 31:9) and eyewitness details point to a particular person being the author and not an editor who lived years later.

The external evidence test deals with outside sources agreeing with the information contained in the document in questions. Archaeology plays a major role when it comes to the Old Testament and external evidence. William F. Albright, reputed to be a great archaeologist, states: "There can be no doubt that archaeology has confirmed the substanial historicity of Old Testament tradition."

Though space does not allow for specifics, the five cities of the plains, the doors in sodom, the Mari tablets and an extra biblical 10th century B.C. reference to Abraham all contribute to the Old Testament's reliability. (If you want specifics concerning these issues check out books by F.F. Bruce, Josh McDowell, Larry Poland or Merrill C. Penny). The above authors should prove helpful to those interested in specifics and examining the Bible's credentials.

Look forward to New Testament reliability next week. Until then, may God bless.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

You know, I really don't care how I look, just how I'm seen.

When you're standing there with only two hours of sleep, tons of homework sitting on your desk, people calling you all sorts of terrible things, while you drain your third spaghetti dinner of the week through a strainer that came with the apartment (a strainer your housemates insist is a laundry basket), it really makes you re-evaluate your lifestyle. I think I'll give all this up to paint sea shells and eat kelp at the beach.

More fun than a tax attorney salad. Who says cannibals aren't fun?

Most people plan their finances around buying a new car or a new house. I plan mine around those peanut butter bars they sell at the Hatch.

I really want to be a U.S. ambassador . . . no, that's not right. I want to be an ambassador to the United States. Sounds impossible? Not so. I'll just become a Canadian citizen, right? Then I'll go to the ruling person and/or business conglomerate and say "Look, you need somebody that knows these goofy American types right? Well who'd be more qualified than someone who used to be American?" 'Course I'd probably lose the job to someone who's still an American.

Sure, but do you really need powdered hot chocolate mix?

Every now and then I feel like I'm a suppporting character in someone else's situation comedy show. You know, like Mork's friend Orsen. I'd hate to think that the only reason for my existence is to provide comic relief.

I watched "Star Trek: the New Generation" for the first time the other day. What is this show but a living room with a big screen T.V.? Sure they have all those strange beeping noises, but we've got our little brothers that make strange noises with their armpits and play Gameboy.

I watched some of the Olympics last week (doesn't my life sound exciting?). Those ice dancers are really amazing. I was particularly astounded when the guy would pick his partner up by the hips and hold her over his head while he skated around the rink. But I couldn't help but think that beginners in this sport can't be as coordinated as that and must have tried it only to face a pretty embarrassing situation. I know I'd never have the nerve to take the risk.

Marc Elliott

"I can't believe it's not Jell-O."

"There's always room for butter."

I'm only going to say this once so listen up. I don't care for sports much myself, but if there's anyone out there that's not reading "Scott's Shots" by David Scott, please damn them to an eternity of "generic brand" cheeze puffs and on-campus living with roommates named Dahmer. "Scott's Shots" appears in the sports section every Wednesday and it's a freaking riot. I think we should get all of Dave's professors to flunk him so he never graduates and just keeps taking shots for us.

Anyone catch that GEO rally yesterday? Sorta low turnout, but then spring hasn't quite sprung yet. The Student Union steps are really only a good location for rallies protesting the Munchy store. "More Nachos! More Nachos! We want melted cheeze too!"

How can they justify including Mount Holyoke in the Five College Area? They might as well include Oxford. Have you ever taken a bus out there? It takes at least three days. You can start out smoothly shaved and by the time you get there, you look like the current Elvis Costello. I mean after you get past Hampshire, they ought to just give up. It's all wilderness after that.

And what about the bus stops they have on this route? Ridiculous! "Say Bob, we haven't put in any bus stops for a while."

—"Gee Joe, you're right. Let's put one right here."

—"But there's nothing but trees for miles around."

—"So what? We'll just say it's to break the monotony."

What bothers me even more is that people get off at these stops without any camping gear. Mostly it's some big guy with a hockey mask muttering something about Silver Lake, but now and again a whole bunch of people get off there. Where are they going? It's the middle of the woods! Maybe there's some sort of underground Taco Bell out there.

Now this is just my opinion (and you all know how much that's worth), but if I bring my food up to the cashier and he or she has to ask me "What izzat?" I ought to get a 50-cent discount right then and there.

I wonder if Margot Parrot really enjoys squatting in urine- soaked bushes — pretty strange hobby if you ask me. Just remember everyone, there's someone out there watching you. Zip up as fast as you can, she might bring a camara one of these times.

I have two moods: awake and asleep. Not very responsive.

Like my uncle Mort always says, "Shaddup boy! You talk too much. Don't you know the jello won't harden without a little ice?"

hospital, suffered from a lung ailment which family and friends believed would eventually leave him an invalid.

In addition to his poor health, Jones recently experienced the death of his wife, Sarah (Cowls) Jones, which friends and family said affected him deeply. They had been married for 55 years.

Allen Torrey, former town manager of Amherst and long-time friend of Jones, said he is extremely saddened but also understands his friend's act.

"We all agree that what he did was an act of strength, not weakness," Torrey said.

Stephen Puffer, 78, a life-long friend of Jones for more than 70 years, said he has lost his best friend and will sorely miss him.

"He was like a brother to me," Puffer said. "He was the best man that ever walked the face of the earth."

Puffer also said that Jones, a Mason and a Rotary Club member, was a major figure in Amherst history and though he had many opportunities to leave the area, he chose to stay and help change his hometown for the better.

"He was a monument in Amherst," Puffer said. "He was a self-made man who did anything and everything for his community." Puffer, also a life-long resident of Amherst and owner of Puffton Village, said Jones was worried about losing both his health and independence in his old age.

"Walter was a very proud and strong man," Puffer said. "He didn't want to be a burden to anyone."

Puffer also added that he had seen Jones on Monday and was shocked by the death of his "last friend."

Torrey, in recalling the contributions Jones made over the years, said he was instrumental in bringing Amherst out of its rural past and establishing "a modern-day Amherst."

"Walter helped make Amherst what it is today," Torrey said.

Jones was Amherst's water commissioner in the 1950s and also served on the Board of Trustees of the National Bank of Amherst, now part of Shawmut Bank.

Jones' daughter, Gertrude Wegel, said he controlled every aspect of his life and not wanting to lose that control, controlled his own death.

Younger Amherst residents are more familiar with Jones' son, Dennison H. Jones, who owns one of the largest real estate businesses in Western Massachusetts, which rents largely to a UMass community.

Jones, who lived on the same land settled by his ancestors 250 years ago, made his legacy from the lumber company founded by his grandfather W.D. Cowls.

Jones's father and grandfather were Massachusetts state representatives.

Following an autopsy, Springfield's medical examiner concluded that Jones died from injuries sustained in the fall and not from drowning.

Services, including a special Masonic memorial, will be held Friday at the Douglass Funeral Home in Amherst.

In a press release issued by the Commission of Inquiry, Ramsey Clark said, "The Commission has conducted the largest independent worldwide investigation of war crimes in history."

The Commission is attempting to uncover the effect of 88,000 tons of bombs dropped on Iraq, according to Clark. "It has also publicized the continuing effects of the U.S.-backed sanctions and embargo which have continue to cause thousands of deaths even today," Clark said.

Clark said, "We recognize our role in history is to bring the transgressors to justice."

THIS WEEKEND

Y'all hail now. The Queen is back.

By LOU COVE
Collegian Staff

It's been a couple of years since her bus took a wrong turn and ended up in Amherst, New York instead of Amherst, Mass., nearly missing the Spring Fling gig at UMass entirely, but with any luck her highness will be in full force come the first night of March at Pearl St. Never has this writer seen a throng of thousands of co-eds take such an emotional plunge as when they announced, early on that fateful May morn, that Queen Latifah was in up-state New York. But, ever the gracious monarch, Latifah caught a plane to the valley and the masses went wild.

Latifah, who blew a hole the size of New Jersey in the predominatly male rap scene back in 1989 with her red-hot Tommy Boy release All Hail the Queen, is currently touring in support of her newest album Nature of a Sista'. With a hyped up attitude and the musical clout to back it up, she earned her title from the get-go with heady, dominating raps that sported such commandeering titles as "Dance for Me," "Latifah's Law," and "Wrath of my Madness." All tracks featured slick production, soulful backup, and a host of luminaries like De La Soul and Monie Love to add a final sparkle to the mix.

With her latest release Latifah expands on already solid ground by adding a hearty dash of roots-reggae, R&B, and some soulful singing to a number of tracks. Rapping, skanking, and singing some sweet street-soul, Latifah makes Sista' a disc to remember.

"I've always tried to combine singing and rhyming," says the Queen. "I think on this album I've become more creative with melodies and things like that. I am singing more, and this album is really rhythmic."

Nature of a Sista' has already spawned two hits with both the savvy muscle of "Fly Girl," Latifah's answer to the heavy comeons of the meat-market club scene, and the authoritative "Latifah's Had it Up 2 Here."

Highlights from the new album include "Sexy Fancy," a reggae rap that, with the help of Scringer Ranks on vocals, achieves an authentic rub-a-dub sound, and "Give Me Your Love," which proves once and for all that Latifah can do much more than simply carry a tune. Sista' touches all bases, mixing musical styles with flair while maintaing a distinctive Latifah touch.

Born in Newark, New Jersey as Dana Owens, Latifah started out as a "human beatbox" for a high school trio dubbed "Ladies Fresh." She eventually started palling around with DJ Mark and 45 King (who later became members of the Flavor Unit) and put together some demos that won the folks at Tommy Boy over. All Hail the Queen was nominated for a Grammy and the 1990 Rolling Stone reader's poll honored Queen Latifah with a new title - "Best Female Rapper." At twenty-one she is raps reigning Queen.
